The case as presented by the findings is this: On January 14, 1907, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement, whereby defendant agreed to sell and deliver to plaintiff, and plaintiff agreed to buy, one latest improved, four-cylinder, 1907 Elmore automobile, together with certain extras in connection therewith, for the sum of $2,815. Plaintiff was unfamiliar with automobiles, and the different models and makes thereof, while defendant had for several years been engaged in the business and was familiar with the same. At the time of entering into the agreement defendant exhibited to plaintiff a certain automobile, No. 1,547, then in stock at Los Angeles, and defendant represented to plaintiff that such automobile possessed all the latest and best improvements that were put into the 1907 four-cylinder automobile, and that said automobile so exhibited was the latest model of 1907 make of automobiles. That these representations of defendant were false, and known by him to be false, and plaintiff relied thereon, believed them to be true, and entered into the agreement of purchase. That pursuant to said agreement plaintiff delivered to defendant a certain secondhand automobile at an agreed valuation of $1,000, which was fairly worth that price, and on the 26th of January, 1907, defendant delivered to plaintiff an automobile, No. 1,547, which was in fact the model of 1906, and plaintiff paid to defendant, on the 2d of February following, $1,815, the balance of the agreed purchase price. That in truth and in fact said automobile so delivered to plaintiff was not of the latest model of 1907, and did not contain the latest improvements of 1907. That plaintiff did not discover until April the falsity of the representations made to him, when he immediately demanded that defendant deliver to him an automobile of the kind and character agreed to be purchased, which defendant refused to do. The court finds that the value of the automobile so delivered was but $2,120; that the market value of the machine contracted to be purchased, without extras, was $2,650; and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $530, the difference between such values.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is appellant's contention that the findings as to the false and fraudulent representations are not sustained by the evidence. There is evidence in the record that defendant assured plaintiff absolutely that the car shown to him was the 1907 car; that, in addition, he represented that there was no difference between the 1906 and 1907 models, except some change in the oiling system; that defendant assured him that the car exhibited was a 1907 model, and was the only car the company would put out in 1907; that the company had given him an advance shipment of 1907 machines, which was the reason why he had the 1907 models in store so early in the season. There is evidence tending to show that, as a matter of fact, the 1907 model of Elmore machine was a decided improvement upon the model of 1906, not only in the transmission, but in the axle, in the springs, the size of the wheel base, and the location of the clutch, as well as other material changes; that as a matter of fact an improved Elmore machine, model of 1907, was in process of construction at the factory on the date when the contract was made for the delivery of a car to plaintiff, and before delivery thereof to plaintiff such improved machines were constructed and upon exhibition, and at about that time were being sold by the Elmore people. It is further in evidence that defendant told a witness, who was familiar with the various types of machine, that he was selling the model 15 of 1906 to the trade in Los Angeles as a 1907 car, and the people here did not know the difference, and requested the witness not to say that he had seen the model of 1907 car; that he might get the later model after he had gotten rid of the model 15 of 1906. Accepting this testimony as true, which the trial court did, we are unable to see how the court could have found otherwise than as it did. There was ample evidence to justify the court in finding that the representations which induced the purchase were false, and known by defendant to be false when made.

It is next contended that, assuming the falsity of the representations, no material injury is shown to have resulted by reason thereof. Aside from the fact that one desiring to purchase an article is entitled to the precise thing which he contracts to buy, there is evidence tending to show that the model of a preceding year is not as valuable in the open market as the model containing the improvements of the succeeding year. While it may be true that the earnest desire of purchasers of automobiles to procure the very latest models, without particular reference to the character of the improvements, may be denominated as a fad, nevertheless one paying the money is entitled to gratify even a whim; and it very clearly appears from the record that, without reference to the differences between the models of various years, there is a marked difference in the market value between the models of the current and of a preceding year. It is true that the evidence as to the comparative values of the 1906 and 1907 cars is not of the most convincing character, yet there is sufficient as a basis for the finding made by the court, and it is not our duty to disturb such finding.

It is also contended that there is insufficient evidence to warrant the finding of the court that the car of plaintiff taken in exchange by defendant was of the value of $1,000. There is evidence in the record that the defendant, an expert motor-car man, examined the car which plaintiff proposed to trade him, saw its condition and manner of construction, and fixed the price at which he was willing to receive it in exchange. It further appears that no representation of any kind or character as to the value, construction, or condition of the machine was made by plaintiff at any time, but, on the contrary, that the machine was taken by defendant upon the faith of his own examination and at a value determined by himself. Considering the circumstances, the situation of the parties and their knowledge respectively in relation to the automobile business, we are not surprised that the court accepted as true plaintiff's testimony and fixed the value accordingly.

Numerous objections are urged as to the action of the court in the admission and exclusion of evidence during the progress of the trial. We find nothing in any of such exceptions indicating any prejudicial error, at least nothing which would warrant a reversal of the judgment. The record indicates to our mind that the judgment rendered in this case is a just one and should be affirmed.

Judgment and ordered affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

14 Cal. App. 117

PEOPLE v. DAVIS. (Cr. 136.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 18, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*) — INSTRUCTIONS ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The instruction that a witness willfully false in a material part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others is a correct statement of the law, not invading the constitutional sphere of the jury to pass on the weight of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1764; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

Though the court did not in its instruction give the usual statement that "the mere possession of stolen property, unexplained by the defendant, however soon after the taking, is not of itself and standing alone, sufficient to justify a conviction," yet the statement "and the accused is bound to explain the possession," in the instruction that, if the stolen property was found in defendant's possession shortly after being taken, failure of defendant to account for such possession, or to show it was honestly obtained, is a circumstance tending to show his guilt, and the accused is bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, even if open to the construction, when standing alone, that, in order to be relieved of the effect of the possession of the property, defendant had to take the witness stand and explain such possession consistently with his innocence, cannot be given such meaning where the jury were also instructed that it is the right of defendant to introduce no evidence; that he is never required to introduce evidence for the purpose of establishing innocence; that he is not required to act as a witness in his own behalf, but may stand mute and demand that the people make the case against him beyond a reasonable doubt; and that his neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any way prejudice him, and no presumption can be indulged against him, because of his failure to testify in the case on any point in it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992–1995; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*) — INSTRUCTIONS ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Modification of defendant's requested instruction that the circumstance of flight is not strong presumptive evidence of guilt, as no such presumption could arise from such fact as a matter of law, and that it is not sufficient alone to justify conviction by the addition that flight of a person immediately after the commission of an offense of which he is charged, is a circumstance to be weighed as tending in some degree to prove consciousness of guilt, and may be given such weight as the jury think it entitled to, in the light of all the facts and circumstances, does not make it erroneous as an instruction on the weight of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731–1748; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Harry Davis was convicted of grand larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

Carroll Cook, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, having been convicted of the crime of grand larceny, complains on this appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone that the trial court gave to the jury three erroneous instructions, which seriously prejudiced his rights.

There is a preliminary objection by the Attorney General to the consideration of the record on this appeal based upon the ground that the defendant, against whom the judgment appealed from was pronounced after section 1239 of the Penal Code, as amended by the Legislature of 1909 (St. 1909, c. 711), went into effect, failed to take an appeal under the new method of taking appeals in criminal cases as prescribed by said amended section. The specific contention is, of course, that this court has not acquired jurisdiction to review the record and the points for a reversal made by the appellant. There is undoubtedly much force in this objection; but, as there appears to be little merit in the points urged by appellant for a reversal, and as the judgment was pronounced only a few days after the amended section went into effect, we shall not consider the objection against a review of the record.

There are three of the given instructions which the appellant asserts involve erroneous and prejudicial statements of what the court conceived to be the law applicable to his case. These we shall consider in the order in which counsel presents them in his brief.

1. "The court instructs you that a witness willfully false in a material part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others." The foregoing instruction has perhaps been given in every criminal case, where pertinent, that has been tried in this state for the past 30 years, and it simply means, in plain language, that, if the jury find that a witness has deliberately lied under oath with respect to some material fact in the case, they are from that fact alone justified in distrusting him in anything else he might have stated under oath of importance. A jury of just and intelligent men would do this whether they were told by the court to do so or not. But the specific objection made here to said instruction is that it instructs on the weight of evidence, and therefore invades the constitutional sphere of the jury and in this case has greatly prejudiced the accused. But a conclusive answer to this proposition is, if there were no other, that the Supreme Court in many cases has said that the instruction involves a correct statement of a principle of the law of evidence which it is not improper to declare to the jury. People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339; People v. Tibbs, 143 Cal. 103, 76 Pac. 904; People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 Pac. 288. In the comparatively recent case of the People v. Grill, 151 Cal. 597, 91

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Pac. 517, the court says, speaking of this identical instruction: "That this is a principle of the law of evidence, and one of the rules by which the court or jury must be guided in the consideration of the weight of evidence, cannot be disputed, for it is made so by statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061. It has been repeatedly held by this court that the giving of such an instruction is not cause for a reversal, and we adhere to the precedents thus made"—citing a large number of cases.

2. The second instruction assailed by the appellant reads as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the property mentioned in the information, or any portion thereof, was feloniously taken from the person of the prosecuting witness, John Nimmons, as described in the information, and was found in the possession of the defendant shortly after being so feloniously taken, the failure, if failure there be, of the defendant to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, is a circumstance tending to show his guilt, and the accused is bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, if the evidence disclose any." We have italicised the particular language contained in the foregoing instruction to which appellant objects. It is argued that by said instruction the court in effect stated to the jury that in order to be relieved from the effect of the possession of the property charged to have been stolen, the defendant was bound to take the witness stand and explain such possession consistently with his innocence. The instruction ordinarily given on the question of the possession of stolen property which is the subject of the crime charged usually contains a statement that "the mere possession of stolen property, unexplained by the defendant, however soon after the taking is not of itself and standing alone sufficient to justify a conviction," even though it be shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime charged was committed. The court in the case at bar did not embrace this statement within its charge upon the subject of the possession by the defendant of the property alleged to have been stolen, and we think it was a mistake not to do so. But with this omission we do not think that the jury could have given the instruction the interpretation to which it is subjected by counsel for appellant. The very same instruction has been given by trial courts and approved by the higher courts in many cases, although, as stated, generally in connection with an explanation that the circumstance of possession was not of itself of sufficient probative significance and weight to justify a conviction.

Counsel does not deny, nor could he do so, in view of a long line of decisions in this state approving such course, that the court has a right to say to a jury that possession of stolen property shortly after the same has been feloniously taken, while not sufficient, standing alone, to warrant a conviction, is a circumstance which unexplained may be considered by the jury as tending to establish guilt. The jury, if possessed of common intelligence, would know this whether the court told them so or not, and so it is true, of course, with regard to the criticised language in the instruction under review. But if, standing alone, the instruction might bear the interpretation that it was the duty of the defendant to take the witness stand and explain that he had obtained possession of the property honestly, if he would avoid the damaging effect of the circumstance unexplained, it certainly could not be given any such meaning when considered, as presumptively it was, with the instructions given on the presumption of innocence, on the degree of proof required to justify a conviction and on the right of the defendant to refuse to become a witness in his own behalf without prejudice to himself, if he so chose. The court explicitly instructed the jury that "it is the right of the defendant to introduce no evidence," and that "he is never required to introduce evidence for the purpose of establishing innocence"; that "he is not required to act as a witness in his own behalf," but may "stand mute and demand that the people make the case against him beyond a reasonable doubt"; that "his neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any way prejudice him, and no presumption can be indulged against him, by reason of his failure to testify in the case, upon any point in the case." Considered in connection with these instructions, the natural and the rational understanding which a jury of intelligent men would receive of the criticised instruction is, as before stated, that where there is no explanation showing the possession of stolen property immediately or shortly after it has been feloniously taken to have been innocent or that such possession is devoid of criminality, the circumstance of such possession may be considered as indicative of guilt. We can perceive little, if any, material difference between the language, "the accused is bound to explain the possession," and the language most generally used and often approved in instructions upon the question of possession of stolen property, that "the circumstance of such possession, unexplained by the defendant, may, with other inculpatory circumstances, be considered by the jury in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant." By this language it is distinctly declared that, if such circumstance is not accounted for compatibly with innocence, it may be regarded as a fact tending to establish guilt, and manifestly this is only putting in another form of words the declaration contained in the challenged instruction that "the accused is bound to explain the possession."

3. The court at the request of the defendant instructed the jury that the circumstance of flight "is not strong presumptive evidence of guilt, as no such presumption could arise from such fact as a matter of law," and that "it is not sufficient alone to justify a jury in convicting a defendant." To this instruction the court added the following: "But the flight of a person immediately after the commission of an offense with which he is charged is a circumstance to be weighed by the jury as tending in some degree to prove consciousness of guilt, and is entitled to more or less weight according to the circumstances of the particular case. Evidence of flight is received, not as a part of the res gestæ, but as some evidence indicative of a guilty mind. The flight of a person immediately after the commission of the offense charged against him and an attempt to escape and avoid arrest are circumstances to be weighed by a jury as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt, together with all the other circumstances of the case, if any there be. You are to give it, if proved, such weight as you think it entitled to in the light of all the facts and circumstances of the case." The objection to the foregoing language is that it involves an instruction upon the weight of evidence, and is therefore erroneous. But substantially the same instruction has often been given in this state, and while it has been criticised, and justly so, we think (People v. Lem Deo, 132 Cal. 202, 64 Pac. 265) it has never been regarded sufficient cause for a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 102

PEOPLE v. SEIFERT. (Cr. 235.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 17, 1910.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 1130*)—Review—Variance Between Commitment and Information.

If the information charges a different offense from that for which accused was committed for trial, the variance should be pointed out in his brief, and called to the court's attention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2965–2970; Dec. Dig. § 1130.*]

2. Indictment and Information (§ 122*)—Information—Conformity to Commitment.

Under the provision of the Penal Code (section 956) that an accusation for a private injury sufficiently described to identify the act shall not be affected by erroneous allegation as to the person injured, that an information for delivering a fraudulent check charges that accused intended to defraud persons other than him named by the committing magistrate, if it charges intent to defraud that person, is not a material variance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 323; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

3. Bills and Notes (§ 176*)—Checks—Indorsements—Nature.

An indorsement on a check is no part of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 422; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

4. Bills and Notes (§ 527*)—Checks—Payment—Evidence.

That a check bears the payee's indorsement does not show payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1847–1855; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

C. A. Seifert was convicted of delivering a fraudulent check, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Philip C. Boardman and Joseph W. Boardman, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Maxwell McNutt, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was charged in the information with the crime of unlawfully and feloniously drawing and delivering to one Louie Joe a certain draft or check for the payment of money, to wit, $103, said check being drawn upon the bank of E. Cooke Smith, with intent to defraud said Louie Joe and others named in the information, without having funds or credit with the said bank with which to meet said draft, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided. The jury returned a verdict finding defendant guilty as charged, and he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, and also from an order denying his motion in arrest of judgment.

The first point urged in his brief is that the court erred in denying his motion to set aside the information. We are told in the brief that the court should have set aside the information for the reason that it does not describe the same identical offense as that set forth in the order of commitment made by the committing magistrate. It is said that the courts have universally held that the district attorney has no power to charge the defendant in the information with any other or different crime than the one for which he has been held to answer by the magistrate. But the brief is entirely silent as to the material question of the difference between the information and the order made by the magistrate as to the offense. If the information charges a different offense from that for which defendant was held to answer, the appellant's counsel in their brief should have pointed out wherein they differ, and the court's attention should have been called to the variance. We are, however, referred in the brief to the folios of the transcript wherein may be found the order made by the committing magistrate and the information. By looking at the transcript at the places pointed out, and comparing the information with the order made by the magistrate, we find that both the order and the information describe the same check or draft, giving a copy of it, the bank on which it was drawn, the date, the person to whom it was delivered, with a statement that defendant had no funds in the bank on which it was drawn. The only difference that we perceive is that the committing magistrate held the defendant for having delivered the draft with the intent to defraud one Louie Joe, while the information charges that the draft was delivered with the intent to defraud Louie Joe, Louie Fat, Louie Shung, Louie Hung, and Louie See. Nevertheless the information charges that the draft was made and delivered with intent to defraud Louie Joe. It matters not that the allegation in the information charges that the defendant intended to defraud other persons than the person named by the committing magistrate so long as it charges the intent to defraud the person named by the committing magistrate.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The Penal Code provides: "When an offense involves the commission of or attempt to commit a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured or intended to be injured is not material." Pen. Code, § 956. It was held under this section in People v. Smith, 112 Cal. 333, 44 Pac. 663, that, where the committing magistrate held the defendant for stealing a steer "belonging to and owned by the estate of W. C. Elledge, deceased," the information was good, although it recited that the steer was "owned by Joseph Elledge and Mrs. M. J. Elledge, as executor and executrix of the estate of W. C. Elledge, deceased." So, where a defendant was charged by information for arson with burning a barn belonging to one Charlie Quong, it was held that the ownership of the barn was immaterial so long as the evidence identified the barn as being the barn described in the information. People v. Davis, 135 Cal. 162, 67 Pac. 59. In People v. Price, 143 Cal. 351, 77 Pac. 73, the complaint before the magistrate in a prosecution for burglary described the building entered as, "that certain building situate at No. 1247 Fresno street in the city of Fresno," and the information described it as "that certain house, room, store, dwelling, and apartment of Charles C., situate at the corner of Fresno and C streets, and designated by the number of 1247 Fresno street in the city of Fresno." It was held that there was no variance as the same house was referred to by the committing magistrate and by the district attorney.

In the case at bar, the defendant was told by the information of the acts with which he was charged and which it was claimed constituted a crime, and they are the same acts which were set forth in the complaint before the committing magistrate. This gave the defendant fair notice of what he was to meet, and was all that the statute requires. It is not for the defendant to claim that he shall perchance go free because the committing magistrate did not know that besides Louie Joe he had other persons in mind at the time he delivered the draft. The material question was defendant's intention to defraud; and we are not required to pause and speculate as to the particular person he had in mind and whom he intended to wrong. His intention was to get money on the draft, and by issuing it and negotiating it the injury or wrong was perpetrated upon every person, man, woman or child who had any interest, present or contingent, in the money he wrongfully obtained by so negotiating the draft.

The court properly denied the motion for a new trial and the motion in arrest of judgment. The evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict, and, as has been already shown, there was no variance between the proof and the information.

The indorsement on the draft is no part of it. Such indorsement was evidently made by the payee before it was presented to the bank for payment. We cannot conclude that the draft was paid simply because it contains the indorsement of the payee, which evidently was made on the back of the draft.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 106

PEOPLE v. SCHULTZ. (Cr. 242.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 17, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1105*)—REVIEW—PREREQUISITES.

Before proceedings in a criminal trial can be reviewed on appeal, they must be authenticated as required by law or the rules of the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2887–2889; Dec. Dig. § 1105.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS—SETTLEMENT—METHOD.

Under the express terms of Supreme Court rule 36, a bill of exceptions pending for settlement when Pen. Code, §§ 1170–1175, 1177, were repealed, should have been settled according to those sections, and not according to the repealing act of April 22, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 709), which did not take effect until 60 days afterward.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1105*) — TRANSCRIPT — CERTIFICATION.

Pen. Code, § 1247, requiring the transcript of the reporter's notes to be certified by him under oath to be correct, requires him to make oath to the correctness of his transcript.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1105.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 1121*)—Record on Appeal—Sufficiency.

Sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction cannot be reviewed where the evidence is not contained in a bill of exceptions settled as prescribed by Supreme Court rule 36, nor set forth in a transcript certified or prepared according to Pen. Code, §§ 1247, 1247a, where proceedings for appeal were pending April 22, 1909, when Pen. Code, §§ 1170–1175, 1177, were repealed (St. 1909, c. 709).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2938, 2939; Dec. Dig. § 1121.*]

5. Criminal Law (§ 1088*) — Review — Instructions.

Instructions neither indorsed nor certified, as required by section 1176, Pen. Code, nor contained in any settled bill of exceptions, are no part of the record on appeal, and cannot be considered by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2797; Dec. Dig. § 1088.*]

6. Criminal Law (§ 1105*)—Record—Statutory Provisions.

Pen. Code, § 1246, as amended in 1909 (St. 1909, c. 711), requiring the trial clerk to send a copy of instructions given, refused, and modified, must be read in connection with section 1176, requiring the judge to indorse his action on written instructions, and to certify to the correctness of the transcript of the oral charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1105.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Louis Schultz was convicted of robbery and previous convictions, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Spagnoli & Spagnoli, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HALL, J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of robbery, and with having, prior to the commission of said crime, suffered two convictions of the crime of burglary. On his arraignment he admitted the charge of prior convictions to be true, but pleaded not guilty to the charge of robbery. The jury, however, found him guilty of robbery as charged, and he has appealed to this court both from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only points made for a reversal are insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, and the alleged error of the court in giving a certain instruction as to what constitutes the crime of robbery The evidence for the people contained in the transcript shows without contradiction (the defendant introduced no evidence) that on the 21st day of December, 1908, defendant entered the jewelry store of the prosecutor, Sig Hurtig, and, under the pretense of wishing to explain to Hurtig how defendant wanted a diamond transferred to a pendant attached to a necklace, induced Hurtig to hand to defendant a diamond ring from the stock of the jeweler. That while Hurtig and defendant were standing on opposite sides of the counter or show case, and while defendant was explaining how he wished the diamond transferred to the pendant, and while he, defendant, held the diamond ring in his left hand, defendant suddenly raised an iron bar with his right hand, and struck Hurtig over the head with the bar. Hurtig at the same moment snatched the ring from the hand of defendant, and thus recovered it. The charge against defendant was for the taking of said ring.

The contention of appellant is that the facts above set forth do not prove the commission of the crime of robbery. The Attorney General insists that upon the record before us we are precluded from considering this point. After a careful examination of the record before us, we are of the opinion that the evidence contained in the transcript is not authenticated in such a manner as to constitute a legal record, and that for such reason we cannot consider it. It has been repeatedly decided in this state that, before the proceedings of the trial court can be reviewed by the appellate court, such proceedings must be authenticated in the manner prescribed by law or the rules of the appellate court. People v. Martin, 32 Cal. 91; People v. Ferguson, 34 Cal. 309; People v. Armstrong, 44 Cal. 326; People v. Long, 121 Cal. 495, 53 Pac. 1097; People v. Terrill, 131 Cal. 112, 63 Pac. 141. The case at bar was tried in February, 1909, and judgment rendered on the 23d day of said month. The notice of appeal was filed the next day. As the law then stood, the defendant could have proceeded to procure the settlement of a bill of exceptions by the judge of the trial court in accordance with sections 1170, 1171, 1172, 1173, 1174, 1175, 1177, Pen. Code. These sections were, however repealed by an act which went into effect April 22, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1083), but the acts passed the same day, providing a new method of appeal and making up the record on appeal, did not go into effect until 60 days later. To meet this situation the Supreme Court early in May, 1909, adopted a rule (xxxvi) providing that, "in any criminal case in which proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions were pending at the time of the repeal of sections 1170, 1171, 1172, 1173, 1174, 1175, and 1177 of the Penal Code, such bill may be prepared, settled and filed in the manner prescribed, and within the times allowed, in those sections." Under this rule appellant could and should have procured the settlement of his bill of exceptions in accordance with the method prescribed in said repealed sections; for, unless he had already lost the right to have a bill of exceptions settled, such proceedings were pending when said sections were repealed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Appellant, however, did not follow the method prescribed by the rule of court, but on October 5, 1909, filed a stipulation, signed by his attorneys and the district attorney, and ratified by the judge of the trial court, to the effect that the "whole of the record" in this action "may be sent to the District Court of Appeal, said record to contain copies of the whole of the stenographic notes and testimony taken down at said trial." Following this stipulation there is printed in the transcript testimony and other matters. This, however, is not settled or approved as a bill of exceptions by the judge of the trial court in the manner required by the law as it existed at the time of taking the appeal and as authorized by the rule of court above quoted. The only certificate of the judge of the trial court to this transcript of the proceedings is one "that no objections to the within transcript of proceedings have been made either by the defendant or his attorney, or the district attorney, within the time prescribed by law, or at all." So far as the form of the certificate of the judge is concerned, it seems to conform to the law (section 1247a, Pen. Code, passed April 22, 1909). But this law did not govern, and could have no application to, the proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions upon an appeal taken four months before it went into effect. Section 1247, Pen. Code, prescribes the time, after taking the appeal, within which the defendant may make his application for the transcription of the reporter's notes of the proceedings. More than this period of time had long since expired before the passing or taking effect of section 1247, Pen. Code, and again and again expired after the taking effect of said section and before defendant took any steps toward procuring a transcript of the reporter's notes. Furthermore section 1247, Pen. Code, requires that the transcript of the reporter's notes "shall be duly certified by him under oath to be correct." We understand this to mean that he must make oath to the correctness of his transcript. The reporter's certificate in this case is not under oath; that is to say, he has not made oath to the correctness of his transcript. Even if appellant was entitled to adopt the method prescribed by sections 1247, and 1247a, Pen. Code, for bringing to this court the evidence in the case, which we do not believe, he has not complied with the provisions of said sections.

The evidence is neither contained in a bill of exceptions settled by the judge as prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court, nor is it set forth in a transcript certified or prepared in accordance with sections 1247 and 1247a of the Penal Code. There is therefore no legal record before this court containing the evidence, and we therefore cannot consider the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

For similar reasons, the question attempted to be presented in regard to the instruction cannot be considered. The instruction is not contained in any bill of exceptions settled or approved by the trial judge, and is not indorsed or certified by the judge as required by section 1176 of the Penal Code. It is simply contained in the transcript of the reporter's notes, but without any indorsement or certificate as to its correctness by the judge of the trial court. Instructions neither indorsed nor certified as required by section 1176, Pen. Code, nor contained in any settled bill of exceptions, constitute no part of the record on appeal, and cannot be considered by the appellate court. People v. January, 77 Cal. 179, 19 Pac. 258; People v. Cole, 127 Cal. 546, 59 Pac. 984; Walker v. Superior Court (concurring opinion of Justices Angellotti and Shaw), 139 Cal. 110, 72 Pac. 829; People v. Ludwig, 118 Cal. 328, 50 Pac. 426; People v. Clark, 106 Cal. 32, 36, 39 Pac. 53; People v. Ah Lee Doon, 97 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 933; People v. Clark, 84 Cal. 574, 24 Pac. 313. This was certainly the law when this appeal was taken, as is abundantly established by the cases just cited, and, even if it could be held that the record on this appeal should be governed by the law as amended by the acts of April 22, 1909, we find nothing in such acts changing or modifying the provisions of sections 1176, which requires the judges to indorse upon the written charges requested his action thereon, and to certify to the correctness of the reporter's transcript of the oral charge. For while section 1246, Pen. Code, as amended in 1909 (St. 1909, c. 711), directs the clerk to send to the appellate court, among other papers, "a copy of the written charges given by the court to the jury, or refused, or modified and given, also a transcript of the oral charge," such section must be read in connection with the provisions of section 1176, Pen. Code, which requires the judge to indorse his action on the written charges, and to certify to the correctness of the transcript of the oral charge, "and thereupon the same, with the indorsements, become a part of the record, and any error in the action of the court thereon may be reviewed on appeal in like manner as if presented in a bill of exceptions." The indorsements of the judge must appear upon the copy of the charges, for in no other way can it be known what instructions were given or refused.

As neither the instruction complained of nor the evidence is contained in any legal record before us, we are precluded from considering the points relied on by the appellant, and the judgment and order must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

14 Cal. App. 148

PEOPLE v. McCARTHY. (Cr. 172.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 20, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—EVIDENCE—CONFINEMENT BEFORE OFFENSE.

While ordinarily evidence of confinement in jail before committing an offense is inadmissible, the people could show that one accused of robbery, on whose person money was afterwards found, was confined just before committing the offense, to show his previous penniless condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—EVIDENCE RELATING TO OTHER OFFENSES—ADMISSIBILITY.

Evidence relating to a previous offense is admissible to prove any material fact, though tending to prejudice accused in the jurors' minds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*) — VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY—EFFECT.

Accused cannot complain of voluntary testimony of a state's witness not responsive to a question, where it was stricken on the prosecuting attorney's motion, and the jury instructed to disregard it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129–3135; Dec. Dig. § 1170½.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—CONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Attempt by the prosecution to show that a previous confinement in jail was under a commitment was harmless error, where evidence of the confinement was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137–3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 37*)—REPUTATION FOR TRUTH — QUALIFICATIONS OF IMPEACHING WITNESSES.

Witnesses who finally stated that they were acquainted with accused's general reputation in the community for truth, honesty and integrity were qualified to testify thereto, though they were not shown to have had a very intimate acquaintance with him, and they did not understand without considerable explanation what was meant by "character," "reputation," or "acquaintance."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 37*) — REPUTATION FOR TRUTH — QUALIFICATIONS OF IMPEACHING WITNESSES.

To qualify one to testify to another's reputation in the community for truth and honesty, it is sufficient that he be acquainted with the prevailing impression in the community as disclosed by actions, conduct, or conversations relating to the character in issue, but it is not necessary that the witness testifying should know that a majority of the community have that impression.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

J. McCarthy was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Carpenter & Gibbons, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Defendant and appellant was convicted of the crime of robbery, and from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial he appeals.

The record discloses that on the 21st of January, 1910, the prosecuting witness was brutally assaulted and robbed, and that beyond peradventure defendant was guilty of the crime. It is sought to have the judgment reversed on account of technical matters connected with the trial; the most prominent being a claim that the court erred in admitting testimony tending to show that defendant had been incarcerated in the jail of San Luis Obispo county before commission of the robbery. Were this character of evidence disconnected with that tending to show guilt of the offense charged, the error would be apparent (People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 470, 71 Pac. 564); but it is obvious that the object and purpose of the district attorney in proffering and making this proof was to show that defendant on the morning of the robbery, and within a few hours before the same was committed, was penniless. This was material and important, in view of the fact that upon his arrest in the evening of the same day defendant was found in possession of wearing apparel recently purchased, and a sum of money secreted in one of his socks. The proof of his incarceration, therefore, was relative to the issue being tried. As said by our Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Beatty, in People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 141, 32 Pac. 865: "Whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion." We can see no reason why this rule as applicable to proof of independent substantive crime should not be equally so when the evidence merely tends to show confinement in the jail, which may or may not have been on account of previous criminal conduct, and when such confinement and the circumstances connected therewith, including the search of defendant's person at the time of incarceration and condition at the time of discharge, all tend to show facts proper and competent as aiding the jury in arriving at a proper verdict. We see no misconduct on the part of the district attorney in offering this proof, nor on the part of the court in its admission, considering its bearing upon the issue being tried.

Objection is made to the testimony of one Walsh with reference to confinement in jail at times other than the one immediately preceding defendant's discharge on the day of the robbery. This evidence of Walsh, however, was voluntary in its character, was not responsive to the question asked, and the district attorney asked to have it stricken out and the court ordered it stricken out and directed the jury to pay no attention to it, and the question propounded by the district attorney to the witness which elicited the objectionable testimony cannot be said to have been for an apparently improper object or purpose, and cannot be classed with the conduct of the district attorney in the case of People v. Grider, 110 Pac. 586, nor with that criticised in People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 Pac. 1078.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We see no misconduct so prejudicial as to entitle defendant to reversal by reason of the attempt of the district attorney to show that when defendant was incarcerated in jail on the 12th of January, 1910, the same was by virtue of a commitment regularly issued. The court declined to admit the evidence, and properly so. If, however, as we are of opinion, his actual confinement under the circumstances was proper to be shown, no prejudice could have resulted by the tender of proof showing his incarceration under a commitment. Such proof was not necessary as establishing the main fact sought to be established, namely, that he was without money, yet certainly the mere tender of such proof could not prejudice the defendant.

It is finally claimed that the court erred in admitting the testimony of witnesses Guzzi, Kieran, and Barcellas, who were called by the prosecution in rebuttal to impeach and discredit the testimony of defendant by showing that his reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was bad; it being claimed by appellant that sufficient foundation was not laid to warrant the admission of the evidence given by these witnesses. It is true that they were not shown to have had a very extended and intimate acquaintance with defendant, and that the witnesses did not understand without considerable explanation what was meant by the term "character" or "reputation," or even the word "acquaintance," but each of them finally stated that he was acquainted with defendant's general reputation in the community for truth, honesty, and integrity. It is sufficient that witnesses "be acquainted with the prevailing impression in the community, as disclosed by actions, conduct or conversations relating to the character in issue, although it is not necessary that the witness testifying should know that the majority of the community have that impression." People v. Cord (Sup.) 108 Pac. 511. The trial court in the exercise of its discretion determined that the witnesses had sufficient knowledge of the facts to entitle them to answer, and we find from their answers that the court did not abuse its discretion in admitting such testimony, the weight, and credibility whereof was a matter for the jury.

We see no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

14 Cal. App. 39

BRANDT v. KROGH et al. (Civ. 740.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 8, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 7, 1910.)

1. Witnesses (§ 317*)—Credibility.

The rule, false in one thing, false in everything, only means that, where a witness has sworn falsely in a material part of his testimony, his entire testimony may for that reason be rejected, but the jury or the judge trying the facts may believe other parts of the testimony of such witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1080–1083; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 994*)—Findings—Conclusiveness.

The rule that, where a witness has sworn falsely in a material part of his testimony, his entire testimony may be disregarded, cannot be invoked on appeal, for the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses is not open for review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3901–3906; Dec. Dig. § 994.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 994*)—Findings—Conclusiveness.

A finding based largely on the testimony of a party is conclusive on appeal, notwithstanding contradictory statements therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3901–3906; Dec. Dig. § 994.*]

4. Fraud (§ 11*)—Actionable Fraud.

Fraudulent representations cannot be predicated on a mere expression of opinion, however erroneous it may be or positively stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. Fraud (§ 11*)—Actionable Fraud.

A party inducing another to contract in reliance on estimates or opinions professedly based on alleged facts known to the party stating them to be nonexistent is liable therefor as against the objection that he was merely declaring his opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

6. Fraud (§ 58*)—Sale of Stock.

Evidence held to show that misrepresentations inducing a purchaser to purchase corporate stock were based on alleged facts known to the party making the representations to be nonexistent, so that he was liable therefor as against the objection that he merely declared his opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

7. Contracts (§ 94*)—Detection of Fraud—Diligence.

One who seeks on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud restoration of the consideration which supported an executed contract cannot prevail where he could, by ordinary prudence, have detected the fraud, or have ascertained the facts which would have disclosed the fraud.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 420–425; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

8. Fraud (§ 23*)—Sale of Stock—Fraudulent Representations—Reliance.

A buyer of stock of a corporation owning oil lands alleged fraudulent representations inducing the purchase. The lands and the business of the corporation were situated and managed in other counties than the one in which the buyer resided, and where the representations and the contract were made. The buyer was not an expert in oil lands or in the oil development business. The person making the representations was an oil land promoter, and had been engaged in the oil land business for a long time, and he made the buyer believe that he possessed perfect knowledge of the business in general and of the business and prospects of the corporation in particular. Held, that the buyer could rely on the representations, and could sue for the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 20, 23; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

9. Specific Performance (§ 53*)—Contracts—Fraud.

Equity will under no circumstances enforce or permit to be enforced the terms of a contract founded in fraud, though there existed and were accessible to the party defrauded the means and opportunity to detect the fraud by the exercise of ordinary prudence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 160–171½; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

10. Contracts (§ 94*)—Fraud.

A defendant in an action at law, who, by the interposition of an equitable defense and by a cross-complaint, brings plaintiff within the cognizance of the equity side of the court, and who, by appropriate allegations, asks relief from the consequences of an alleged fraudulent executory contract, is entitled to relief in equity, though there existed and were accessible to him the means of detecting the fraud by ordinary prudence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 420–430; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

11. Evidence (§ 266*) — Declarations — Effect.

Declarations of a party can bind no one but himself unless they are made in his capacity as an agent of another and are within the scope of his authority as agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1051; Dec. Dig. § 266.*]

12. Principal and Agent (§ 92*)—Contracts of Agent—Liability.

A party dealing with an agent, who is acting within the scope of his employment, is considered as dealing with the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 245, 246, 250–253; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

13. Principal and Agent (§ 115*) — Contracts of Agent—Liability.

Where an agent at the time of the making of a contract with another makes any representation or admission, whether true or false, touching the matter of the contract, it is treated as the representation, or admission of the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 339–343; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

14. Principal and Agent (§ 23*)—Existence of Relation—Evidence.

Evidence held to show that a person making fraudulent representations inducing a purchase of corporate stock was the agent of the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

15. Trial (§ 90*)—Evidence—Objections.

Where the direct testimony of a witness appeared to be material, relevant, and competent, and the immateriality, irrelevancy, and incompetency were disclosed on cross-examination, the cross-examiner must, to avail himself of the objections to the evidence, move to strike it out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 235, 237, 241; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

16. Appeal and Error (§ 1051*)—Erroneous Admission of Evidence—Harmless Error.

Any error in permitting proof of a fact on cross-examination is harmless where the fact was subsequently shown by proper evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161–4170; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

17. Pleading (§ 129*) — Cross-Complaint — Admissions.

A fact alleged in a cross-complaint is admitted by a failure to deny it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 270–275; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

18. Appeal and Error (§ 1056*)—Harmless Error — Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence.

Where, in an action for inducing the purchase of stock of an oil corporation by fraudulent representations that the value of the stock would reach a specified sum per share within a specified time, the party charged with the fraud made no attempt to show that there were oil indications on the lands to any significant extent, any error in excluding evidence as to how close to the property of the oil company he had discovered oil indications was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4187–4193; Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

19. New Trial (§ 105*)—Newly Discovered Evidence—Impeaching Evidence.

A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence, the purpose of which is only to impeach a witness of the adverse party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 221–223, 229; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

20. New Trial (§ 102*)—Newly Discovered Evidence—Diligence.

An affidavit for new trial for newly discovered evidence, consisting of letters, which shows that one of the moving party's own witnesses had access to the letters, and had turned one of them over to one of the attorneys, and that a discovery of the other letters was made after a thorough search after trial, was insufficient to justify the granting of a new trial for want of a showing of diligence to procure the evidence before the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 210–214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

21. New Trial (§ 82*)—"Surprise."

The word "surprise" in the statute authorizing a new trial on the ground of surprise denotes some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his injury, without any fault or negligence of his own, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 167; Dec. Dig. § 82.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6818, 6819.]

22. New Trial (§ 98*)—Surprise.

A party moving for a new trial on the ground of surprise must not only show surprise, but injury resulting to him therefrom, and this can be done only by showing that he could establish an entirely different case favorable to himself in the event of a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 199, 200; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by C. H. W. Brandt against J. C. Krogh and another. From a judgment for defendant Krogh on his counterclaim, and for the cancellation of the instrument sued on, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. C. Minor and C. W. Miller, for appellant. Cartwright & Cashin, for respondent.

HART, J. Brandt brought this action to recover on a promissory note for the sum of $3,750 which was executed in his favor by Krogh and Abrams on the 22d day of October, 1904, at the city of Stockton. Said note called for interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and it is alleged that on the 24th day of January, 1906, the sum of $596.95 was paid on account of said note, leaving a balance due thereon of $3,524.90, for which, with interest from said 24th day of January, 1906, judgment is asked. The defendant Abrams failed to answer the complaint, and therefore as to him judgment by default was entered.

The defendant Krogh in due time filed an answer in which he made specific denial of the essential averments of the complaint, and, in addition, set up a counterclaim for the sum of $5,000, and, besides, filed a cross-complaint, in which he charged that the note declared upon, as well as another note for a like amount executed by him and Abrams at the same time and in favor of plaintiff, were procured by and through misrepresentation and fraud practiced upon him by the defendant Abrams. The court found in favor of Krogh on the counterclaim, and further found that the charge of fraud and misrepresentation in the procurement of the notes as set forth in the cross-complaint was proved by the evidence. Krogh was accordingly given judgment for the sum of $5,000 and for the cancellation of the note upon which this action is founded; he having alleged his willingness and readiness and an offer to transfer, deliver, and restore to plaintiff the shares of stock, for part payment of which said note was given, and having indorsed and tendered said stock to plaintiff and filed the same in court as a "continuing tender." This appeal is by the plaintiff from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Among the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was pressed are: (1) "Surprise during the trial of said action which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." (2) "Newly discovered evidence material to the plaintiff which he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced at the trial."

The findings are impeached for alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support them, and it is further charged that the court made a number of erroneous rulings at the trial which were prejudicial to plaintiff.

1. The findings are sufficiently sustained by the evidence. The facts as educed from the evidence and found by the court are substantially these: In the month of July, 1904, the defendant L. J. Abrams was a stockholder and manager of a concern known as the "Ashurst Oil Land & Development Company," a corporation which was then engaged in the business of working and developing oil lands, situated in the county of San Benito. In said month of July Abrams became acquainted with Krogh at the latter's residence in the city of Fresno. On that occasion, Abrams, evidently with the purpose of selling Krogh certain shares of stock in said corporation, proceeded to give Krogh a glowing account of the corporation's oil land holdings and of the flattering prospects foreshadowed by the alleged existing conditions on said properties. On the occasion now alluded to Krogh bought 250 shares of the corporation's stock. The character of the representations made by Abrams to Krogh with reference to the corporation's properties may best be told in the language of Krogh himself, who testified, in part, as follows: "At that time he got to talking about the Ashurst Company, how good it was, the number of wells, the number of acres they had, and stated they owned 900 acres of land, and had 1,500 acres of land on a 20-year lease, altogether 2,400 acres the company owned. He said the company had on hand anywhere from $70,000 to $75,000 in the treasury; that they had three wells, one was down 600 or 700 feet, one 800 or 900 feet, one of the wells flowed water, and it was of great value over there because water was scarce; that one of the wells was down 1,800 or 1,900 feet and it flowed oil, but that they intended to go down 2,400 feet and get an extra good well, and that they kept it capped for the purpose of buying up the surrounding land before any one found that oil was there. They kept the well capped for the purpose of keeping people from discovering they had oil. I was at home when these representations were made. Mrs. Krogh was also present. Mr. Webb was there, too. I don't think such a great deal was said when he was there. He didn't stay very long. I saw Mr. Abrams frequently after that; several times a week, sometimes several times a day. I met him afterwards when he came to sell me the 10,000 shares of stock belonging to Mr. Brandt. These statements he made to me were in July, 1904."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The conversation between Abrams and Krogh in the month of July was in the presence and hearing of Mrs. Krogh. In the month of September, 1904, Abrams represented to Krogh that Brandt was the administrator of the estate of his father-in-law, one Bachman, and that said estate had some 10,000 shares of stock in the corporation which was for sale. "At that time," continued Krogh, "he (Abrams) made representations to me about the condition of the company, and the acreage they owned, and the value of the stock. He stated that they couldn't buy any of the company's stock for $1.50 a share; that they had none for sale; he had sold all they wanted to, and had plenty of money to develop it, and that this was the only stock that could be had. At that time he stated, as he did before, the number of wells that was on it. One of the wells was capped for the purpose of buying up all the surrounding country, and that well flowed oil, but they wanted a better well so was going down deeper. I should say that I talked with him several hours at that time. He was talking all of that time about the oil business, telling me how good it was, etc. He told me at that time that the company owned 900 acres and 1,500 acres on a 20-year lease. He said that oil was high grade 32 gravity oil. He said he had a good flowing well, but that they wanted to make a better well. He spoke of the other wells, said one was a water well, and was of great value because water was a scarce article there. The other well he didn't say much about because it was shallow. They did not get oil there and did not get water. I surely did believe the statement of Mr. Abrams. Couldn't do anything else. I did subsequently buy these 10,000 shares of stock. I bought it because Mr. Abrams claimed it was a good thing, going to make me a lot of money, and did not have to be paid for until it was developed and had two or three years to pay for it, and he claimed inside of six months be worth $60 a share, because they were going to push the thing right through. He said: 'You can sell enough of the stock to pay Mr. Brandt or keep the whole thing if you feel like you can afford it.'" Krogh purchased the 10,000 shares at 75 cents per share, and gave therefor two promissory notes for $3,750 each, said notes having been indorsed, as security for their payment, by Abrams, who represented to Krogh that Brandt was willing to accept the notes upon condition that Abrams would so indorse them. Mrs. Krogh's testimony was corroborative of the testimony of her husband as to the representations made by Abrams at the first conversation held at Krogh's residence.

Brandt, testifying in his own behalf, stated on cross-examination that the shares of stock sold by Abrams to Krogh belonged to the directors of the corporation, and not to the estate of Bachman, deceased. He further stated that it was agreed among the directors that said 10,000 shares should be sold by Abrams for not less than 50 cents per share, which was the amount which he had paid for said stock, and that the proceeds should be devoted to the extinguishment of a note which he and the other directors had given the San Joaquin Valley Bank for the sum of $5,000, upon which there were credits reducing the amount to $4,500, said amount having thus been procured by the directors for the purpose of liquidating "the indebtedness of the Ashurst Oil Company." In this connection it may be explained that Brandt himself paid said note at the bank, on an agreement with the other directors that 10,000 shares of stock should be turned over to him, and that by the sale of the same he could thus be reimbursed for the sum paid by him to extinguish their obligation at the bank. This agreement was carried out and Brandt thereby secured the stock sold by Abrams to Krogh.

O. B. Parkinson, who was secretary of the corporation from its organization to the first of December, 1905, testified that during his said connection with it the corporation had no fee-simple title to any land; that all the lands it had ever had possession of and proposed to develop were leased; that he did not think that the corporation at any time had possession of or under lease as much as 1,500 acres of land. He declared that there was no oil found in any of the wells which were sunk by the corporation on its leased lands. He also testified that the corporation "never had as much as $70,000 available at any one time in the San Joaquin Valley Bank." In connection with this witness' testimony, the book containing the corporation's account with the San Joaquin Valley Bank was introduced in evidence, and from this book it appeared that the largest sum on deposit in said bank in the name of the corporation from June 23, 1904, to December 28, 1904, was $1,280.60.

J. P. Plaugher testified that he worked for the Ashurst Company as a driller on its San Benito lands from October, 1900, to June, 1901; that he assisted in sinking a number of wells on said lands during his employment with the corporation, but at no time did he strike oil or observe oil indications. After ceasing work for the Ashurst, he was employed by another company on a section of land adjoining the lands of the Ashurst Company, and for several years worked in that vicinity and frequently visited the Ashurst's properties to see whether oil had been found thereon; that during all those years oil was not struck on said properties, nor were there any perceptible indications of oil on said lands. This witness admitted writing a letter to Abrams in which he asserted that oil had been found on the property of his company, but he declared that he did not state the truth in said letter, his explanation being that Abrams had requested him to misrepresent conditions, if necessary, so that he (Abrams) could effect a sale of the stock; the latter saying, "Report a little oil whether you have it or not—it will help me out selling stock." Therefore, "when," said the witness, "we struck sulphur gas, it was reported as oil gas."

There was other testimony given which disclosed that the representations made to Krogh by Abrams concerning the business and property of the Ashurst Company before Krogh purchased stock therein were grossly at variance with the true condition of the corporation's affairs.

As stated, the court found that the representations made by Abrams were false and untrue and so known to be by Abrams when he made them, and that Krogh, relying upon such representations, bought the stock.

It is only necessary to compare the findings with the evidence, of which we have presented only a brief synopsis, to make it readily manifest that the attack upon said findings is wholly devoid of merit. But counsel for appellant point out a number of apparent inconsistencies in the testimony of Krogh, and upon these build up the argument that his testimony is inherently improbable and unbelievable and that it should have been disbelieved and wholly discarded by the trial court. But it is obviously a mistake to suppose that, because a witness may make inconsistent statements in the course of testimony given by him, such testimony is, in its entirety, to be disbelieved. The rule, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, does not mean that a witness' entire testimony must necessarily be disregarded or disbelieved because there may be found falsehood in certain parts of it. The rule merely means that, where the witness is found to have sworn falsely in a certain material part of his testimony, his entire testimony may for that reason be rejected. But no one will attempt to challenge the right of a jury or a judge trying the facts to believe and credit certain parts of the testimony of a witness who has been shown to have sworn falsely as to certain other material parts thereof. However, this rule is one which cannot well be invoked in a court of appeal on a review of the facts. It, like any other rule which may be resorted to by triers of facts for the purpose of weighing testimony and measuring the credibility of witnesses, is intended as a guide to those who must hear and see the witnesses and thus receive the evidence at first hand. It is only stating a commonplace to say that on a trial of issues of fact the evidence addressed to the disputed point must satisfy the jury or the judge trying such issues. When a verdict or findings are supported by some evidence which is not, upon its face, improbable or unbelievable, the presumption is that the jury or the judge have been satisfied by such evidence to the extent of warranting the conclusion reached, and that, in considering the evidence, no arbitrary method has been pursued but that all the rules by which weight and credibility are tested have been their sole guide in arriving at the final determination. It is therefore not within the province or the right of reviewing courts to declare that the minds of the jury or judge who tried the facts had not been satisfied by the evidence from which the verdict or findings have been educed.

It is to be presumed that the judge in the case at bar reconciled and accounted for, to his own satisfaction, any and all inconsistencies which might have been made to appear in the testimony of Krogh, and it may be, for aught that appears from the record to the contrary, that what seem to be contradictory statements in his testimony were not the result of a desire or an intention to make a false statement, but were due to mistake, or, it may be, to a treacherous memory. But whatever may have been the particular view or the character of the analysis of Krogh's testimony by the trial judge, to whom the determination of the questions of fact was submitted, his findings, no doubt based largely on Krogh's evidence, are conclusive upon this court. In connection with the discussion of the alleged failure of the evidence to support the findings, appellant declares that "manifestly the principal inducement for Krogh's buying the stock was the suggested marvelous increase in value from seventy-five cents per share to $60 per share inside of six months' time," and the contention is made that such representation involved a mere expression of opinion, "or wild irrational speculation, and is not legal evidence to establish fraud." It is true, as a general rule, as the authorities hold, that fraudulent representations cannot be predicated of a mere expression of opinion, however erroneous such opinion may be or however positively stated. Johnson v. Johnson, 134 Cal. 662, 66 Pac. 847; Lee v. McClelland, 120 Cal. 147, 52 Pac. 300; Lloyd v. Kehl, 132 Cal. 107, 64 Pac. 125; Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 398, 23 Pac. 16, 16 Am. St. Rep. 137; Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 142 Cal. 317, 75 Pac. 899; Henry v. Continental Building, etc., Ass'n, 156 Cal. 675, 105 Pac. 960. But, as is clearly pointed out by the Supreme Court in Henry v. Continental Building, etc., Ass'n, supra, this rule "is subject to some qualification. A party inducing another to contract in reliance upon estimates or opinions professedly based upon alleged facts known to the party stating them to be nonexistent will not be permitted to escape responsibility by the plea that he was merely declaring his opinion."

The testimony of Plaugher, the corporation's driller, distinctly shows that Abrams' representations to Krogh with regard to the probable future value of the stock involved more than a mere opinion. It discloses, if anything at all, deliberate design on the part of Abrams to mislead all persons to whom he might attempt to sell stock as to the actual conditions of the corporation's business and properties. "Report a little oil whether you have it or not" was his injunction to Plaugher, and, he added, "It will help me out selling stock." It is very evident not only from Plaugher's testimony, but from other evidence adduced at the trial, that, so far as the prospective increase in the value of the stock was concerned, Abrams' opinion was "based upon alleged facts known to him to be nonexistent."

2. But it is vigorously insisted that, conceding the representations to which Krogh testified had been made by Abrams and that they were false, still the defendant cannot prevail, since it is clear that opportunity to ascertain for himself whether such representations were true or false was readily available to him; that he had the means of acquiring knowledge of the facts for over three years; and that, having negligently failed to prosecute an inquiry to that end, he cannot now maintain the plea that he was misled and deceived thereby and so escape the consequences of his obligation. It is doubtless well-settled law that where one undertakes to secure, upon the ground of misrepresentation and fraud, restoration of the consideration which supported an executed contract, he cannot prevail, if it be made to appear that he could, by the exercise of ordinary prudence or diligence, have detected the fraud, or have ascertained facts which would have disclosed that the representations were false and fraudulent. There is no ellipsis in a long line of authorities to this effect. As is said by Chancellor Kent, in the second volume of his great work (page 485): "The law affords to every one reasonable protection against fraud in dealing; but it does not go to the romantic length of giving indemnity against the consequences of indolence and folly, or a careless indifference to the ordinary and accessible means of information." See Rockafellow v. Baker, 41 Pa. 319, 80 Am. Dec. 624; Saunders v. Hatterman, 24 N. C. 32, 37 Am. Dec. 404; Brown v. Gray, 51 N. C. 103, 72 Am. Dec. 563; Lee v. McClelland, 120 Cal. 147, 151, 52 Pac. 300. In the first place, we cannot say that Krogh had accessible means of ascertaining whether the representations were false or true. The lands and the business of the corporation were situated and managed in other counties than the one in which Krogh resided, and where the representations and the contract were made. Krogh, so far as we are advised to the contrary by the record, was not an expert in oil lands or the oil development business, and it is highly probable that, had he inspected the properties of the corporation, he would not have added any more wisdom on the proposition to that which he had acquired in listening to the tale so seductively unfolded before his mind by Abrams. Abrams' business was that of an oil land promoter—at least, he had been engaged in the oil land business for a long period—and Krogh was undoubtedly made to believe by him that he (Abrams) possessed full and perfect knowledge of the oil development business in general and of the corporation's business and prospects in particular. Abrams had thus ingratiated himself into the confidence of Krogh to such an extent that the latter placed implicit reliance upon every representation that he made. Krogh declared that he believed the representations, and we think that, under the circumstances, he had a right to rely upon facts which were not and could not be expected to be within his own knowledge. Bank of Woodland v. Hiatt, 58 Cal. 237; Mead v. Bunn, 32 N. Y. 275. But, assuming it to have been the duty of Krogh to investigate for himself before purchasing the stock, the case here does not come within, nor is it to be decided on, the principle laid down by Mr. Kent. Here the plaintiff seeks to recover on an executory contract. The defendant appeals to the equity side of the court, and declares that the plaintiff should not be permitted to enforce the contract because, as he charged, the same was procured through fraudulent representations. A court of equity is a court of conscience, and will under no circumstances enforce or permit to be enforced the terms of a contract founded in fraud, even if there existed and were accessible to the defendant the means and opportunity to detect such fraud by the exercise of ordinary prudence.

In Rockafellow v. Baker, supra, cited by counsel for appellant, it is said: "No doubt the plaintiff parted with property most foolishly. If the suit were upon an executory contract, we would not enforce it. The total failure of consideration would be a sufficient reason. And such ruling would be according to the doctrine of Bellas v. Hays, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 427, 9 Am. Dec. 385; Geiger v. Cook, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 266, and numerous other cases cited in the argument. But the contract is not executory. It has been fully executed by the parties. They asked no aid of equity to enforce it. Our interposition is invoked, not to carry out and accomplish what the parties have begun, but to undo what the parties have accomplished." As seen, the defendant here, in response to plaintiff's demand in a court of law, has, not alone by the interposition of an equitable defense, but, by a cross-complaint, brought the plaintiff within the cognizance of the equity side of the court, and has, upon appropriate allegations, asked relief from the consequences of an alleged fraudulent and unconscionable executory contract. As stated, a court of equity, upon the principle that he who comes into equity must do so with clean hands, could under no circumstances lend its aid to enforce, or allow, where asked to prevent it, the enforcement of an unexecuted contract which the chancellor finds, upon sufficient evidence, was brought about through deceit and fraud. There may be in a given case no inconsistency between a refusal by a court of equity to enforce the specific performance of a contract and a refusal to rescind the same contract, and, in the case at bar, whether the defendant was entitled to affirmative relief or not, it was nevertheless the duty of the chancellor to refuse to allow the plaintiff to enforce or recover upon a contract that was, according to evidence which appeared to satisfy the mind of the judge, conceived in and consummated through fraud. The case of Lee v. McClelland, supra, will be found, on examination, to be entirely different from this case in almost every material respect.

3. The counterclaim for $5,000, pleaded by the defendant and allowed by the court, arose under the following circumstances: In the year 1905, and subsequently to the date of the transaction culminating in the execution by the defendant of the promissory notes, of which the note declared upon is one, Abrams went to Fresno, where he had a conversation with Krogh concerning an oil company known as the "Pacific Gateway Oil Company." Krogh testified that in said conversation Abrams stated that Brandt had sent him (Abrams) to Krogh for the purpose of inducing the latter to buy "a one-eighth interest in the Pacific Gateway Company." Abrams said to Krogh that all those interested in said company had paid for their shares, except one Dave Wolf, who had failed to pay for his stock; that Wolf's interest, as were likewise the respective interests of the other shareholders, was of the value of $5,000. He stated to Krogh that, if he (Krogh) would take Wolf's interest in the Gateway and pay $5,000 therefor, the company would thus be able to "square up." The agreement was, so Krogh testified, that, upon the payment of $5,000, he should not only receive the one-eighth interest of Wolf in the Gateway, but that one of the notes heretofore referred to as having been made by Krogh in favor of Brandt would be canceled and returned to Krogh as paid. Krogh accepted this proposition and borrowed money from a Stockton bank, with which he paid the $5,000. It appears that said money was left on deposit in the bank by Krogh, who ordered it paid to Brandt with the understanding that it should be paid into the Gateway Company. Brandt, it seems, instead of so utilizing said $5,000, applied the sum on the payment of Krogh's notes, one having thus been fully paid, and the balance of the sum thereupon remaining being credited on the note involved in this action. Krogh, as may be understood from what has thus far appeared of the Gateway transaction, denied that said sum of money had anything to do with or was intended to be applied on the notes, and as tending to corroborate this testimony a document, executed by the parties after the execution of the notes, was introduced in evidence, by the terms of which the times at which said notes would mature were definitely fixed, the note bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum having thus been made collectible two years after the date of its execution and the note providing for 7 per cent. per annum made payable three years after the date of its execution. The probative significance of this agreement is in the fact that the payment of the $5,000 to Brandt was at a time anterior to the date of maturity of either of the notes under the terms of said agreement. Krogh never received the 25,000 shares or Wolf's one-eighth interest in the Gateway Company. The fact is undisputed that the note which Brandt and Abrams claimed was paid by the application thereto of such part of said sum of $5,000 as was necessary to fully satisfy it never was sent or returned to Krogh.

By cross-examination it was sought to be shown that Krogh, after paying the $5,000, agreed to dispose of his interest in the Gateway Company for $115, the purpose of this proof being manifestly to discredit his statement that he had invested $5,000 in that concern. There was introduced in evidence an instrument, signed by Krogh, purporting to assign and transfer in consideration of the sum of $115, all his interest in the Gateway to Brandt. Krogh admitted the execution of said instrument, but explained that it was intended as a mere formal transfer to Brandt, all the other stockholders having executed a similar assignment, to enable him (Brandt) to sell the property of said company to some eastern people who were negotiating for its purchase, the proceeds of said sale to be divided equally among the stockholders. This, Krogh said, is what Brandt represented to him when he requested the assignment. Krogh stated that he never received the $115 mentioned in said assignment.

Upon the testimony thus briefly narrated, the court found that said sum of $5,000 had been diverted by Brandt from the purpose for which it was paid, and that Krogh knew nothing of the misapplication of said sum of money until the time of the institution of this action, and that Krogh had never received Wolf's or any shares of stock in the Gateway. The finding as to this sum of $5,000 is amply supported by the evidence.

4. Certain rulings of the court are assigned as prejudicially erroneous. The most important of these assignments is involved in the exception to the overruled objection to the testimony of the wife of Krogh. Mrs. Krogh, it will be recalled, was present at the time of the conversation held in the month of July, 1904, at her residence, between Krogh and Abrams. The objection to her testimony concerning said conversation was in effect upon the ground that it did not appear that Abrams had authority at that time to act for Brandt in the sale of any stock in the Ashurst Company. It does not affirmatively appear from the record whether Abrams was or was not the personal agent of Brandt, authorized to sell stock for him in the Ashurst Company, in the month of July, 1904, when the former first conversed with Krogh relative to the Ashurst oil properties. It is, of course, only elementary to say that the declarations of a party can bind no one but himself unless such declarations are made in his capacity as an agent of another party and are within the scope of his powers or authority as such agent. And it is furthermore a well-established principle that a party dealing with an agent, who is acting within the scope and authority of his employment, is to be considered as dealing with the principal himself. In the case of a contract, if the agent, at the time of making the contract, makes any representation, declaration, or admission, whether true or false, touching the matter of the contract, it is treated as the representation, declaration, or admission of the principal himself. Story on Agency (9th Ed.) p. 152. Abrams testified that, while he had no special agreement with Brandt before he sold the stock to Krogh, he, in a general way, looked after his affairs "as well as my own," and we think it is fairly inferable from the whole transaction, as it is exposed by the evidence, that Abrams' sole purpose in visiting and interviewing Krogh in the month of July, 1904, was to infuse into the latter's mind false views as to the condition of the Ashurst Oil Company's oil lands and business in the hope, thereby, of laying the foundation for dumping a large block of worthless stock, of which Brandt, either for the corporation or himself, was anxious to dispose, into the lap of Krogh in return for a large sum of money. In other words, we think that, from the whole record, the court below was justified in drawing the inference that Abrams was acting for Brandt in the month of July, 1904. That Abrams had some motive when taking the pains on that occasion to regale Krogh with the marvelous tale of the existing promising conditions of the corporation and its business is very apparent, and that his design was in his first conversation with Krogh to sell the latter Ashurst stock is inferable from the testimony of Plaugher, the driller, according to which Abrams knew the utter worthlessness of the corporation's lands as oil producers, for, as seen, he urged Plaugher to make favorable reports of the development operations, regardless of whether such reports were based upon fact or falsehood. His desire to sell the stock was at all times the point uppermost in his mind. He, beyond peradventure, knew, and it would be absurd to say there were any of the stockholders who did not as well know, at the time Krogh was first interviewed by Abrams relative to the Ashurst, that the corporation's lands in San Benito county had been sufficiently tested and experimented with to plainly demonstrate that as oil properties they possessed absolutely no value, and that therefore whatever could be realized on the sale of the stock in the corporation would amount to just so much gain to the promoters of the concern. Besides, Abrams was the manager of the corporation in the month of July, and as such was as much the agent of Brandt as he was of any of the other members of the corporation. Brandt was a director, and had, with the other directors, executed a note at a bank on which they had received money with which they had paid the corporation's debts. The object in selling stock was to secure money with which to reimburse Brandt for taking up said note, and Abrams was directed to sell stock for that purpose.

Moreover, it does not appear from Mrs. Krogh's direct testimony that she referred to the conversation had in July, 1904. She stated that: "I was present at a conversation in 1904 between Mr. Krogh and Mr. Abrams regarding the sale to Mr. Krogh of some oil stock in the Ashurst Oil Company. I remember the conversation." She was then asked to state the conversation and the representations that were then made by Abrams concerning the Ashurst Oil Company. The objection to this question was, as seen, that it called for testimony that was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial," and not binding on Brandt, and the objection overruled. It did not appear that the conversation to which Mrs. Krogh referred took place in the month of July, 1904, until the fact was brought out on cross-examination, and we think it was the duty of counsel, in order to avail themselves of the objection here, to have then moved to strike out Mrs. Krogh's testimony, which they failed to do. On its face the direct testimony appeared to be material, relevant, and competent, and, while from the testimony of Krogh previously given it appeared that Mrs. Krogh was present at the conversation held in July, the court would not have been justified in assuming from his testimony alone that Mrs. Krogh intended to give the details of that particular conversation. To the contrary, the court could not but assume, until it otherwise appeared from her testimony, that she referred to some conversation which would relevantly respond to the issues raised by the answer and the cross-complaint.

That portion of Krogh's testimony relating to his conversation with Abrams and the latter's statements in July, 1904, was objected to and the objection overruled. The same contention is here made with regard to this ruling as is made concerning the ruling admitting Mrs. Krogh's testimony of said conversation and statements. What we have said generally respecting the ruling admitting her testimony applies with equal force to the objection here referred to. It may, however, be added, with regard to the objection to Krogh's testimony detailing the statements made by Abrams in the month of July, that substantially the same statements and representations were made by Abrams in the months of September, when Krogh bought the stock, and testimony thereof given by Krogh.

The question asked plaintiff on cross-examination and objected to by his counsel as to who constituted the membership of the Pacific Gateway Company was not, strictly viewing it, proper cross-examination; yet the answer thereto was harmless in view of the fact that later in the trial the matter of the organization and existence of the Gateway was necessarily gone into and some of the members of that corporation who were named by plaintiff in response to the question testified and referred to their connection with that corporation. The admission in evidence of a letter from the secretary of the Ashurst Oil Company to Krogh, assuming that the ruling admitting it was error, was without injury to plaintiff. The letter contained nothing of probative importance but a statement from which it could be inferred that Krogh had actually bought stock in the Gateway Company. The allegations in the cross-complaint regarding this transaction are not denied in the answer thereto. In this state of the pleadings on this proposition it was obviously unnecessary to introduce proof that Krogh had in fact bought stock in the Gateway, the fact having been in effect admitted by a failure to deny it. Wells v. McPike, 21 Cal. 216; West Coast Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 280, 22 Pac. 231; Curran v. Kennedy, 89 Cal. 98, 26 Pac. 641.

Abrams, having testified that he had examined and found indications of oil on lands belonging to other parties and situated in the neighborhood of the lands of the Ashurst corporation, was asked: "How close to the property of the Ashurst Oil Company did you discover oil indications or seepages?" To this question an objection was made by the defendant and sustained by the court, and it is claimed that prejudicial error was thus committed. But, while it would probably have been proper to have allowed an answer to the question, we think the ruling was harmless. Abrams had previously testified that the lands, not belonging to his corporation, which he had inspected and on which indications of oil were observable, adjoined the properties of the Ashurst Company. Besides, there was no effort made by the plaintiff to show, nor was there any pretense, that there were indications of oil on the Ashurst properties which would justify the prognostication that the value of the stock would reach $60 per share within six months. In fact, there was not any serious attempt made by the plaintiff to show that there were oil indications on the lands of his corporations to any significant extent.

There are some other rulings admitting and rejecting evidence complained of by appellant, but we cannot perceive any harm which could have resulted therefrom to plaintiff, conceding that some of them were not strictly correct.

5. The appellant, on his motion for a new trial, and in support of the claim of "newly discovered evidence" and of having been taken by "surprise during the trial of said action which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against," filed a number of affidavits in which it is alleged that, after the trial and the rendition and entry of judgment, a number of letters written by Krogh to Abrams, containing important admissions by the defendant in conflict with his testimony, were found in the possession of Cohn, the secretary of the Ashurst Company. These letters are set out and made parts of said affidavits. It appears very clear from these letters that the only use to which they could have been put at the trial by the plaintiff would have been for the purpose of impeaching Krogh's testimony, and it is well settled that, where the only purpose or effect of newly discovered evidence is the impeachment of an adverse witness, a new trial will not be granted on that ground. Chalmers v. Sheehy, 132 Cal. 459, 64 Pac. 709, 84 Am. St. Rep. 62; Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 Pac. 92; Hamm v. Romine, 98 Ind. 77; Gardner v. Kellogg, 23 Minn. 463; James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 802, 103 Pac. 1082, and cases therein cited.

Furthermore, the affidavits on their face do not make a very strong showing in the matter of the exercise of diligence on the part of plaintiff to procure said "newly discovered" evidence. One of the plaintiff's own witnesses had access to, if, indeed, not possession of, all the correspondence between Abrams and Krogh, and, when requested before the trial to do so, turned over to one of plaintiff's attorneys all such correspondence as he could find. The discovery of the letters forming the basis of the alleged newly discovered evidence was made after a "thorough search," as the attorney's affidavit describes the effort resulting in their discovery, after the trial was had and judgment entered against plaintiff. Admitting that the newly discovered evidence was of a sort that would justify the granting of a new trial, there is not, in our opinion, such a showing of diligence in the efforts put forth by plaintiff to secure said evidence before the trial as would compel the court to exercise its discretion in disposing of the motion favorably to the plaintiff.

Appellant contends that he was taken by surprise "which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against" by the testimony of Krogh to the effect that he and Abrams jointly bought the 10,000 shares of stock. The plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint alleges that "he has at all times looked to said defendant Abrams as an indorser of said promissory note to whom he would look for the payment of said note in the event said defendant Krogh was not able to pay said note," and plaintiff testified to the same effect. After this testimony was given by plaintiff, Krogh asked and was granted leave to amend his cross-complaint so that it would conform thereto, and the court found that Abrams was not a joint purchaser with Krogh of the stock, but signed the note only as an indorser to secure its payment. Manifestly, even if plaintiff was surprised by the testimony of Krogh on this point, it cannot be said that he suffered any injury from such testimony, since Krogh acquiesced in and the court found with plaintiff's theory as to the relations between Abrams and Krogh in the transaction. "Surprise," as used in the statute prescribing the grounds on which a motion for a new trial may be urged, denotes "some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his injury, without any default or negligence of his own, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." Bouv. Law Dict.; Anderson's Law Dict.; McGuire v. Drew, 83 Cal. 229, 23 Pac. 312.

It is a rule thoroughly settled and understood that the party moving for a new trial on the ground of surprise must not only show surprise, but must show that injury resulted to him from the cause of such surprise, and this can be done only by showing that he could establish an entirely different case favorable to himself in the event that a new trial be granted.

After a painstaking examination of the record before us and the points urged for a reversal, we have been unable to discover a just reason for disturbing either the judgment or the order, and both are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 170

FORRESTER v. LAWLER. (Civ. 829.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 27, 1910.)

1. Dismissal and Nonsuit (§ 53*)—Motion to Dismiss.

A motion to dismiss an action on the ground that the answer sufficiently pleaded a former judgment as a bar to a recovery is not the proper procedure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 105*)—Orders Appealable.

An order refusing to dismiss an action is not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 717-723; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Marie Forrester against Oscar Lawler. From an order denying a motion to dismiss an action, defendant appeals. Dismissed.

See, also, infra.

Lon K. Wisehart, Carroll Allen, Henry S. Van Dyke, and Lawler, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for appellant. Job Harriman, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. In an action brought by respondent as plaintiff against appellant as defendant she sought to recover judgment upon two certain promissory notes. The answer, in addition to pleading want of consideration, for a separate answer alleged that an action had theretofore been brought by plaintiff upon the same causes of action between the same parties, which action had been, by consent of the parties, dismissed by the court and judgment regularly entered therein for costs. Defendant then, after such answer had been filed, moved the court for dismissal of the pending action, for the reason that the original action dismissed by consent was a bar to the present action. This motion the court denied, and from the order of the court denying the same defendant appeals.

Conceding for appellant all that he claims for his answer, and that the original action and judgment pleaded therein was res adjudicata as to all the matters involved, nevertheless a motion to dismiss on account of the sufficiency of the answer as a bar to recovery was not the proper procedure. In addition to this, an order of the court refusing to dismiss an action is not itself appealable. Garthwaite v. Bank of Tulare, 134 Cal. 243, 66 Pac. 326.

This appeal is therefore dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 171

FORRESTER v. LAWLER. (Civ. 830.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 27, 1910. Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 27, 1910.)

1. Judgment (§ 305*)—Amendments—Power of Court.

The court has inherent power at any time to correct the record of a judgment as entered by the clerk to conform to the judgment actually rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 596, 597; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

2. Judgment (§ 304*)—Amendments—Power of Court.

Judicial errors committed by the court in the rendition of a judgment cannot be corrected under the guise of an amendment of its record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 595; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

3. Judgment (§ 304*)—Amendments—Power of Court.

The failure of the court in rendering judgment to make it conform to the order on which it is based is a judicial error of law committed at the trial, whether due to fraud, inadvertence, or other cause, and the remedy is by motion for new trial, and not by motion to amend the judgment.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 595; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Marie Forrester against Oscar Lawler. From an order amending a judgment previously rendered and entered, defendant appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 111 Pac. 284.

Lon K. Wisehart, Carroll Allen, and Henry S. Van Dyke, for appellant. Hammack & Hammack and Blaine Taylor, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order granting a motion to amend a judgment theretofore rendered and entered.

Upon a hearing had on February 28, 1908, of defendant's motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, the court, as disclosed by the minute entry of the clerk, ordered the cause dismissed without prejudice. Thereafter, on August 26, 1908, the court rendered judgment wherein it was recited that the dismissal was by consent of parties and omitted to state that such dismissal was without prejudice. This judgment was signed by the judge of the court and duly entered by the clerk on August 28, 1908.

Thereafter, more than six months having elapsed from the rendition and entry of such judgment, plaintiff, pursuant to notice thereof, made a motion to have the same amended, the ground therefor being that the judgment so rendered did not conform to the order of dismissal made February 28, 1908, as shown by the minute entry of the clerk, in that it omitted to state that such dismissal was had without prejudice and recited that it was made by agreement of the parties. This motion was based upon the records and files in the action and upon certain affidavits presented. At the hearing thereof the court granted the motion, and on March 22, 1909, ordered the judgment amended in accordance with the form and substance of a proposed judgment, copy of which was attached to the notice of motion and served upon defendant. The court erred in granting this motion and in making the order from which defendant appeals.

No doubt exists as to the power of the court to allow amendments, regardless of the lapse of time, where the record as entered by the clerk fails to conform to the judgment rendered by the court. Freeman on Judgments, § 70; Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 27 Pac. 22; City and County v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 96 Pac. 281; Williams v. Hayes, 68 Wis. 248, 32 N. W. 44. That judicial errors committed by the courts in the rendition of judgments cannot be thus summarily corrected is equally well settled. Brackett v. Banegas, 99 Cal. 623, 34 Pac. 344; Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899; Blondeau v. Snyder, 95 Cal. 521, 31 Pac. 591. While the court has the inherent right and power at any time to cause its acts and proceedings to be correctly set forth in its records, it cannot, under the pretense of the form of an amendment of its record, thus correct or revise a judgment which it has in fact rendered. Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 16, 43 Pac. 393, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139. In the case at bar, the rendition of the judgment which it was sought to amend was the judicial act of the court. Attached thereto was the signature of the judge of the court. As thus solemnly attested it was duly entered by the clerk. "To entitle a party to an order amending a judgment, order, or decree, he must establish that the entry as made does not conform to what the court ordered." Freeman on Judgments, § 70. Respondent does not claim that there was any mistake on the part of the clerk in entering the judgment, but contends that the court erred by reason of the fact that the judgment rendered fails to conform to the order upon which it was based. If so, it was a judicial error, as to which the court had no power to correct by the amendment ordered. As said in Egan v. Egan, supra: "If it should be admitted that the court ought to have included the provisions of this stipulation in its decree, its failure to do so was an error resulting either from a misconception of the law applicable to the facts before it, or from a failure to give sufficient consideration to those facts. In either case it was an error of law committed at the trial, which the defendant should have sought to remedy through her motion for a new trial." So in the case at bar. If it be true that the court should in its rendition of judgment have followed the order of dismissal, its failure so to do was an error, but, whether due to fraud, inadvertence, want of sufficient consideration of the order, or other cause, it was nevertheless an error of law which could not be corrected by the summary order from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The order appealed from is therefore reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 253

PEOPLE v. GORMAN. (Cr. 246.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 19, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 27, 1910.)

ROBBERY (§ 24*)—IDENTITY OF ACCUSED—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to identify accused as one of two robbers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Robbery, Cent. Dig. § 34; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Frank Gorman was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Spagnoli & Spagnoli, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and James F. Brennan, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged with the crime of robbery and with having suffered a prior conviction of the crime of manslaughter. Upon his arraignment he admitted the charge of prior conviction to be true, and upon his trial he was found guilty of the crime of robbery. Upon judgment being pronounced against him, he appealed from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The point principally relied upon for a reversal is that the verdict is not supported by the evidence, in that the defendant, as it is claimed, is not by the evidence sufficiently identified as the person who committed the robbery. The contention is entirely without merit. The evidence shows that on the morning of the 17th day of April, 1909, two masked men, armed with pistols, entered the office of the Thomson Bridge Company at 103 Main street, between Mission and Howard streets, in San Francisco, and, finding the bookkeeper, one Rosengreen, alone, securely bound and gagged him. Shortly after this was done Mr. James M. Thomson returned to the office from the bank, bringing a sack of money containing $3,200 with which to pay the workmen of the company for their week's labor. Thomson dropped the sack of coin on the counter, and immediately discovered the two masked men, with pistols pointed at him. One of the men had a pistol in each hand, while the other had but one pistol. Thomson attempted to draw his own pistol, and was immediately shot through the arm, and again through the chest. A third shot was fired at him, which scorched his neck and set his overcoat on fire. Thomson then escaped to the street, going down a stairway to the sidewalk, and was closely followed by the two men. On reaching the sidewalk he saw one of the men run towards Howard street. He turned and saw a second man come out of the stairway, holding a gun in one hand and the sack of coin under his left arm, partly hid under his coat, which he observed had a rent under the left shoulder. He saw this man run to a buggy, just around the corner from Main street, on Mission street, and throw the sack of coin into the buggy. At this point Thomson shot at the man, who returned the fire, and jumped into the buggy and drove away. While the man was at the buggy Thomson saw his face, and testified that the face was that of the defendant. A Mr. White also saw Thomson come out of the stairway bleeding and wounded, followed quickly by a man with a gun and a sack of something under his arm. White saw this man run to the buggy on Mission street, throw in the sack, exchange shots with Thomson, jump into the buggy, and drive away. White immediately jumped into his own buggy, about 20 feet away, and followed this man, stopping only to pick up a police officer, Mr. Dowd. White and the officer followed the man in the buggy, without losing sight of him, until he was caught and arrested, upon his flight being checked by a jam of vehicles in the street. The man thus pursued and arrested proved to be the defendant. Upon his arrest there was recovered and taken from the buggy the sack of coin ($3,200). He had upon him and in the buggy two pistols, a small pistol fully loaded, and a large Colt's revolver containing four empty shells and two cartridges. He wore a coat with a rent under the left shoulder, which Thomson testified to be the coat worn by the man who carried the sack of coin to the buggy. White testified that he never lost sight of the man who came out the stairway with the sack under his arm until he was arrested. Upon his arrest the defendant gave no explanation of his flight, or possession of the sack of coin, but did say that he wished he had been shot, and all thus ended. Other evidence was given by other witnesses, but what we have stated is quite sufficient to show that defendant is one of the men who committed the robbery of which he was convicted.

We have examined the other points presented by appellant's brief, but we do not consider that any of them are of sufficient importance to require particular discussion.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

158 Cal. 441

In re WARNER'S ESTATE.

WARNER v. WARNER.

(Sac. 1,809.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1097*)—Law of the Case.

A decision of a court of appeal on a point directly involved is the law of the case on a subsequent appeal to the Supreme Court from the judgment rendered on the subsequent trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4358-4368; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

2. Husband and Wife (§ 31*)—Antenuptial Agreement—Performance.

An antenuptial contract binding the husband to support and properly educate a minor child of the wife, in consideration of the wife releasing her rights in his property, is not performed by the husband where almost immediately after the marriage the child, about 12 years old, is sent out to work for a living under conditions making it impossible for the child to attend school, so that on the husband's death the wife may claim her rights as heir.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 193; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

3. Contracts (§ 346*)—Performance—Pleading and Evidence.

Proof of waiver of performance of an agreement does not justify a finding of performance thereof, and a party relying on waiver must allege it in order to have a basis for the proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1732; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 1122*)—Disposition of Case on Appeal—Findings.

Where the trial court's findings of performance of an agreement are contrary to the evidence, and it made no finding on the conflicting evidence of waiver of performance, the court on appeal will not supply a finding thereon to sustain the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4420; Dec. Dig. § 1122.*]

5. Husband and Wife (§ 31*)—Antenuptial Agreement — Construction — "Without Any Administration."

An antenuptial contract, which provides that the wife, on the death of the husband, shall receive from his estate "without any administration" $1,000, does not require the husband to provide the sum by will or other affirmative means, but the contract makes the wife a creditor, and authorizes collection of her claim in the mode applicable to creditors of estates; the quoted phrase merely allowing the wife to receive the sum in advance of complete administration and distribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 193; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Letters of administration on the estate of Adam Warner were granted to Adam J. Warner, his son, and from the order and from an order denying her a new trial, Katie Warner, the widow, appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 6 Cal. App. 361, 92 Pac. 191.

Hiram W. Johnson and A. A. De Ligne, for appellant. A. L. Shinn and W. F. Renfro, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Adam Warner having died intestate, a contest over the right to act as administrator of his estate arose between Katie Warner, his widow, and Adam J. Warner, his son. The superior court made an order granting letters of administration to the son, and the widow appeals from the order, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

Where the surviving wife is entitled to succeed to some portion of the personal estate, she has a preferential right to letters. Code Civ. Proc. § 1365. The right of the widow in this case was disputed on the ground that she had, by an antenuptial agreement, surrendered her right of succession to any part of Adam Warner's estate. The agreement in question was in writing. It provided that, in consideration of the covenants to be performed on the part of the appellant (then Mrs. Heidt), Warner agreed to care for, keep, maintain, and support her and her minor child, and to properly educate said child, so long as the said appellant should be a good, faithful, and dutiful wife to him, and also to pay her $100 per annum, and that at his death she should "receive from his estate, without any administration, the sum of $1,000. Each of the parties relinquished any and all claims to the property of the other, either as heir or otherwise. This agreement was set up by the son in his own petition for letters, and also in his contest to the widow's petition. In both of these pleadings he averred the full performance of the terms of the agreement by Adam Warner. The widow filed an answer to the contest, and in this she denied the allegation of performance and alleged more specifically that Adam Warner had failed and refused to support or educate her minor child, and had failed to provide the sum of $1,000 to be paid to her at his death. She also set up that the agreement was, as the result of fraud or misrepresentation on the part of Adam Warner, so drawn as not to express her intention, and that the consideration was inadequate as to her. The findings were in favor of the respondent on all these issues.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

So far as the charges of fraud and inadequacy of consideration are concerned, the findings are clearly sustained by the evidence. Even if we adopt the appellant's view that the contracting parties occupied such a relation to each other as to make the agreement presumptively invalid, in so far as it assumed to confer any benefit upon Adam Warner, the testimony regarding the circumstances under which the agreement was made fully justified the trial court in finding that the nature and extent of the property rights of the two parties, and of the effect of the agreement, were fully known and understood by Mrs. Heidt, and that the provision made for her was a proper and fair one and was accepted as such.

But the appellant further attacks, as unsupported by the testimony, the finding that Adam Warner had performed all the conditions of the contract. That this was a finding on a material issue is put beyond controversy now by reason of the decision in Estate of Warner, 6 Cal. App. 361, 92 Pac. 191. That was an earlier appeal in this very proceeding. The court below had sustained a demurrer to the widow's answer to the son's opposition and had granted letters to the son. On the appeal of the widow the judgment was reversed; the appellate court holding that the allegation of nonperformance on the part of the decedent raised a material issue. "We think," says the court, "that where a woman in an antenuptial contract releases all her rights in the property of her intended husband as his heir, in consideration of his doing certain things, if he fails to perform material covenants on his part, she may show this and still claim her rights as heir." This declaration, affecting a point directly involved, is binding upon this appeal as the law of the case.

The testimony contained in the record shows without conflict that one of the substantial obligations assumed by Adam Warner in his contract was not fulfilled by him. The agreement bound him to support and properly educate the minor daughter of the appellant. The child, a daughter, was less than 12 years of age at the date of the agreement. Almost immediately after the marriage, she was sent out to work for her living under conditions which made it impossible for her to attend school. The finding that Adam Warner fully performed the terms of the agreement is, therefore, not sustained by the evidence. There was, to be sure, testimony which would have warranted the trial court in finding that performance in this respect was waived by the appellant. Such a finding might have been regarded as within the issues on the ground that Mrs. Warner, in her answer, alleged affirmatively the failure to perform, and the adverse party would under our system of pleading, which does not allow a replication, have been entitled to prove anything which would overcome the effect of affirmative matter of defense. Without passing on this question, which may hereafter be obviated by amendment, we shall assume that the pleadings were such as to authorize the respondent to show that the appellant had consented to Warner's treatment of her daughter. But the admissibility of evidence to show a waiver of performance does not meet the point that such waiver is not the same thing as performance, and proof of it will not support a finding of performance. Thompson v. Jewell, 8 Ky. 195; Colt v. Miller, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 48; Palmer v. Sawyer, 114 Mass. 1; Shinn v. Haines, 21 N. J. Law, 340; Crandall v. Clark, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 169. While a sufficient excuse for nonperformance will often confer upon a party the same rights that he would have had upon performance, the distinction between the two remains a substantial one. "The rule is fundamental," said this court in Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 Pac. 867, "that the complaint must allege either performance or a valid excuse for nonperformance. One is not the same as the other. And if the plaintiff did not perform the contract, but relies upon the consent of the defendants as an excuse, he must set forth the excuse in his complaint." See, also, Poheim v. Meyers, 9 Cal. App. 31, 37, 98 Pac. 65; Seebach v. Kuhn, 9 Cal. App. 485, 99 Pac. 723. If, as is thus held, a party relying upon an excuse for nonperformance must allege his excuse in order to have a basis for proof, it necessarily follows that evidence of such excuse will not support a finding that he has performed. In the case before us the evidence concerning the appellant's waiver of the obligation to support and educate her child was sharply conflicting. On this issue the court has not found and we cannot, of course, supply a finding. The finding of performance, which was made, would have sustained the judgment; but, since this finding is contrary to the evidence, there must be a new trial.

As a guide to the lower court upon a retrial of the issues, we may add that the part of the agreement providing that the appellant was, upon Warner's death, to receive "from his estate, without any administration, the sum of $1,000" is not in our opinion to be interpreted as requiring Warner to provide this sum by will, or by other affirmative means. It made her a creditor, and authorized collection of her claim in the mode applicable to creditors of estates. The phrase "without any administration" is given full effect by reading it as allowing the appellant to receive the sum in advance of complete administration and distribution of the estate. As a creditor she could so receive it.

There are no other points requiring notice. The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

---

158 Cal. 446

LAWSON v. LAWSON. (S. F. 5,652.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1910.)

1. STATUTES (§ 74*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 710, permitting a transcript of a money judgment to be filed with the auditor of any county or city, etc., from which money is owing to the judgment debtor, whereupon such official shall draw his warrant in favor of, or pay into the court from which the transcript was taken, so much of the money belonging to or owing to the judgment debtor as will cancel the judgment, does not violate the constitutional provisions against special legislation and requiring a general law to have a uniform operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 76; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

2. GARNISHMENT (§ 63*)—SALARIES OF PUBLIC OFFICERS.

The statute is applicable to the salaries of all public officers to which its application is not prohibited by a constitutional provision, and hence is applicable to justices of the peace; neither Const. art. 6, § 1, nor section 11, relating to justices, their number and powers, nor section 15, providing that no judicial officer, except justices of the peace and court commissioners, shall receive to his own use any perquisites of office, or any other provision, preventing its application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 70*)—DIVISION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS—JUDICIAL QUESTIONS—STATUTORY POLICY.

If a statute is constitutional, the question of its wisdom or policy is not for the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 131; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

4. EXEMPTIONS (§ 16*)—MONEY NECESSARY FOR SUPPORT OF "FAMILY."

Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 10, provides that the earnings of the judgment debtor for his personal services rendered within 30 days preceding the levy shall be exempt from execution, when necessary for the use of the debtor's family residing in this state, supported in whole or in part by his labor. An adult judgment debtor permanently resided apart from his mother in another county, and it did not appear that she was a poor person, unable to maintain herself by work, so that he was not legally bound under the statute to maintain her to the extent of his ability. Held, that the word "family" implied a collection of persons of which the debtor was the head, and while one might be a member of his family though residing apart from him, especially the debtor's wife and minor children, the debtor's mother in the present case was not a member of his family, so as to exempt money due him for services from execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Cent. Dig. §§ 15–19; Dec. Dig. § 16.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2673–2691; vol. 8, p. 7661.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Sadie Lawson against Alfred B. Lawson. From an order directing the disposition of money deposited with the Superior Court, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 111 Pac. 356.

H. H. McPike and Crittenden Thornton, for appellant. Leon Samuels and Jacob S. Meyer, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order directing the disposition of certain money placed within the control of the superior court under the provisions of section 710, Code Civ. Proc. Plaintiff was the judgment creditor under a decree of divorce which, among other things, required the defendant to pay to plaintiff $100 per month for her maintenance and support. On May 31, 1910, plaintiff filed with the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, of which city and county defendant was one of the justices of the peace, a duly authenticated transcript of the judgment, accompanied by her affidavit stating the exact amount due her from defendant under said judgment and that she desired to avail herself of the provisions of said section 710, Code Civ. Proc. At that time there was due and owing to defendant from said city and county the sum of $300, salary as justice of the peace, which was less than the amount due on the judgment. The money due defendant having been placed by the auditor within the control of the court rendering the judgment as required by section 710, Code Civ. Proc., defendant gave notice of a motion for an order directing the payment of all of the same to him as property exempt from execution under subdivision 10 of section 690, Code Civ. Proc., serving and filing therewith his affidavit making such claim of exemption and stating the facts upon which the claim was based. At the hearing of the motion further evidence was taken. The trial court concluded that $200 of said salary was exempt and the remainder not exempt, and made its order requiring the payment of $200 to defendant and $100 to plaintiff. This is the order appealed from.

1. It is established by the decision in Ruperich v. Baehr, 142 Cal. 190, 75 Pac. 782, that section 710, Code Civ. Proc., is not violative of the provisions of our Constitution inhibiting special legislation and requiring that a general law shall have a uniform operation. It is further established by that decision and the decision in Payne v. Baehr, 153 Cal. 441, 95 Pac. 895, that the section is applicable to the salaries of all such public officers and employés as do not come within the term "constitutional officers" as that term is used in Ruperich v. Baehr, supra. In that case the court, expressly reserving the question whether the Constitution prohibited its application to certain officers, said: "But with respect to those clearly within legislative control, if it fairly appears that by this act, properly construed, the legislative intent to declare as its policy that the salaries or wages may be thus diverted to the payment of debts of such officers and employés is manifested by the language used, then the courts are bound by this declared policy, with respect to the officers to whom it can be applied." The effect of the two cases cited is that the section must be held applicable to the salaries of all officers as to which its application is not inhibited by reason of some provision of the Constitution. Assuming for the purposes of this decision that with relation to some officers the effect of existing constitutional provisions may be to prevent the application of this section, we are satisfied that there is nothing in the Constitution precluding its application to salaries or fees of justices of the peace. Such salaries or fees are not fixed by the Constitution, and there is no provision therein, as in the case of some officers, that they "shall receive for their service" a compensation, fixed either by the Constitution or to be fixed in some other way. Nor is there as to such officers any provision, as in the case of some officers, to the effect that the compensation so to be received, whether fixed by Constitution or otherwise, shall not be diminished during the term for which the incumbent shall have been elected. They are simply mentioned as one of the tribunals in which the judicial power of the state is vested (section 1, art. 6), the Legislature is authorized to determine their number in townships, cities, and towns and cities and counties, and to fix their powers, duties, and responsibilities (section 11, art. 6), and it is expressly provided that "no judicial officer, except justices of the peace and court commissioners, shall receive to his own use any fees, or perquisites of office"(section 15, art. 6). There is nothing in any of the provisions of the Constitution effectual to preclude the Legislature from declaring and enforcing as to justices of the peace the policy of diverting their salaries or fees so far as may be necessary to the payment of such of their debts as are evidenced by judgment. The question of the wisdom of such a policy is not one within the province of the courts.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. Section 710, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "upon the receipt by any court of money under the provisions of this act so much thereof as is not exempt from execution shall be paid to the judgment creditor, the balance to the judgment debtor." Defendant's claim that any of this money was exempt from execution is based on provisions of subdivision 10 of section 690, Code Civ. Proc., which, so far as is material here, is as follows: "The earnings of the judgment debtor for his personal services rendered at any time within thirty days next preceding the levy of execution or attachment, when it appears by the debtor's affidavit or otherwise, that such earnings are necessary for the use of his family, residing in this state, supported in whole or in part by his labor." This is one of the subdivisions of a section declaring what property is exempt from execution or attachment.

Various contentions are made by plaintiff in response to the claim of exemption, under this subdivision. Among other contentions, it is substantially urged that, except in so far as his divorced wife constituted his family, defendant had no "family," within the meaning of that word as used in subdivision 10, § 690, Code Civ. Proc. If this contention be well based, it is apparent that there was no exemption in his favor under this subdivision. There is no conflict in the evidence material on this proposition. The alleged family, according to defendant's affidavit, "consists of my mother and myself." It was shown by the plaintiff and in no way disputed by defendant that the defendant resided in the city and county of San Francisco and that his mother resided in the city of Oakland, Alameda county. We construe the evidence given on this point as showing without conflict that this adult son and his mother had no abode in common, but permanently resided apart, one in one county and the other in another county. There was no showing that the mother was a "poor person who is unable to maintain" herself by work, and hence there was no legal duty shown on the part of the defendant to maintain her to the extent of his ability, under section 206, Civ. Code. Divergent as may be the authorities upon the exact meaning of the word "family" when used in exemption and homestead statutes, we have found no basis for such a construction as would make defendant's mother, under the circumstances above stated, a part of his family within the meaning of subdivision 10, § 690, Code Civ. Proc. The words "his family" as used in this statute imply a collection of persons of which he is the head. Under the most liberal construction given by any of the decisions, they would not include the mother of a judgment debtor when she is not a member of his household, and when her circumstances are not such as to impose upon him the legal duty to maintain her. Were she a member of his household, even though temporarily absent therefrom, she might properly be held to be a part of "his family" within the meaning of the provision, for there are many authorities in support of the proposition that the word "family" as here used means a collection of persons living together under one head, under such circumstances or conditions that the head is under a legal or moral obligation to support the other members, and the other members are dependent upon him for support. In 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 89, this is said to be the definition supported by the weight of authority. Under such circumstances, the son would be the "head of a family" according to the definition declared by our statute relative to the selection of homesteads. Civ. Code, § 1261. As noted in 2 Freeman on Executions, § 222, however, the above definition is not absolutely correct, for it is clear that one may be a member of the debtor's "family" although residing apart from him, and this is clearly implied by the language in subdivision 10 of section 690, Code Civ. Proc., "for the use of his family residing in this state." The mere fact that a man's wife and minor children reside in a different place from him does not render them any the less members of "his family" within the meaning of our statute. Such persons constitute "his family" in the strictest sense of the words and come fully within the objects of the exemption statutes. See Pettit v. Muskegon, etc., Co., 74 Mich. 214, 41 N. W. 900. But it seems clear that they are the only relatives who can properly be held to be members of "his family" within the meaning of the statute, without being members of his household or residing with him, with the possible exception of such other relatives as to whom exists on his part the legal obligation of support and maintenance. Our conclusion on this point is amply supported by the authorities. See 2 Freeman on Executions, § 222, and cases there cited. The showing made in this case was not sufficient to warrant the conclusion that defendant's mother was a member of "his family" within the meaning of the exemption statute. So far as was made to appear, the defendant therefore had no family on account of which exemption could legally be allowed, and the court should have directed that the whole sum placed under its control by the auditor be paid to plaintiff on account of her judgment.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

158 Cal. 451

LAWSON v. LAWSON. (S. F. 5,605.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1910.)

Garnishment (§ 177*)—Judgment—Time for Rendition.

Code Civ. Proc. § 710, permits a transcript of a money judgment to be filed with the auditor of any county or city from which money is owing to the judgment debtor, whereupon such official shall draw his warrant in favor of, or pay into the court, so much of the money due the judgment debtor as will cancel the judgment. Held, that the superior court had no power to order the payment of money to a judgment debtor due him as salary as a justice of the peace, which had been levied upon under the statute, until such money had been paid into the court, or the auditor's warrant therefor drawn in favor of the court had been delivered to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 326–328; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Sadie Lawson against Alfred B. Lawson. From an order directing a city auditor to pay certain money over to defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. H. McPike and Crittenden Thornton, for appellant. Leon Samuels and Jacob S. Meyer, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The parties to this appeal are the same as in appeal S. F. No. 5,652, this day decided. 111 Pac. 354. The order appealed from is one made by the superior court that rendered the divorce decree referred to in the opinion in that case, directing the auditor and treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco to pay to defendant certain money due him for salary as justice of the peace of said city and county, notwithstanding the claim of plaintiff that the same be applied on account of the amount due her under such divorce decree, and notwithstanding a full compliance by her with the provisions of section 710, Code Civ. Proc., in her effort to enforce such claim. This order was made by the court without notice to plaintiff, and upon the same day that plaintiff filed her affidavit, duly authenticated transcript of judgment, and claim with the auditor. The order was based upon an affidavit of defendant which set up the claim that the property was exempt from execution. It fully appears from the record that the money so levied upon was never received by or placed within the control of the superior court. In view of the language of section 710, Code Civ. Proc., it is clear that the superior court was without power to make any order for the disposition of the money thus levied upon until it had been paid into court, or the auditor's warrant therefor drawn in favor of the court (see Ruperich v. Baehr, 142 Cal. 190, 75 Pac. 782) had been delivered to the court. It has heretofore been so held by this court in a proceeding in prohibition involving the parties to this appeal, but no written decision was filed. Regardless of other considerations, it follows that the order must be reversed.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

158 Cal. 467

ROGERS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CRUZ COUNTY. (S. F. 5,704.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 4, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 115*)—Orders Appealable—Orders Subsequent to Judgment—Sale of Perishable Property.

An order made after final judgment for the sale of property as perishable, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 949, is appealable as provided by section 963.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 458*)—Order After Judgment—Sale of Perishable Property—Supersedeas.

Where, by an order after judgment notwithstanding appeal, property is ordered to be sold as perishable, which as a matter of law is not of that nature, or if its perishable character is doubtful, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to order a stay of proceedings pending an appeal from the order on proper terms and security, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 949, providing for sales of perishable property, does not provide for a stay pending an appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 458.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 458*)—Sale of Perishable Property Pending Appeal—Supersedeas.

Where property ordered sold as perishable pending appeal consists of real property and an electric railroad with the machinery and rolling stock for its operation, together with certain franchises to build and operate it, and no danger of immediate destruction or deterioration is apparent, a writ of supersedeas will be granted staying proceedings pending appeal from such order on the giving of a proper bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 458.*]

In Bank. Petition by one Rogers for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of Santa Cruz County, to restrain the execution of an order directing the sale of certain property as perishable. Proceeding treated as an application for supersedeas and allowed.

Walter H. Linforth, for petitioner. Netherton & Torchiana and Samuel Rosenheim, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner asks this court to prohibit the execution of an order of the superior court directing a sale of certain property as perishable property, under the supposed authority of section 949, Code Civ. Proc., authorizing the sale of perishable property, notwithstanding a stay of proceedings by virtue of an appeal. It may be that the question whether or not the property so ordered sold in any case is perishable is so far a question of fact within the jurisdiction of the superior court to determine that we would feel constrained to hold that lack of jurisdiction could not be shown and that prohibition would not lie. We do not deem it necessary to consider this question. The parties to the suit in which the appeal is taken, and who are interested in the property in question, have all appeared in this proceeding, and there has been a sufficient hearing to enable this court to perceive the facts material to the case. We think the best course is to treat the application as for a supersedeas, and that, so treated, the applicant is entitled to an order from this court staying the proceedings under the order appealed from. The order, being made after final judgment, is appealable. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. The statute does not provide for any stay of proceedings upon an appeal from an order for the sale of perishable property made under section 949. Yet, if there could be no stay in such a case under any circumstances, the appeal would sometimes prove wholly useless and ineffective as a remedy. In ordinary cases, doubtless there should be no stay of such an order. But if it appears that the court below has ordered a sale of property as perishable which clearly, and as a matter of law, is not of that nature, or if, as a matter of fact, it is extremely doubtful if it is perishable within the meaning of section 949, we have no doubt this court, by virtue of its inherent powers as a court of appeal, has power to order a stay of proceedings pending such appeal, upon such terms and such security as, in its discretion, it may deem proper.

In the present case the property ordered sold consists of real property, an electric railroad with the machinery and rolling stock for its operation, and certain franchises to build and operate it. There does not appear to be any danger of immediate destruction or material deterioration. We would perhaps be warranted in holding that the bond of $300 given upon the appeal would be ample security for any damage that may be caused thereby if it should prove unsuccessful. But to make the matter certain, we will direct that a writ of supersedeas, staying proceedings upon the order appealed from, shall issue upon the giving of an undertaking, approved by the clerk of this court, in the sum of $1,000, for the payment of all damages that the respondents, or either of them, may suffer because of the appeal and the delay occasioned by such stay of proceedings.

It is so ordered.

158 Cal. 469

CONTINENTAL BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N v. BOGGESS et al. (Sac. 1,760.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 4, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1099*)—Law of the Case.

A holding on appeal that certain averments of the answer constituted a good defense is the law of the case on a second appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4375; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 1010*)—Review—Findings of Fact.

The trial court having had before it evidence which pointed to the correctness of the facts found by it, its determination on the weight of evidence is not reviewable.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3979; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 177*)—CONTRACT BY AGENT—NOTICE TO PRINCIPAL.

Where persons in taking a mortgage to them as trustees, on their agreement to apply any funds coming to them by reason of the mortgage, first on debts of the mortgagor to others, and then on its debts to plaintiff, were acting for and on behalf of plaintiff, notice of their agreement was to be imputed to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 670–679; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

4. NOVATION (§ 5*)—TAKING MORTGAGE FROM THIRD PERSON.

It is an equitable defense to an action on a mortgage given by defendant to plaintiff to secure money which she borrowed of it, and then loaned to E., that E. gave a mortgage to trustees on they, acting for and on behalf of plaintiff, agreeing to apply any funds coming to them by reason of the mortgage, first to enumerated debts of E. to others, including defendant, and then to E.'s debt to plaintiff, defendant knowing of and consenting to said trust undertaken for her, and that the trustees received, through sale under the mortgage from E., enough to pay E.'s debts to the others, but instead of applying it thereto, directly or indirectly, turned it over to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

5. NOVATION (§ 12*)—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY.

Defendant's testimony that her husband, a stockholder in E., told her of the agreement on which it gave a mortgage to trustees, that they should apply the money from the mortgage sale, first to payment of E.'s debt to her, and then to its debt to plaintiff, and that she consented thereto, was competent to show notice to her of the agreement, and her ratification thereof, if proof of ratification was necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Though proof of defendant's ratification of an agreement for her benefit was unnecessary, admission of evidence thereof was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4155; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by the Continental Building & Loan Association against Emma A. Boggess and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gavin McNab and Thomas J. Geary, for appellant. W. W. Sanderson and W. H. Carlin, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage given by Emma A. Boggess and Riley A. Boggess to plaintiff to secure the payment of a promissory note for $3,000. The defendants had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Upon a former appeal (Continental Building & Loan Ass'n v. Boggess, 145 Cal. 30, 78 Pac. 245) this court reversed a judgment of foreclosure entered in favor of plaintiff. That judgment followed an order of the trial court striking out certain allegations of the answer of the defendants. The holding on appeal was that these averments constituted a good equitable defense to the action. This holding is binding on the present appeal, as the law of the case, and its correctness is not, in fact, questioned. Upon the second trial the court below found that the facts so averred were true. The principal contention of the appellant is that the evidence fails to support these findings.

The findings on the special defense set forth in substance these facts: Before and at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage in suit, Riley A. Boggess was interested in certain mining property in Colusa county known as the Abbott mines and owned a majority of the capital stock of the Empire Quicksilver Mining Company, a corporation which held options on said Abbott mines and other mining ground. The property covered by the mortgage here sued upon was the separate property of Emma A. Boggess, and she borrowed from plaintiff the $3,000 secured by said mortgage and loaned said sum to the Empire Quicksilver Mining Company. Thereafter and up to November, 1900, William Corbin, who was a director and the secretary and manager of the plaintiff corporation, advanced from time to time large sums of money aggregating $165,000 to the Empire Quicksilver Mining Company for the operation and development of said Abbott mines. Of this sum $159,000 was taken by him from the funds of the plaintiff. Upon the discovery by the directors of the plaintiff corporation that Corbin had so misused the corporate funds, Corbin assigned and transferred to the plaintiff corporation his claim against said mining company. Of the correctness of the findings to this point there is no question. But the appellant attacks further findings, which are as follows: Thereafter, on or about the 12th day of January, 1901, an agreement was entered into between the defendant Riley A. Boggess and others, owning in the aggregate more than two-thirds of the stock of the Empire Quicksilver Mining Company, on the one hand, and R. T. Harding, representing the plaintiff as its attorney and one of its directors, on the other, whereby the said mining company was to execute a mortgage in the sum of $377,000 upon all its property to R. T. Harding and Charles Page, as trustees, the said trustees undertaking and promising to pay out any funds that might come into their hands by reason of said mortgage and from the Abbott and adjacent mines in the following order: First, such sums as should be necessary to clear title to said mines; second, certain debts aggregating about $49,000 due by said Empire Company to certain creditors other than the plaintiff, including the moneys due and unpaid to the defendant Emma A. Boggess (which was the amount due on her promissory note and mortgage); and, third, after said payments aforesaid, the amount due by the Empire Company to the plaintiff. Such mortgage in the sum of $377,000 was accordingly executed by the Empire Quicksilver Mining Company to Harding and Page and was accepted by the latter upon the trusts and agreements above set forth. Thereafter, and while said mortgage was in full force and effect, there was paid to said trustees the sum of $268,000, out of which the trustees paid the cost of perfecting title to said Abbott mines and adjacent mines, expending therefor the sum of $176,000 and further sums aggregating $17,000; but said trustees refused to pay the amount due and unpaid to the creditors of said Empire Company (including said Emma A. Boggess) other than the corporation plaintiff, but, on the contrary, paid over the residue of said proceeds in the sum of $75,000 to the plaintiff in payment of the moneys misappropriated from it by Corbin, as aforesaid, and the plaintiff corporation thereby received, "as moneys of said trustees agreed to be paid to the defendant Emma A. Boggess, the full amount of all moneys at that time due, owing on or unpaid in any way from her to plaintiff upon or in connection with * * * said promissory note or mortgage." It is further found that at the time of the execution of said mortgage of $377,000, and of the receipt of said $75,000, the plaintiff had knowledge of all the terms of the trust undertaken by said trustees Harding and Page and of the rights of the defendant Emma A. Boggess, and likewise said defendant Emma A. Boggess had full knowledge of and consented to said trust so undertaken for her. This is followed by an additional finding that the promissory note sued upon and all of the indebtedness of the defendant Emma A. Boggess secured by said mortgage was fully paid to and received by plaintiff.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In examining the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these findings, it is perhaps hardly necessary to say that this court cannot undertake to pass upon the truthfulness of the testimony given by the respective witnesses where the record shows a substantial conflict in such testimony, and the trial court has accepted the statement of one witness rather than that of another. Here there was a very sharp and decided conflict between Mr. Harding and other witnesses regarding the exact nature of the transaction culminating in the giving of the $377,000 mortgage. Mr. Harding testified to a state of facts directly opposed in several important particulars to that found by the court below. But if that court had before it testimony which pointed to the correctness of the facts as found, its determination upon the weight of the evidence is beyond reach in this court. That the $377,000 mortgage was executed to Harding and Page upon the terms and conditions stated in the findings was testified to directly and positively by the witnesses Reece, Arms, and the defendant Riley A. Boggess. There was ample evidence that Harding was acting for and on behalf of the plaintiff, and notice of the agreement made by him was therefore to be imputed to said plaintiff.

The only remaining question of importance is whether the plaintiff did receive out of the sale of the mining property, over and above the amount necessary to pay the cost of clearing the titles, a sum sufficient to pay the claims of the creditors who were preferred under the agreement which resulted in the giving of the $377,000 mortgage. At the time of the execution of the mortgage Boggess was negotiating on behalf of the Empire Company for the sale of all of its properties to New York capitalists. There is evidence, i. e., that of Boggess, to the effect that $250,000 was subsequently paid on account of this purchase, $50,000 "in installments in periods of two or three months, the first installment being about February 2 or 3, 1901, and then the $200,000 was paid on or about the 4th of May, 1901." The disposition of that money is thus stated by Boggess: "That money went into the Continental Building & Loan Association and was paid to Mr. Corbin. He handled the $250,000. $176,000 net was used in getting title. That was for the Sulphur Banks and the Abbott, and the rest of the $250,000 and about $30,000 which he received from the net earnings of the mine went into the Continental Building & Loan Association. Outside of that it was required for title to the mines as stated, $176,000 and $10,000 which was paid to a man by the name of Watson and $4,000 to Mr. Reece on account of his notes. It was paid into the Continental Building & Loan Association. About $60,000 to the Continental Building & Loan Association. That is where it ultimately went." The statement that some part of the money paid by the prospective purchasers went into the hands of the plaintiff is corroborated by Harding's testimony on cross-examination.

There is, then, evidence sustaining the findings to the effect that an agreement was made on behalf of plaintiff whereby any moneys received by it over and above the amount necessary to clear title were to be applied in payment of the claim of the defendant Emma A. Boggess, and that sufficient money to pay this amount was subsequently received by the plaintiff. Under these facts, the plaintiff, as declared on the former appeal (see page 34 of 145 Cal., 78 Pac. 245), became equitably bound to apply the money received by it in payment of her debt to it.

We need not stop to inquire whether or not there is evidence to support that part of the findings which states that the money came into the hands of Harding and Page as trustees and was by them paid to the Continental Building & Loan Association. If the money resulting from the sale or operation of the mines did actually come into the hands of the plaintiff, it is immaterial whether it came through the medium of the trustees or otherwise. The essential point is that, according to findings which are sustained, the plaintiff agree to pay the claim of Emma A. Boggess out of any surplus moneys received from the mines, after paying the cost of clearing title. It was bound to apply any surplus moneys so received, whether or not they came to it directly from the trustees. The findings last referred to are, therefore, not material.

In addition to the attack on the sufficiency of the evidence, the only point made by appellant is that the court erred in permitting the defendant Emma A. Boggess to testify that her husband had told her of the terms of the agreement whereby the mines were mortgaged to Harding and Page, and that she had consented thereto.

This testimony was offered for the purpose of showing notice to Mrs. Boggess of an agreement made for her benefit and ratification of the same by her. If it was necessary to prove such ratification, the testimony was competent. If not, it is impossible to see how its admission could have prejudiced the appellant.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

(158 Cal. 474)

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. INGERSOLL.

(L. A. 2,552 and 2,660.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 3, 1910.)

1. Husband and Wife (§ 229*)—Enforcement of Trust—Complaint.

A complaint by a wife against her husband to enforce a trust as to her separate property, which alleged that money of her separate estate was received by the husband and invested by him in his own name in trust for her, that part of the money was invested in described real estate, title to which was taken in his name, that other parts thereof had been invested by him in other property, the character of which was unknown, that he had never rendered an account, and that a large amount of money was due the wife from him arising out of her funds, stated a cause of action for a personal judgment against the husband, in the absence of any objection that the claim relied on was not matured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

2. Judgment (§ 252*)—Conformity to Complaint—Prayer for Relief.

A complaint in an action by a wife against her husband to enforce a trust as to her separate estate, which prayed for the recovery of such sums of money as might be in the hands of the husband, justified a personal judgment against the husband for money which he had received in trust for the wife, and which he had expended in investments in his own name in a manner which he did not disclose at the trial so that it could not be traced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 441, 442; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

3. Judgment (§ 252*)—Conformity to Pleadings and Issues.

Where the complaint is answered, the court may, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 580, go beyond the prayer of the complaint and grant plaintiff any relief consistent with the case, and within the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 441, 442; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

4. Account (§ 11*)—Relief—Judgment.

In an action at law for an accounting, the usual relief is a personal judgment for the balance of money found due plaintiff after the accounting is had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Cent. Dig. §§ 26–61; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. Account (§ 22*)—Suit in Equity—Relief.

In a suit in equity for an accounting, the court may render a personal judgment where a more specific remedy is not practicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Cent. Dig. §§ 133, 134; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

6. Executors and Administrators (§ 431*)—Claims—Trusts—Presentation—Necessity.

An action to declare property held by a decedent in his own name the property of plaintiff as beneficiary of a trust imposed on decedent is not technically an action on a claim against decedent's estate, while an action to recover trust money converted by the trustee to his own use, the identity of which cannot be traced, is an action on a claim against the estate, and is not maintainable unless a claim therefor has been presented to the administrator for approval.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1631; Dec. Dig. § 431.*]

7. Action (§ 45*)—Joinder of Cause of Action—Enforcement of Trust.

One suing to establish and enforce a trust may recover in one action the specific property into which a part of the trust fund is traced and a personal judgment for the remainder which cannot be identified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 385, 403; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

8. Husband and Wife (§ 49¾*)—Gift or Trust—Creation—Presumptions.

The rule that the mere acquisition by a husband of the possession of his wife's separate estate, and his subsequent management and control thereof with her consent, do not necessarily show her intent to make a gift to the husband or to change its status to community property, but that the husband presumptively takes in trust for her, so that it devolves on him, on his claiming that it is a gift or loan, to prove that fact, is not affected by Civ. Code, §§ 2221, 2222, declaring that the acts or words of the parties must indicate with reasonable certainty the intention to create and accept a trust, and the subject, purpose, and beneficiary thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 256–260; Dec. Dig. § 49¾.*]

9. Trusts (§ 35*)—Express Trust—Creation.

Where a wife commits money of her separate estate to the custody and control of her husband, on his agreement that he will keep it for her and invest it for her use in his own name, the trust established is an express trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 45–50; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

10. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49¾*)—GIFT OR TRUST—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a husband received the money of the separate estate of his wife in trust for her, and not as a gift or loan.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 260; Dec. Dig. § 49¾.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE.

The question whether the proof is sufficient to establish a parol trust is primarily for the trial court, and the rule that the parol evidence must be clear and convincing does not mean that the evidence must be entirely plain and convincing to an appellate court, and it will not disturb the findings of the trial court where there is substantial evidence warranting a clear and satisfactory conviction to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3979; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

12. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 238*)—LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE—PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

Where a trustee mingles the trust money constituting the separate estate of his wife with the community property so as to destroy its identity, the trust will be enforced by a personal judgment for the amount of money not traceable into specific parcels.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 854; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

13. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 120*)—SEPARATE ESTATE—HUSBAND AS TRUSTEE FOR WIFE—COMMINGLING PROPERTY.

The fact that a husband holding money constituting the separate estate of his wife mingled it with the community property, so as to destroy the identity of the money of the wife, does not destroy the trust by converting the separate property into community property, though it may be a circumstance proving an agreement to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 430; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

14. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 103*)—EXPRESS TRUSTS—ENFORCEMENT—LIMITATIONS.

Limitations do not begin to run against the enforcement of an express trust until there is a repudiation of the trust by the trustee or some act by him amounting to a violation of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent.Dig. §§ 506–510; Dec.Dig. § 103.*]

15. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 220*)—ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST—LACHES.

A suit by a wife against her husband to establish and enforce a trust as to her separate property is not barred by laches, where the delay in instituting the suit does not legally prejudice the husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 801; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

16. TRUSTS (§ 219*)—MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE—LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE—INTEREST.

A charge of interest against a trustee is authorized, where the transactions are such that it is difficult or impracticable to ascertain with any certainty what profits he has realized by his unauthorized use of the trust funds; the charge being not a punishment, but only to enforce the principle that the trustee shall not profit from his unauthorized use of trust funds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 314–317; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

17. TRUSTS (§ 219*)—MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE—LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE—INTEREST.

The question whether any interest shall be charged against a trustee for his unauthorized use of the trust funds, and, if any, how much, depends on circumstances, and they may be such that a mere restoration of the trust property or its value, without interest, will satisfy the demands of justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 314–317; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

18. TRUSTS (§ 219*)—MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE—LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE—INTEREST.

Where a trustee has in fact prudently invested and managed the trust funds, though confused with his own property, the rule charging him with interest rests on his neglect in failing to keep accurate accounts, and on the fact that by his neglect the actual profits realized have been made difficult to ascertain, and when the trustee is able to show that the mingled fund was well managed and what the profits are, and that the profits actually made do not exceed a specified amount, justice requires that the charge shall be limited to the equivalent of the gains actually made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 314–317; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

19. TRUSTS (§ 231*)—MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE—LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE.

Where the beneficiary knew that the trustee mingled the trust funds with his own money and did not object, and no charge of fraud or bad faith is made, the trustee should be held liable only for the results of the investments prudently made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 330–335; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

20. TRUSTS (§ 81*)—RESULTING TRUSTS.

Payment by a husband of a part of the price of land purchaser by him with money of his wife held in trust by him is in legal effect a payment by her, and a trust results in her favor for an interest equaling her share of the price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

21. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 4*)—SUPPORT OF WIFE—OBLIGATION OF HUSBAND.

A husband must maintain his wife, and must furnish her money to pay such of the living expenses as he leaves her to look after, or pay them himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

22. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 232*)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In the absence of evidence showing the fund from which a husband paid the living expenses of his wife, it is presumed that he paid them out of community funds, instead of her separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 844; Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

23. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 151*)—SUPPORT OF WIFE—OBLIGATION OF HUSBAND.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 174, 176, making a husband liable for articles necessary for his wife's support, and requiring a wife to support the husband out of her separate property, when he has no separate property, and there is no community property, and he is unable to support himself, a wife's separate property acquired by devise or succession will not be resorted to even for her support, except where the community property fails and the husband refuses to pay or supply from his separate estate; but the wife may consent to the use of her separate estate for such support.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 582–595; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Consolidated actions by the Title Insurance & Trust Company, executor of Rosetta S.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Ingersoll, deceased, against O. K. Ingersoll. From judgments for plaintiff in each action, defendant appeals. Affirmed in part; reversed and remanded in part.

Valentine & Newby, for appellant. Stephens & Stephens, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The record before us presents appeals in two different cases bearing the same title. One is a case in the superior court of Los Angeles county numbered, in that court, 42,663. The other is a case numbered, in that court, 48,027, which was begun during the pendency of the case first mentioned. The first-mentioned case was before this court upon former appeals by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. That judgment and order were reversed because of the erroneous admission of evidence of the good character of the defendant. Title, etc., Co. v. Ingersoll, 153 Cal. 1, 94 Pac. 94. The first case involved the question of the investment by the defendant of certain moneys belonging to the separate estate of the deceased, who was his wife, and its principal objects appear to have been to impress a trust in her favor upon the property in which her money was invested, so far as it could be traced, to obtain an accounting from the defendant, as trustee, as to the disposition of the trust money, and the income and profits thereof, and a judgment for the amount of money intrusted to him and not identified and traced to specific property. In the course of the trial it was discovered that a certain part of the separate estate of the wife had been used to purchase a parcel of real estate, not described in the complaint, and thereupon the second suit was begun to establish a trust in behalf of the deceased as to an interest in that lot equal to the proportion which her part of the purchase money bore to the whole price thereof. The two cases were consolidated and tried together. The judgment in each case was in favor of the plaintiff, and a new trial was denied. The defendant has appealed in each case from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first action was begun on October 16, 1903, by Rosetta S. Ingersoll in her lifetime. On her death, the present plaintiff was substituted in her place. The defendant and the deceased were married in the year 1875, and continued in the relation of husband and wife until her death, which occurred on November 6, 1903. They never had any children. The complaint avers that during the marriage Rosetta S. Ingersoll received sums of money belonging to her separate estate, aggregating about $30,000, all of which, with the consent and acquiescence of the said wife, was received by the husband and invested by him, in his own name, in trust for her use and benefit, in pursuance of an agreement and understanding between them that he should receive and hold said money and all property in which it might be invested, if invested in his name, in trust for her use and benefit. It was alleged that part of said money was invested by him in certain described real property, the title to which, in accordance with said agreement, was taken and still remains in his name; that other parts thereof have been invested by him in other property, the character and description of which is unknown to plaintiff; that he has received large sums as rents, issues, and profits of said separate estate in his control; that he has never rendered an account to plaintiff; and that a large amount of money is due her from him, arising out of her said funds. The judgment was that the plaintiff recover of the defendant the sums of money of the wife's separate estate found to have been received by him in trust for her and not traced into any specific property, with compound interest at 6 per cent. per annum thereon, amounting in the aggregate to $40,764.76, and costs of suit, and that he holds certain described bank stock in trust for her estate, that he account to the estate for the dividends received thereon and transfer the stock to the plaintiff as executor thereof.

The defendant claims that the facts stated in the complaint do not authorize a personal judgment against the defendant. The complaint alleged that a large amount of money was due the plaintiff from the defendant. No point being made to the effect that a matured claim was not stated, this allegation, in connection with the other averments above given, is sufficient to authorize a personal judgment for such sum as the court found had been received by him in trust for her and which was not accounted for by a showing from him that it had been invested in some specific property for her use. 1 Cyc. 436, 438, 448; Green v. Brooks, 81 Cal. 333, 22 Pac. 849. The point that there is no prayer for personal judgment, except "for the recovery of such sums of money as may be in the hands of the defendant," and that this, if strictly construed, would not include any money which he had expended in the purchase of property to which the court could not trace it, but only that found to be still on hand, is without substantial merit. A prayer for general relief would have sufficed. 1 Cyc. 439. Money which he had received in trust for her, and which he had expended in investments in his own name, in a manner which he did not disclose at the trial, so that it could not be traced, would be money "in the hands of the defendant," within the meaning of that phrase as used in the prayer of the complaint. It was money thus in his "hands" which constituted the larger part of the sum recovered. Besides this, there was an answer to the complaint, and in such a case the court may go beyond the prayer of the complaint and grant the plaintiff "any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." Code Civ. Proc. § 580. In an action for an accounting it is the proper practice to give a personal judgment for the balance of money found to be due the plaintiff after such accounting is had. Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 577, 26 Pac. 356. It was the usual relief in an action at law for an accounting. 1 Cyc. 408, 413. In equity, since the court there has larger powers than strictly at law, other and more effective relief may be given; but the court may render a personal judgment if a more specific remedy is not practicable. 1 Cyc. 416.

It is not a case where the plaintiff is required to elect between a suit in equity to trace trust property and recover it in specie, and an action to recover a personal judgment for the amount of trust funds converted by a trustee. In cases against an estate of a decedent in course of administration this necessity sometimes arises, because an action to declare certain property, held by the decedent in his own name, the property of the plaintiff, as beneficiary of a trust imposed on the decedent, is not, technically considered, an action upon a claim against the decedent's estate; whereas, an action to recover trust money converted by him to his own use, the identity of which cannot be traced, is an action upon a claim against the estate and cannot be maintained unless a claim therefor has been presented to the administrator for approval. Cases of this character have no application to the case at bar. The plaintiff had the right to allege the trust relation, the receipt of trust funds, the failure to account, and to recover in one action the specific property into which a portion of the fund is traced, and a personal judgment for the remainder which cannot be identified. The beneficiary of a trust, of course, cannot have a judgment declaring the defendant a trustee of specific property bought with trust funds, and decreeing such property to be the property of the beneficiary, and also a personal judgment for the money invested by the defendant in that property. So far as the trust fund is traced to specific property which the beneficiary elects to take, the part of the fund thus accounted for constitutes a credit on the general account, and personal judgment can be given only for the balance. This was the course followed by the court. There is no objection to the practice of trying the entire case in one action, and no inconsistency in the claims of plaintiff, provided the account is thus separated and judgment is not twice given for the same money.

The defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to establish the finding that the money of his wife's separate estate was received by him in pursuance of an agreement or understanding that he was to hold and invest it for her use. Upon this point, in the decision upon the former appeal, it was said that the mere acquirement of the possession of the wife's separate property by the husband, and his subsequent management and control of the same, all with her consent, do not necessarily show an intent on her part to make a gift thereof to the husband, or to change its status to community property, but that the effect of these facts, without explanation, was to raise a presumption that it continues to be her separate property and that the husband takes it in trust for her, that it devolves on the husband who claims that it is a gift or loan to prove the fact, but that this may be done by a showing of the nature of the transaction and the circumstances as well as by proof of an express agreement. 153 Cal. 5, 94 Pac. 94. These propositions are well supported by the authorities cited in the former opinion. It is unnecessary here to repeat them. Even if, as contended by appellant here, they were unnecessary to the decision and do not constitute the law of the case on the present appeal, we are entirely satisfied with the law as there stated. We do not find anything in sections 2221 and 2222 of the Civil Code that changes or affects this rule. They declare that the acts or words of the parties must indicate "with reasonable certainty" the intention to create and accept a trust and the subject, purpose, and beneficiary thereof. The effect of the authorities referred to is that the circumstances above detailed are sufficient to meet these tests. The Code sections merely declare the law as it previously existed. That the money in question was the separate estate of Mrs. Ingersoll, that the defendant was her husband, and that he received, invested, managed, and controlled it, in his own name, with her consent and in accordance with her wish, are facts established by his own testimony on the trial. The presumption of a trust relation therefore arises, and the trust must be deemed to have been established, unless there was other evidence of such a character that the court below was bound to give it sufficient force and weight to overthrow that presumption.

It is insisted by the appellant, however, that the cases cited in the former opinion all relate to involuntary trusts, that the principle of evidence established thereby has no application to express trusts, that the only trust claimed to exist in the case at bar is an express trust, since if an involuntary trust, only, is shown, the plaintiff's action is clearly barred by the statute of limitations. We cannot agree with this contention. Where a wife commits money of her separate estate to the custody and control of her husband, upon his agreement that he will keep it for her and invest it for her use in his own name, the trust established by the transaction is an express trust. The substance of the rule stated in the former opinion is that when proof is made of the circumstances stated, namely, that she committed her money to his keeping and control, and that he subsequently managed and controlled it, all with her consent, these circumstances unexplained raise an inference that there was an agreement between the two that he should take care of it for her and invest it for her use, and that if it further appears that he invested it in his own name with her consent, and nothing farther is shown, an inference is raised that he has agreed to hold it in his name in trust for her. Such a trust is an express trust. The facts stated, and the reasoning of the decisions in the authorities referred to, show that the rule is not confined to cases of involuntary trusts.

The finding of the court implies that the defendant did not succeed in showing that the money of his wife was received by him as a gift or loan from her to him, or as a contribution from her to the community estate; that the evidence in his behalf did not rebut the aforesaid presumption. We cannot say that the evidence was of such a character as to compel the conclusion that such a gift, loan, or contribution was made by her. Aside from his express denials, it is much more consistent with the inference made by the court that there was an agreement by him to hold it in trust for her. In his own testimony, which was extended to great length and occupied many days' time in the giving, he does not mention any word or act of his wife indicating any intention on her part to make a loan to him, or a gift either to him or to the community estate. In the absence of such intent, the law would make him her custodian or trustee, and the equitable title to the property would remain in her. The relations of the parties and their conduct with respect to her money justified the court in preferring the inference that the understanding was that he was to act as trustee for her in the management and disposition of it. He expressly denied that there ever was any such understanding or agreement between them. But his conduct as a witness, so far as we can judge from the record, was such that the court may have discredited him on all points wherein his testimony was in his own favor and the conditions were such that contradictory evidence could not be produced. The court was so impressed by this conduct that it made a finding stating that upon the trial he had "willfully and knowingly given false testimony concerning matters material to the issue." There was some evidence in support of this statement, and, although it is not a material finding, it shows that the court applied the doctrine that "a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be discredited in others." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061. Our conclusion is that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings on the subject of the trust.

Appellant contends that, even if the evidence would have been sufficient in an ordinary case, it is not of the clear and convincing character necessary to establish a parol trust, or to overcome the presumption that the property was community property. The proof that the money, when received, was her separate estate, was positive and indisputable. With respect to the trust it was not so strong. But upon a case of this kind, as in others, the question whether the proof is sufficiently strong and convincing is primarily addressed to the trial court, "and this court must accept the determination of the trial court thereon as conclusive." Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 334, 27 Pac. 186; Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 688, 96 Pac. 357; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 637, 87 Pac. 93. The rule "does not mean that the evidence in the record must be entirely plain and convincing to an appellate court. * * * It will not disturb the finding of the trial court * * * where there is substantial evidence warranting a clear and satisfactory conviction to that effect." Wadleigh v. Phelps, supra. We cannot here give a statement of all the evidence upon which the trial court gave its decision. It was doubtless based in part on the demeanor of the defendant as a witness on the trial. It is sufficient to say that we cannot say that the trial court disregarded this rule in making its findings (Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 58, 30 Pac. 1020, 31 Am. St. Rep. 175), and that, considering the obligations of the husband to the wife, the decision does not appear to be unjust.

The fact that the trust money was in part commingled with the community property so as to destroy its specific identity does not necessarily destroy the trust as to that part, nor prevent its enforcement. It prevents the court from tracing it and declaring any specific parcel of property to be trust property; but the trust may still be enforced by a personal judgment against the husband for the amount of money not traceable into specific parcels. Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 23, 89 Am. Dec. 141. The cases cited by the appellant (Dimmick v. Dimmick, 95 Cal. 323, 30 Pac. 547; Reid v. Reid, 112 Cal. 278, 44 Pac. 564; Est. of Boody, 113 Cal. 686, 45 Pac. 858; Davis v. Green, 122 Cal. 366, 55 Pac. 9; Hamilton v. Hubbard, 134 Cal. 604, 65 Pac. 321, 66 Pac. 860), to the effect that specific parcels cannot be charged with a trust or declared the wife's separate estate, where the wife's money has been commingled with other property and cannot be identified and traced into the specific parcels, are not contrary to this doctrine. Nor does such commingling and loss of identity destroy the trust by converting the separate property into community property. It may be a circumstance tending to prove an agreement to convert it; but when the trial court, from all the circumstances, has concluded that it was not mingled in pursuance of any agreement to make it community property, but was mingled by the husband after he had received it in trust, we are bound by this conclusion. The only effect of such commingling, in that case, is to prevent identification, and the husband, as holder of the community property, with which he has mingled the trust property, is liable personally for the trust money. Appellant suggests that the rights of creditors of the community, or of third persons dealing with the husband, might be jeopardized by this doctrine. The answer is that no such rights are here involved, and that if third persons have equities superior to those of the wife they would be fully protected and enforced in a proper action.

We do not find anything in the decision in Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 46 Pac. 458, that is inconsistent with our conclusions here. In that case the facts found showed that there was no trust relation, as alleged, and the decision merely holds that a personal judgment as for money had and received, in a case based on a complaint to enforce a trust, was a judgment upon a cause of action not alleged. The question of the proper form of judgment and the relief to be given in an action for an accounting was not discussed.

The defense of the statute of limitations is made, and it is also claimed that the action is barred by laches. These defenses are necessarily based on the proposition that the trust alleged and found was an involuntary trust, and that, consequently, the statute of limitations began to run as soon as the trust arose. But it is apparent from the allegations, the findings, and the evidence that, if there was any trust at all in favor of the wife, it was an express trust. The husband was to take her money, keep it for her, invest it for her, and apply it to her use, recognizing, of course, her interest and rights in the property into which it went and her right to reclaim the money or property at any time she saw fit. The evidence shows that they lived together in entire harmony, and that she had the utmost confidence in him and in his method of caring for and using her money, until some two or three months prior to the beginning of the action. There is nothing to show that he ever at any time repudiated the trust relation or refused to comply with such requests as she made regarding her money. She had no occasion or cause for beginning any suit against him concerning it, and she appeared to be entirely satisfied with his management and disposition of it. They consulted together in regard to the investments he made from time to time, and no disagreement arose between them. If it was a trust at all, it was an express trust of a continuing character. In such cases it is well settled that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until there is a repudiation of the trust by the trustee, or some act by him which amounts to a violation of the trust. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 176; Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 582, 26 Pac. 1108; Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 359, 62 Pac. 555. There is no ground for the application of the doctrine of laches. It is plain that no legal prejudice will be caused to the defendant by reason of the delay, nor by reason of a just enforcement of the trust.

We have discussed and decided the preceding propositions arising in the original case, because they are either necessary to the present disposition of it, or will probably again arise upon a new trial in the court below. We now come to an objection which makes it necessary to reverse the judgment in part.

The court found that the defendant had received, of his wife's money, in trust, the sum of $20,972.44. Of this $1,590 was accounted for by showing that it was used to buy certain specific property as to which the court declared a trust in her favor. The balance of $19,382.44 remained, and there is no finding that any of it was used to buy any specific parcel of property held by the defendant. Upon this balance the court computed and charged to the defendant compound interest at 6 per cent. per annum upon each sum received from the date it was received to July 31, 1909, the date of the judgment. This interest amounted to $21,382.32, and together with the principal it made up the sum of $40,764.76 for which the court gave personal judgment against the defendant. The receipts of his wife's money began in 1888, and up to 1890 he had received only $169 thereof. The findings state that in 1875, at the time of his marriage, he had $10,000 worth of property, including a farm in Kansas worth $5,000; that in 1885, with his separate funds, he bought a ranch in California for $3,780 which he sold in 1887 for $12,200. Nothing further is expressly found in regard to the amount of his receipts from his own separate property and community gains and earnings. The evidence shows, without conflict, that for the years from 1885 to 1890, inclusive, from his income, there was an accumulation of about $8,200 above living expenses, and that up to 1903 he had received from profits on the sale of his Kansas farm $3,300, and from sources other than his wife's funds $2,200. His bank books and diaries show total receipts amounting to over $82,000, in addition to those from his wife. But, as much of this represents successive deposits of the same money, it cannot be taken as the true amount of such receipts. From the above facts, it is clear, however, that his separate property amounted to at least $20,000, and that the accumulations from community earnings added at least $10,000 more to his estate. The findings state that, during all these years up to the time the suit was begun in 1903, he was an active business man, engaged in divers lines of business, that he never suffered any loss from bad loans or investments, that the living expenses of himself and wife amounted to only $600 a year, and that he never kept the different funds of his separate estate, the community earnings, and his wife's money separated in any way.

The only reasonable deduction from these facts is that his separate estate and the community earnings must have contributed at least as much to the accumulation of the property held by him and in his name at the time the action was begun as did the money received by him from his wife. But the court further finds that, at the time the suit was begun, the only property of any character held by the defendant, or in which he had any interest, consisted of seven parcels of real estate, nine certificates of stock in various banks, and $226.79 in money, and that for the real estate and stocks he had paid prices amounting in the aggregate to $36,620. In this list of prices there was included $840 that was also accounted for as money of the wife paid on the real estate involved in case No. 48,027 aforesaid, on account of which a trust was in that action declared to that extent in that property in her favor. Deducting that sum leaves $35,780 as the total aggregate price of all his interests and property. The land and stock purchased in the year 1900 and after represented $28,740 of this sum. It will thus be seen that at the time the suit was begun, if the findings are correct, all the property the defendant had, as the result of his investments of over $30,000 of his own money and $19,382.44 of his wife's money mingled together, and his admitted careful management, was this list of property aggregating a total investment of $36,006.79. On account of this investment of these joint funds, more than three-fourths of which was made after January 1, 1900, the court, in July, 1909, charged him with the sum of $40,764.76 as the result of his investment of his wife's money alone.

There is no finding nor evidence that the property in which it was found to be invested had increased in value after it was purchased. There is no averment or claim that the defendant had been guilty of any fraud or wrongdoing, or that he had mismanaged, misused, or squandered any of the money, either his own or that of his wife. The evidence shows that in addition to the $600 a year for living expenses there were other expenses, such as traveling expenses of the wife upon trips to the East and in California, and expenses of carrying on his farms and business, all of which were paid out of his income; but in the above estimate of net community contributions to the capital we have made ample allowance and deductions for these additional expenses.

The necessary conclusion is that the defendant did not obtain from his investments of the wife's money a profit equal to 6 per cent. per annum compound interest. The case made by the record does not authorize such a charge. A charge of compound interest, or simple interest, is authorized where the transactions are of such a nature that it is extremely difficult or impracticable to ascertain with any degree of certainty what profit was realized from the trust fund. Estate of Clark, 53 Cal. 359. It is not made for the purpose of punishing the trustee, but to enforce the principle of equity that the trustee shall not be permitted to make any profit from the unauthorized use of the trust funds. Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 615, 35 Pac. 345, 639. It is imposed "for the purpose of attaining the actual or presumed gains, and to make certain that nothing of profit or advantage remains to the trustee, except, perhaps, his commission or compensation." Cruce v. Cruce, 81 Mo. 684, approved in Wheeler v. Bolton, 92 Cal. 172, 28 Pac. 558. The question whether any interest should be charged, and, if any, how much, depends on the circumstances of the particular case, and they may be such that a mere restoration of the property, or its value, without any interest, would be all that justice would require. Wheeler v. Bolton, supra.

From these statements of the underlying reasons of the rule allowing interest in such cases, it is plain that where the trustee has, in fact, prudently invested and managed the trust funds, although mingled and confused with his own money, the rule that he is to be charged with interest thereon upon an accounting rests principally, if not entirely, on his neglect in failing to keep accurate accounts and on the fact that by his neglect the actual profits realized have been made difficult to ascertain. When the trustee, notwithstanding his failure to keep the trust funds separate from his own, is able to show that the mingled fund was well managed and wisely invested and what the profits are, or that the profits actually made do not exceed a certain amount, all the reasons for imposing a charge of interest exceeding such profits are wanting, and justice requires that the charge be limited to the equivalent of the gains actually made. It is conceded in this case that the defendant was economical, prudent, energetic, and thrifty in the management and investment of these funds and his own in common. As he has shown to the satisfaction of the court that the investments did not produce the interest charged, it follows that the charge was excessive and should not have been made.

In this connection, and as a further reason for rejecting the charge of interest in excess of the actual profits shown, it is to be observed that the defendant, in thus mixing his wife's money with his own, did not violate the trust proven. She gave the money to him for the very purpose of having him deposit it with his own in the bank account kept in his name or in the names of both of them, and with the intention that he should invest it in his own name. Some of it she herself deposited in the common account, and all of it was so deposited with her knowledge, consent, and approval. In all this he was carrying out her wish and was not violating the trust, but was executing it. It further appears that she knew of the investments which he made of the common fund with which her money was thus with her approval mingled, and that she either approved of them, consented to them, or did not object to them. In these circumstances, it is clear that she has practically agreed to the actual investments made, and has no right to object to anything, except his neglect or failure to keep an account of her money separated from his own. When he shows, as he does show, if the findings state the case accurately, that the property he has on hand constitutes the result of these investments, she cannot, in justice, be allowed to receive more than the equivalent of her just share thereof. It may be true, as she claims, that she did not know that he was not keeping such an account. But she does not charge him with any fraud or bad faith in this respect. She can only claim the results of the investments, since she admits that they were prudently made. The mere fact that they were mingled with his own does not entitle her to more, when he makes complete disclosure of all his transactions, or when the court is able to ascertain the actual profits that were realized from the entire fund. She occupies more nearly the position of a silent partner in a well-managed business enterprise, than that of a beneficiary of trust funds wrongfully mingled and used with his own by a trustee. Upon the facts shown, she is entitled only to a sum equal to such proportion of the value of the property held by him at the time the suit was begun, as the money which she contributed to the purchase price thereof bears to the whole purchase price. If relief could be given by allotting to her such proportionate interest in the property itself, perhaps that method would be preferable. If it cannot conveniently be done in that manner, then she should be given a personal judgment for that proportion of its present value, and not for anything more.

In addition to the findings in the first case showing the receipt of his wife's moneys which the court was unable to trace into any specific parcel of property, and on account of which it gave her personal judgment against the defendant, the court found that he received $750 of her money and with it purchased certain 10 shares of stock in the First National Bank of Monrovia, in his name for her use. The judgment declared the defendant a trustee of this stock for the use and benefit of her estate. The claim that the finding that this money was received in trust by him is not supported by the evidence is disposed of by what has been said. It is sufficient to say further on this branch of the case that the evidence is sufficient to show that the price of the stock was paid out of the money received from her separate estate.

The matter involved in the second case, numbered 48,027 in the superior court, was the purchase by the defendant of a certain lot on Maple avenue in the city of Los Angeles. It was clearly proven that the price was $1,750, and that $840 of the identical money out of which the price was paid had just been received by the defendant from money belonging to her separate estate, and that it was received upon the same terms and understanding as the other moneys received by him from that source. The court found and adjudged that her estate was the equitable owner of $^{12}/_{25}$ of this lot and directed a conveyance thereof to the plaintiff as executor of the estate. This finding and judgment was clearly correct. Payment of a part of the price by him with her money held in trust by him was the same, in legal effect, as between the parties, as a payment by her. It created a resulting trust in her favor for an interest which equaled her proportion of the price. Moultrie v. Wright, 154 Cal. 523, 98 Pac. 257, and cases there cited.

Our conclusion on the respective appeals is that the judgment in the first action, in so far as it declares and enforces a trust in respect to the 10 shares of stock in the First National Bank of Monrovia, purchased by defendant on December 18, 1891, should be affirmed; that the judgment and order appealed from in the case numbered 48,027 in the superior court of Los Angeles county should be affirmed; that the personal judgment in the first action should be reversed; and that a new trial should be granted as to a part of the issues relating thereto, but not as to all. The case has been twice tried upon substantially the same evidence. Upon appeal after the first trial we were constrained to uphold the findings that no trust relation was established, solely because of the fact that this court cannot weigh the evidence and decide between the inconsistent inferences which may sometimes be drawn from the same facts, and the judgment was reversed solely because of the admission of evidence bearing upon this issue, which we held to be incompetent, and which would have been harmless, but for the fact that the finding seemed of doubtful verity. The case has been tried again, and it apparently received careful reconsideration in the lower court. We are satisfied with the findings and conclusions of that court on all points, except the conclusion as to the amount of interest or profit to be charged against the defendant and included in the personal judgment, and the finding that at the time the action was begun the defendant owned no property of any character, except that described in finding 13. It is claimed by the respondent that the defendant owned other property at that time, in addition to that described in the finding, and that the property described had greatly increased in value after its purchase, so that the amount allowed against the defendant is not, in fact, disproportionate to respondent's just share of the present value of the accumulations. It is claimed by the defendant that the amounts expended, other than for mere living, should be taken into the account, as perhaps they should, if it is necessary to do so in order to ascertain how much of his income was saved and accumulated. There should be a new trial of the question whether he had other property and as to the amount justly allowable to respondent as interest or profit, and upon those issues only.

Inasmuch as the question may arise upon the trial of these issues, it is necessary to say something upon the subject of the liability of a husband for the maintenance of his wife. The law imposes on him the duty to maintain his wife. Chaffee v. Browne, 109 Cal. 219, 41 Pac. 1028; Bashore v. Parker, 146 Cal. 530, 80 Pac. 707. This means that it is his duty to furnish her money to pay such of the living expenses as he leaves it to her to look after, or to pay them himself. In the absence of evidence showing the fund from which he paid these expenses, it will be presumed to be of community funds, rather than from her separate property. Her separate property, acquired by devise or succession, will not be resorted to, even for her support, except where the community property fails and he refuses to pay or supply from his separate estate. Civ. Code, §§ 174, 176. But, of course, she may consent to the use of her own separate estate, and if so it should be charged to her accordingly.

The judgment and order appealed from in case numbered 48,027, in the superior court, being case L. A. No. 2,660 in this court, are affirmed. The judgment and order in the other case, so far as they relate to the aforesaid 10 shares of stock in the First National Bank of Monrovia, are affirmed. The personal judgment for $40,764.76 is reversed, and the order denying a new trial is reversed as to a part of the issues only as hereinbefore indicated, and otherwise it is affirmed. The cause is remanded, and the superior court is directed to try the issues only so far as may be necessary to determine how much should be allowed to the plaintiff in lieu of profits received by defendant in the investment and use of her money in his own name, or her just proportion or interest in the property on hand at the time the action was begun, or its subsequent transmutations, if that method shall be deemed more just, advisable, and convenient. The appellant shall recover only one-half the costs of appeal.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

158 Cal. 453

In re SANITARY BOARD OF EAST FRUITVALE SANITARY DIST.

(S. F. 5,575.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 7*)—Concurrent Corporations.

There cannot be at the same time within the same territory two distinct municipal corporations, exercising the same powers, jurisdiction, and privileges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 35*)—Annexation—Effect.

Generally, where one municipal corporation is annexed to another, the annexing city takes over the functions of the other, which by virtue of the annexation is extinguished, and its properties, powers, and duties are vested in the corporation of which it has become a part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 102, 103; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

3. Municipal Corporations (§ 64*)—Legislative Control.

In the absence of constitutional restriction, the Legislature has absolute power over the organization, dissolution, extent, powers, and liabilities of municipal and other public corporations established as agencies of the state for purposes of local government.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 156, 157; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

4. Municipal Corporations (§ 35*)—Changing Boundaries—Effect.

The effect of enlarging or diminishing the boundaries, or of consolidating or annexing municipal corporations, is governed by legislative intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 102, 103; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

5. Appeal and Error (§ 843*)—Review—Constitutional Provisions.

Where a question on appeal can be decided without challenging the Legislature's power in a given particular, that course will be followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

6. Municipal Corporations (§ 35*)—Annexation of Sanitary Districts—Effect.

A sanitary district, formed under St. 1891, c. 161, is extinguished and dissolved on annexation of its territory to an adjacent municipal corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

7. Municipal Corporations (§ 35*)—Sanitary Districts — Dissolution — Effect on Pending Bond Proceedings.

Bond proceedings, pending in a sanitary district formed under St. 1891, c. 161, on its dissolution by annexation to a city, fall, and any further steps to construct sewers in the territory must be initiated and conducted by the city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

8. Municipal Corporations (§ 450*)—Separate Sewer Districts — Authority for Creation.

Act April 21, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 673), expressly authorizes creation of separate sewer districts within municipalities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 450.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by the Sanitary Board of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District to determine its right to issue bonds, and the validity of such bonds. From the judgment, the city of Oakland appeals. Reversed, with directions.

J. W. Stetson, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and John J. Allen (T. S. Gray and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This is a proceeding instituted by the Sanitary Board of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District, pursuant to section 18 of the act for the formation of sanitary districts (St. 1891, p. 223), to determine the right of the board to issue bonds and the validity of such bonds. The East Fruitvale Sanitary District was organized in May, 1909, under the provisions of said act. The territory comprising the district is in the county of Alameda, and no part of it was, at the time the district was organized, within the boundaries of any municipal corporation. Following such organization the sanitary board initiated proceedings for the construction of a sewer system at an estimated cost of $54,000, to be raised by an issue of bonds of the district. An election was duly called for and held on the 10th day of July, 1909, and at such election the requisite two-thirds of the votes were, as shown by a canvass regularly had, cast in favor of the issuance of the bonds. Thereafter, on the 3d day of December, 1909, said sanitary board passed an order that the bonds of the district be issued as prescribed in the act and as directed by the vote of the electors of the district. All of the foregoing proceedings for the formation of the district and the steps precedent to the issuance of the bonds were regularly taken in strict compliance with the terms of the law governing sanitary districts.

On November 16, 1909, an election regularly called was held for the purpose of annexing to the city of Oakland certain adjacent territory, which included all of the territory embraced within the East Fruitvale Sanitary District. At said election a majority of the votes cast in the said city and a majority of the votes cast in the territory sought to be annexed were in favor of annexation. A certified statement of the result of the election was filed with the Secretary of State on the 8th day of December, 1909. The city of Oakland appeared in the present proceeding and contested the right of the sanitary board to issue the bonds. The contention of the city was and is that by the annexation the territory comprised in the sanitary district was merged into the municipal corporation of which it became a part, and that the power of such district to construct sewers or to issue bonds therefor ceased. The court below held to the contrary; its fifth conclusion of law being as follows: "That the East Fruitvale Sanitary District was not dissolved by reason of said annexation of the territory of said district to the city of Oakland and that the sanitary board of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District did not cede its powers to the council of the city of Oakland over the territory of the said district annexed to the city of Oakland. That the right of the sanitary board of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District to issue the bonds of said district, which, as set forth in the petition on file in the above-entitled matter, it intends to issue, has in no way been affected by the annexation of the territory of the district to the city of Oakland." Accordingly the court gave judgment declaring that said district is a duly and legally organized sanitary district "and that the said sanitary district possesses full power and authority to issue and sell, from time to time, the bonds of said sanitary district to the amount of $54,000." The city of Oakland appeals from this judgment.

Under section 5 of the act providing for the formation of sanitary districts, every such district has power to have and to use a common seal and sue and be sued by its name, to construct and maintain and keep clean such sewers and drains as in the judgment of the sanitary board shall be proper, and for this purpose to acquire, by purchase, gift, devise, condemnation, or otherwise, such property and rights of way as may be necessary, and to pay for and hold the same, and make contracts, deeds, etc., necessary or proper to the exercise of any of the powers of the district, to issue bonds, and to assess, levy, and collect taxes to pay the principal and interest on the same, and the cost of laying or maintaining any sewer or sewers that may be constructed subsequent to the issuance of said bonds, or any lawful claims against said district, to employ all necessary agents and assistants and pay the same, to lay its sewers and drains in any public street or road of the county, to make and enforce all necessary and proper regulations for the removal of garbage and the cleanliness of the streets and roads of the district, and for the purpose of guarding against the spread of contagious and infectious diseases and for the isolation of persons and houses affected by such diseases, and all other sanitary regulations not in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the state, to impose and fix penalties or forfeitures for any violation of its regulations or orders and to fix the penalty therefor, to call, hold, and conduct all elections necessary or proper after the formation of the district, to prescribe the time and manner of assessing, levying, and collecting taxes for sanitary purposes, to compel all residents and property owners within the district to connect their houses and habitations with the street sewers and drains, and, generally, to do and perform any and all acts necessary and proper to the complete exercise of any of its powers or the purposes for which it was formed.

The city of Oakland is governed by a freeholders' charter approved by joint resolution of the two houses of the Legislature adopted February 14, 1889. St. 1889, p. 513. This charter confers upon the city so formed every power ordinarily incident to the complete organization of a municipal corporation. These powers include each and every power conferred upon sanitary districts by section 5 of the act of 1891. The annexation act under which the territory of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District was annexed to the city of Oakland (St. 1889, p. 358) provides that from and after the date of the filing in the office of the Secretary of State of the document showing the returns of the annexation election "the annexation of such territory so proposed to be annexed shall be deemed and shall be complete, and thenceforth such annexed territory shall be to all intents and purposes a part of such municipal corporation."

It is a well-settled doctrine that "there cannot be at the same time, within the same territory, two distinct municipal corporations, exercising the same powers, jurisdiction, and privileges." 1 Dillon Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 184; King v. Pasmore, 3 Term R. 199, 243; Bloomfield v. Glen Ridge, 54 N. J. Eq. 276, 283, 33 Atl. 925. Accordingly, it is generally held that, where one municipal corporation is annexed to another, the annexing city takes over the functions of the annexed municipality, and the latter by virtue of the annexation is extinguished, and its property, powers, and duties are vested in the corporation of which it has become a part. 28 Cyc. 217; Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 528, 25 L. Ed. 699; Adams v. Minneapolis, 20 Minn. 484 (Gil. 438); People v. Supervisors, 94 N. Y. 263; Stroud v. Stevens Point, 37 Wis. 367; Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis. 616, 29 N. W. 547, 554. If this be true where one of two municipal corporations having coextensive powers is annexed to another, the same result must follow a fortiori where a public corporation having powers more limited than those of a municipal corporation is annexed to a city, which possesses all of the powers of the corporation which has been annexed to it and others in addition.

These rules do not rest upon any theory of constitutional limitation. In the absence of any constitutional restriction, the Legislature has absolute power over the organization, the dissolution, the extent, the powers, and the liabilities of municipal and other public corporations established as agencies of the state for purposes of local government. In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. What shall be the effect of the enlargement or diminution of the boundaries of such corporations, or of the consolidation of two into one, or of the annexation of the territory of one to another, is a question to be answered by a determination of the legislative intent. The cases above cited declare the result of such action under laws which do not show affirmatively an intent to continue the existence of two separate public corporations within the same territorial limits. In the case at bar, the appellants contend that certain provisions of our state Constitution prevent the formation of a sanitary district which shall exercise jurisdiction over any part of the territory included within a municipal corporation. There have been, in our decisions, one or two intimations to this effect. Woodward v. Fruitvale San. Dist., 99 Cal. 562, 34 Pac. 239; In re Werner, 129 Cal. 567, 62 Pac. 97. But the expressions referred to were not, in either case, strictly necessary to the decision, and, as we think the question before us may (and therefore should) be decided without challenging the power of the Legislature to authorize the creation of sanitary districts covering, in whole or in part, the territory of cities or towns, we shall not enter into a consideration of the constitutional point.

Viewing the question purely as one of statutory construction, we are satisfied that, upon the general principle above stated, the various acts involved must be held to result in extinguishing and dissolving a sanitary district upon the annexation of its territory to an adjacent municipal corporation. This view, has found clear expression in the decision of this court in People ex rel. Cuff v. City of Oakland, 123 Cal. 598, 56 Pac. 445. That case involved the validity of proceedings for the annexation to the city of Oakland of the whole of one and part of another sanitary district. It was contended that territory included in a sanitary district could not be annexed to a city. Meeting this contention, the court said: "It may be conceded at the outset that sanitary districts are public corporations, though not designated as corporations by the statute, and that all their powers, duties, and privileges are such as are incident to municipal corporations formed under the municipal government act, or existing under freeholders' charters, though not possessing many important powers, duties, and privileges of the latter, and that the same powers could not, after annexation, be exercised by each in the same territory. But if the statute permits territory embraced in or covered by a sanitary district to be annexed to a city—a municipal corporation of a higher class and capable of exercising the same functions as well as others essential to municipal government—such statute contemplates, ex necessitate rei, a cession of the powers of the inferior corporations to the greater, and a consequent dissolution of the former as a result of the annexation. If the territory embraced in these sanitary districts had chosen to incorporate under the statutes as a town or city, instead of becoming annexed to the city of Oakland, it certainly could not have been necessary as a preliminary to such incorporation to disincorporate as such sanitary district, since by the incorporation they would have preserved every right and privilege they had before, and would at the same time acquire other rights and additional powers which would enable them the better to preserve and secure all the rights they had as sanitary districts; and if they might incorporate as a town or city without first dissolving the prior corporation, no reason is perceived why they could not accomplish the same thing by becoming annexed to an existing municipal corporation, under the act of 1889. * * *"

Even if this declaration may be regarded as dictum, we are satisfied that it states the true view of the statutes involved. To hold that a sanitary district retains its existence and powers notwithstanding the annexation of its territory to the city would lead to the existence within the territory annexed of two distinct local governmental bodies claiming to exercise the same powers over the same territory. Such a condition would produce intolerable confusion, if not constant conflict. We find nothing in the statute indicating an intent to so provide. It is true that the sanitary district act contains one or two expressions which might seem to indicate that a sanitary district may cover in whole or in part territory within the boundaries of a municipal corporation. Thus section 5, in granting the power to enter upon a street or road for the purpose of making excavations, declares that in "case such street or road shall be in an incorporated city or town the consent of the lawful authorities thereof shall first be obtained." Section 21 provides that upon dissolution of the district its property shall vest "in any incorporated city or town that may at said time be in occupation of a considerable portion of the territory of the district." It may be readily conceived that the Legislature had in mind the possibility that a region, including territory both incorporated and unincorporated, might be so situated as to require a single and comprehensive scheme of sewer construction, or that, in laying a sewer for a sanitary district outside of any city or town, it might be necessary to pass through the streets of some municipality in order to reach an outlet. The provisions referring to "incorporated cities or towns" may have been intended to apply in such cases, and, so read, they may be given full effect, without holding that the act contemplated the formation or the continued existence of a sanitary district entirely within the boundaries of a municipal corporation. Be that as it may, there is certainly nothing in the act for the creation of sanitary districts which indicates any intention to repeal or modify the law providing for the annexation of territory to incorporated cities. Where such territory is annexed, the law provides, as is above stated, "that such annexed territory shall be to all intents and purposes a part of such municipal incorporation." The annexed territory would certainly not be to all intents and purposes a part of the municipality, if it still remained subject in matters covered by section 5 of the sanitary district act to the control of the sanitary board.

It must accordingly be held that upon the completion of the annexation the powers of the sanitary district and of the district sanitary board ceased. We are not here confronted with the question of the validity of bonds already issued before annexation, nor with the manner in which the courts would protect the undoubted rights of creditors whose claims accrued before annexation. Upon December 8, 1909, when the document showing the vote on the question of annexation was filed in the office of the Secretary of State, no bonds had been issued and no indebtedness had been incurred. With that annexation the power of the sanitary district to issue such bonds, or to do any other of the things specified in section 5 of the act, ceased.

The appellant city suggests that, while the sanitary district and its sanitary board were, by virtue of the annexation, shorn of power to proceed further, the validity of the bond election should be upheld, and the further steps necessary to their issuance and the construction of the sewer should be carried out by the officers of the city of Oakland. No statute or other authority for this conclusion is cited, and we think the view is manifestly untenable. It is, indeed, destructive of the appellant's main contention that the district is dissolved; for, if the contemplated work is to be done and paid for as suggested, the sanitary district would in realty be continuing its existence and operations, and the only effect of the annexation would be the transfer of the duties of the sanitary board to a municipal board. In the absence of express statutory authority for such continuance and transfer, there is no escape from the conclusion that the bond proceedings already had fall, and that any future steps for the construction of sewers in the territory must be initiated and conducted by the proper authorities of the city of Oakland, of which such territory is a part. If it shall be desirable to create a separate district, which shall, apart from the rest of the city, bear the expense of constructing the necessary sewer, the means of so doing the work are fully provided by "An act to provide separate sewer districts within municipalities," approved April 21, 1909. St. 1909, p. 1011.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring that the East Fruitvale Sanitary District has been dissolved by the annexation proceedings, and that it has not, nor has its sanitary board, any power to issue the bonds in question.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

158 Cal. 461

In re SANITARY BOARD OF UPPER FRUITVALE SANITARY DIST.

(S. F. 5,576.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by the Sanitary Board of the Upper Fruitvale Sanitary District to determine its right to issue bonds. On appeal from the judgment of the superior court. Reversed, with directions.

J. W. Stetson and George W. Reed, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and John J. Allen (T. S. Gray and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding involving the right of the Upper Fruitvale Sanitary District to issue bonds for sewer construction to the amount of $60,000. The questions presented are, in all material respects, identical with those considered in the Matter of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District (S. F. No. 5,575) 111 Pac. 368, this day decided, and the result here must be the same as in that case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring that the Upper Fruitvale Sanitary District has been dissolved by the annexation proceedings, and that it has not, nor has its sanitary board, any power to issue the bonds in question.

158 Cal. 462

In re SANITARY BOARD OF FITCHBURG SANITARY DIST. (S. F. 5,577.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by the Sanitary Board of the Fitchburg Sanitary District to determine its right to issue bonds. On appeal from the judgment of the superior court. Reversed, with directions.

J. W. Stetson, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and John J. Allen (T. S. Gray and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding involving the right of the Fitchburg Sanitary District to issue bonds for sewer construction to the amount of $75,000. The questions presented are, in all material respects, identical with those considered in the Matter of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District (S. F. No. 5,575) 111 Pac. 368, this day decided, and the result here must be the same as in that case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring that the Fitchburg Sanitary District has been dissolved by the annexation proceedings, and that it has not, nor has its sanitary board, any power to issue the bonds in question.

158 Cal. 463

In re SANITARY BOARD OF ELMHURST SANITARY DIST. (S. F. 5,578.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by the Sanitary Board of the Elmhurst Sanitary District to determine its right to issue bonds. On appeal from the judgment of the superior court. Reversed, with directions.

J. W. Stetson and Heller, Powers & Ehrman, for appellant Stone. T. S. Gray and John J. Allen (Reed, Black & Reed and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding involving the right of the Elmhurst Sanitary District to issue bonds for sewer construction to the amount of $75,000. The questions presented are, in all material respects, identical with those considered in the Matter of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District (S. F. No. 5,575) 111 Pac. 368, this day decided, and the result must be the same as in that case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring that the Elmhurst Sanitary District has been dissolved by the annexation proceedings, and that it has not, nor has its sanitary board, any power to issue the bonds in question.

158 Cal. 465

In re SANITARY BOARD OF REDWOOD SANITARY DIST. (S. F. 5,580.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by the Sanitary Board of the Redwood Sanitary District to determine its right to issue bonds. On appeal from the judgment of the superior court. Reversed, with directions.

J. W. Stetson, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and John J. Allen (T. S. Gray and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding involving the right of the Redwood Sanitary District to issue bonds for sewer construction to the amount of $36,000. The questions presented are, in all material respects, identical with those considered in the Matter of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District (S. F. No. 5,575) 111 Pac. 368, this day decided, and the result here must be the same as in that case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring that the Redwood Sanitary District has been dissolved by the annexation proceedings, and that it has not, nor has its sanitary board, any power to issue the bonds in question.

158 Cal. 464

In re SANITARY BOARD OF SEMINARY PARK SANITARY DIST. (S. F. 5,579.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by the Sanitary Board of the Seminary Park Sanitary District to determine its right to issue bonds. On appeal from the judgment of the superior court. Reversed, with directions.

J. W. Stetson, for appellant. A. K. Farnsworth, John J. Allen, and Reed, Black & Reed (T. S. Gray and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding involving the right of the Seminary Park Sanitary District to issue bonds for sewer construction to the amount of $75,000. The questions presented are, in all material respects, identical with those considered in the Matter of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District (S. F. No. 5,575) 111 Pac. 368, this day decided, and the result here must be the same as in that case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment declaring that the Seminary Park Sanitary District has been dissolved by the annexation proceedings, and that it has not, nor has its sanitary board, any power to issue the bonds in question.

---

158 Cal. 466

E. D. & A. L. STONE CO. v. REILLY et al.

(S. F. 5,581.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, F. B. Ogden, and T. W. Harris, Judges.

Petition by E. D. & A. L. Stone Company against Phillip Reilly and others, composing the Elmhurst Sanitary Board of the Elmhurst Sanitary District. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman (Sydney Schlesinger, of counsel), for appellant. T. S. Gray and Reed, Black & Reed (J. J. Allen and Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by the plaintiff, a property owner within the limits of the Elmhurst Sanitary District, to enjoin the defendants, members of the sanitary board of said district, from issuing bonds of the district to the amount of $75,000, or from making or carrying out any contracts for the construction of a sewer system for said district. The court entered judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

The facts concerning the status of said district and its right to make contracts or issue bonds are, in effect, the same as those disclosed in the matter of the petition of Sanitary Board of the East Fruitvale Sanitary District (S. F. No. 5,575) 111 Pac. 368, and upon the authority of that case it must be held that the sanitary district was dissolved and the powers of its sanitary board terminated upon the annexation of the district to the city of Oakland.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed for in its complaint.

---

14 Cal. App. 175

BAKER v. THOMPSON. (Civ. 805.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 30, 1910.)

BROKERS (§ 43*)—AUTHORITY OF BROKERS TO BUY OR SELL REAL ESTATE—NECESSITY OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Civ. Code, § 1624, declaring invalid, unless in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged, an agreement authorizing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission, has no application to an agreement between brokers for a division of commissions received for sale or purchase of real estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43;* Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 131.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by J. M. Baker against A. C. Thompson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

V. L. Ward, for appellant. E. A. Miller and Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action upon an oral contract by one real estate agent against another to recover share of commissions for sale of land. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals therefrom upon the judgment roll alone; his sole contention being that the complaint fails to state a cause of action.

As set forth in the complaint, Baker & Lewis, the assignors of plaintiff, having obtained from the owner thereof the agency for the sale of a certain tract of land, entered into an oral contract with defendant, whereby it was agreed that the firm of Baker & Lewis and defendant should each endeavor to effect a sale of the property, and that, in the event of a sale being made by either party, the commission received therefor should be equally divided between said firm and defendant; that defendant, on behalf of all said parties, did bring about a sale of the property and did receive from the seller $1,170 as commission therefor, but declined and refused to share the same, or any part thereof, with said firm of Baker & Lewis. While the complaint contains other allegations, the foregoing are sufficient to illustrate the point urged as ground for reversal.

Appellant invokes the provisions of section 1624, Civil Code, and insists that as the agreement was not in writing, nor any memorandum or note thereof made and subscribed by the party to be charged, it is therefore void. The point is wholly without merit. The agreement had no reference either to the purchase or sale of real estate for compensation or otherwise, but related solely and alone to the commission which might be received by either party for effecting a sale. As said by Chief Justice Beatty, in discussing the effect of said section 1624, in Gorham v. Heiman, 90 Cal., at page 358, 27 Pac., at page 292: "But clearly that provision was only designed to protect owners of real estate against unfounded claims of brokers. It does not extend to agreements between brokers to co-operate in making sales for a share of the commissions." In our judgment, section 1624, Civil Code, has no application to an agreement made between brokers for a division of commissions received for the sale or purchase of real estate. Casey v. Richards, 10 Cal. App. 57, 101 Pac. 36; Saunders v. Yoakum, 12 Cal. App. 543, 107 Pac. 1007.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

14 Cal. App. 164

Ex parte WILCOX. (Cr. 171.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 24, 1910.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 111*)—Ordinances—Validity.

A provision in an ordinance of a city requiring a fee for the procurement of a receipt of a deposit of money or the delivery of a bond required by the ordinance is in conflict with Code Civ. Proc. § 2075, entitling any person who pays money or delivers an instrument to a receipt therefor as a condition of the payment or delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 246; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 682*) — Permit to Excavate in Street—Power to Impose Conditions—Notice.

The notice required by an ordinance prohibiting any corporation from excavating in any street of a city without first giving notice to the street superintendent of its intention to excavate and making a deposit based on the quantity of the proposed excavation, as shown by the notice, etc., is to afford a basis of computation to determine the amount of the deposit, and not as a basis for the right of a water company to enter on a street to make excavations in which to lay pipes for the distribution of water to the citizens of the city, for that right is by virtue of a constitutional franchise, and it cannot be withheld by the city for its only power is to specify general regulations for damages and indemnity for damages, and to require the work to be done under the direction of the street superintendent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1470; Dec. Dig. § 682.*]

3. Municipal Corporations (§ 682*)—Excavations in Streets—Power to Impose Conditions.

A city may prescribe regulations for damages for individuals or corporations excavating in the streets and indemnity for damages, provided the regulations are general and uniform in their application to all who may desire the privilege of making excavations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1470; Dec. Dig. § 682.*]

4. Indictment and Information (§ 111*) — Requisites—Statutory Offenses.

Where a statute forbids the doing of a particular act without the existence of either one of two conditions, the indictment must negative the existence of both conditions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 295–298; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

5. Municipal Corporations (§§ 639, 683*)—Excavation in Streets—Violation of Ordinance—Complaint.

An ordinance making it unlawful to make excavations in any street of the city without making a deposit of money as indemnity for damages to the street, and authorizing in a proviso the giving of a bond for not less than $500 in lieu of the deposit, and requiring a notice of the extent of the excavation to determine the amount of the deposit, does not require a notice where a bond is given and where the amount of the cash deposit is fixed and received by the city without a notice there is a waiver of notice, and hence a complaint charging a violation of the ordinance which merely charges a violation of the parts of the ordinance which provide for giving notice and filing of bond is insufficient for failing to negative the fact of a deposit which obviates the giving of a bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1406–1409, 1476; Dec. Dig. §§ 639, 683.*]

6. Municipal Corporations (§ 111*)—Ordinances—Validity—Uniformity.

An ordinance regulating excavations in the streets of a city by individuals or corporations which provides that the one depositing money as indemnity for damages shall be subject to a penalty by which the city arbitrarily retains a part thereof to the credit of the street fund, and which provides that the one filing a bond shall avoid the penalty, and is only subjected to the obligation of replacing the street in as good condition as before, is invalid, because the regulations are not uniform in their application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 247; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Application by George W. Wilcox for a writ of habeas corpus for his discharge from his arrest for a violation of a municipal ordinance. Writ issued, and petitioner discharged.

Hanson, Hackler & Heath, for petitioner. Sloan Pitzer, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner, an employé of the Marengo Water Company, a California corporation engaged in distributing and supplying water to the inhabitants of the city of Alhambra, was on the 27th of October, 1908, arrested upon a complaint filed before a magistrate, charging him with a violation of an ordinance of said city enacted prior thereto, which ordinance, in so far as material in this case, provides:

"Section 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to make any excavation in any public street, road, alley or other public place, in the city of Alhambra, without first giving notice to the street superintendent of said city, and making a deposit or filing a bond, as the case may be, and securing a receipt therefor as hereinafter provided. The person, firm or corporation intending to make any such excavation shall file with said street superintendent a written notice of such intention, describing specifically the location and area of the excavation or excavations intended to be made, and, except as hereinafter provided, shall deposit with such street superintendent a sum of money equal to thirty (30) cents per square foot of surface of such excavation or excavations to be made in streets, roads, alleys, or places which are macadamized; a sum equal to twenty (20) cents for each square foot of surface of said excavation or excavations to be made in graveled streets, roads, alleys or places, and in streets, roads, alleys or places graded and oiled; and a sum equal to ten (10) cents for each square foot of surface of said excavation or excavations to be made in streets which are neither macadamized nor graveled or graded and oiled; provided that no deposit shall be less than one dollar ($1); and further provided that it shall be optional with such persons, firms or corporations so filing such notice of intention, instead of making such deposit to file with said street superintendent a bond in the penal sum of not less than $500, executed by said applicant and two sureties, who shall be conditioned upon the full and complete performance by said applicant of all the conditions, requirements and restrictions in this ordinance and of all other ordinances and regulations of and in force in the city of Alhambra in regard to excavations in public streets," etc.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"Sec. 1½. Upon filing every such written notice there shall be also paid to said street superintendent the sum of $1 as the fee of said street superintendent for issuing the receipt hereinafter specified; no part of such fee shall be refunded by said street superintendent, but all thereof shall be retained by him.

"Sec. 2. The street superintendent shall, on receiving the written notice of intention and the payment of the fee of $1 hereinbefore mentioned in section 1½ hereof, together with the deposit required by section 1 hereof (or if a bond shall be filed, then upon payment of said fee and his approval of such bond), issue a receipt for such deposit or bond, and shall keep an account thereof. Said receipt shall specify the person, firm or corporation to whom it is issued and the street, road, alley, or other public place and the particular portion or portions thereof to be excavated, and the extent of such excavations."

Then follow various sections of the ordinance with reference to the manner in which the street shall be replaced in its original condition after excavation and of the times at which it shall be done and the right of the street superintendent, if not done promptly, to cause it to be done at the expense of the party making the excavation.

Section 7 provides that the street superintendent shall deduct from the deposit made for an excavation a sum equal to 2½ cents per square foot of surface of the excavation in macadamized streets, and ⅕ of one cent for each square foot of surface of roads or alleys which are not paved or macadamized, and also to deduct the cost of any work done or repairs made by him from all deposits in his hands; and, further, upon the completion of the work of refilling and resurfacing for which a deposit has been made, the street superintendent shall refund to the person making such deposit the balance of such deposit after making all deductions herein authorized; that the street superintendent shall pay to the city treasurer all sums deducted by him from all deposits, which shall be placed to the credit of the street fund.

By section 11 it is provided that any person violating the provisions of the ordinance is guilty of a misdemeanor.

The affidavit of complaint filed charges defendant with a violation of those portions of the ordinace which provide for giving notice, filing a bond, and securing a receipt therfor. No other provision of the ordinance is claimed to have been violated. Judgment of conviction was pronounced against defendant by the magistrate, which, upon appeal to the superior court, was affirmed. Being in actual confinement, he now presents this petition upon the grounds, first, that the affidavit of complaint under which he was arrested, tried and convicted, does not charge a public offense; and, second, that the ordinance under and by virtue of which said complaint was issued is in contravention of the Constitution of the state.

That portion of the ordinance requiring a payment on account of an issue by the city of a receipt by reason of the payment of money or the delivery of an instrument to it is, in our opinion, invalid, being in conflict with general law (section 2075, Code Civ. Proc.; In re Sic, 73 Cal. 146, 14 Pac. 405); and a violation of the same could not support a conviction. An examination of the ordinance indicates that the notice required to be given the city of an intention to excavate was intended solely as affording a basis of computation where a cash deposit was made, in order to determine the amount of such deposit. In no event can it be said to have been intended as a basis for the right of a water company to enter upon a street for the purpose of making excavations in which to lay pipes for the distribution of water to the citizens of Alhambra. That right is by virtue of a constitutional franchise, and it cannot be withheld by the city, its only power being to specify general regulations for damages and indemnity for damages, and to require the work to be done under the direction of the street superintendent. "The municipality may prescribe regulations for damages and indemnity for damages, but these regulations must be general—i. e., uniform—in their application to all who may desire to exercise the privilege." In re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973. It will be observed that the offense charged with reference to the failure to give a bond is within the proviso clause of the ordinance. "Where a statute forbids the doing of a particular act without the existence of either one of two conditions, the indictment must negative the existence of both these conditions before it can be supported." Wharton's Criminal Pl. & Pr. § 239. The ordinance in question makes it unlawful to excavate the street without making a deposit of money as indemnity for damages to the street. The proviso authorizes a bond in lieu of this deposit. The fact of this deposit, which, if made, obviates a bond, is not negatived. For aught that appears in this affidavit of complaint, such deposit may have been made, and if made and accepted by the city the notice of the extent of the excavation would serve no useful purpose, such notice being only intended, as before said, in order to determine a basis for fixing the amount of cash deposit. If that were fixed, even without the notice, and the amount received by the city, it should be considered as a waiver of such notice. It will be observed, further, that the notice serves no purpose when a bond is given. The amount of that bond is arbitrarily fixed at $500 in all cases. It is true the ordinance says "not less than five hundred dollars," but there is no provision in the ordinance by which it may be increased beyond that amount. The ordinance, therefore, should not be construed as requiring a preliminary notice where the party gives a bond, no reason therefor being apparent. In our opinion, therefore, the affidavit of complaint did not state facts constituting a public offense.

In addition to all of this, we think the ordinance open to at least two criticisms, which would render certain of its provisions invalid: First, as to the matter of receipt heretofore treated; again, upon the authority of In re Johnston, supra, the regulations provided are not uniform in their application. The one depositing money as indemnity for damages is by the ordinance subjected to a penalty by which the city arbitrarily retains a large portion thereof to the credit of the street fund, while if another person or corporation desiring to excavate in the streets should file a bond, he avoids this penalty, and is only subjected to the obligation of replacing the street in as good condition as before and in the manner provided by the ordinance. Thus it is seen that uniformity in the application of the regulations authorized under the Constitution does not exist.

For these reasons assigned, we think the ordinance, at least to the extent criticised, and which covers all the provisions alleged to have been violated, is invalid. The writ is therefore ordered to issue, and the prisoner discharged.

14 Cal. App. 176

FIRST NAT. BANK OF IOWA CITY v. TROGNITZ. (Civ. 846.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 1, 1910.)

1. New Trial (§ 128*)—Questions Reviewable—Insuffiency of Evidence—Specifications.

A party moving for a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence set out in the bill of exceptions to justify the verdict must point out wherein the evidence is insufficient, though a party presenting his record in the form of a bill of exceptions need not specify the particular errors where the objections and rulings appear in the bill and need no more particular presentation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 257–262; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. Bills and Notes (§ 68*)—Bill of Exchange—Acceptance—Sufficiency.

A bill of exchange was drawn against a person by an indorsement at its foot reciting, "To," followed by his name. At the right of the indorsement he affixed his signature. At the time the bill contained blanks for the date and amount, which blanks were subsequently filled in. Across the bill was stamped the word "Accepted," and after a blank line for signature the words, "Sign here," appeared. Held, that under Civ. Code, § 3195, providing that an acceptance written on any part of the bill is sufficient, the acceptance was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. Bills and Notes (§ 497*)—Liability of Acceptor of Bill of Exchange—Right of Indorsee.

Where an acceptor of a bill of exchange was misled when he signed it and he did not intend to execute more than a mere memorandum, an indorsee of the bill suing on the acceptance must show that he acquired the bill before maturity and for a valuable consideration, and the court must so find before rendering judgment against the acceptor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 497.*]

4. Bills and Notes (§ 372*)—Blanks in Instrument—Effect.

Under Civ. Code, § 3125, making a party to a blank negotiable instrument liable on the instrument as completed, an acceptor of a bill of exchange, blank as to date and amount, may not assert as against an innocent holder for value before maturity that he did not intend to create any liability against himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Iowa City against R. E. Trognitz. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. B. Bowman and C. N. Andrews, for appellant. Ward, Wells & Ward, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff, as the indorsee of four bills of exchange drawn by a corporation called the Providence Jewelry Company, brought this action to recover from defendant, as an acceptor of said negotiable instruments, the aggregate principal sum of $379.30, together with certain other sums accruing as interest. It was alleged in the complaint that plaintiff acquired the bills before maturity and for a valuable consideration. Defendant in his answer denied specifically all of the allegations set out in the complaint, and upon a trial being had judgment was awarded in his favor. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial. A statement of the evidence heard at the trial is set out in a bill of exceptions. Objection is made by respondent that this evidence cannot be considered for the purpose of determining whether it is sufficient to support the findings and judgment, because: First, the appeal from the judgment was taken more than 60 days after the entry thereof; and, second, that the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient are not set out in any specification, either generally or particularly. This objection of respondent has undoubted merit.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, referring to an appeal from a judgment, provides in part as follows: "But an exception to the decision, or verdict, on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, unless the appeal is taken within sixty days after the entry of the judgment." It is the duty of a party, where he moves for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict or decision, to specify and point out wherein the evidence is insufficient. Sather Banking Co. v. Briggs Co., 138 Cal. 724, 72 Pac. 352. It is true that it has been held, where the appellant presents his record in the form of a bill of exceptions, that particular errors need not be specified; but this is when the objections and rulings appear in the bill, and hence need no more particular presentation in order that the court's attention may be readily attracted to the errors claimed. We are therefore left in determining this appeal to a consideration alone of the judgment roll, and the only inquiry that can properly be made is as to whether or not the findings of the trial court, within the issues made by the pleadings, sustain the judgment. The court found that defendant signed his name on the face of each bill of exchange in the lower right-hand corner at the time the bills were presented to him; that the bills were not at that time complete, in that they contained blanks where the dates and amounts were afterwards filled in; that across the face of each was stamped the word, "Accepted," and after a blank line left for signature, the words, "Sign here"; that defendant had not signed at the place thus indicated; that he signed at the bottom of the instrument. There is no finding upon the issue as to whether or not there had been a transfer before maturity of the bills for a valuable consideration. The signing of the acceptor's name at the foot rather than across the face of the bill was not such an irregularity as to invalidate the acceptance. Section 3195 of the Civil Code provides: "The holder of a bill of exchange may, without prejudice to his rights against prior parties, receive and treat as a sufficient acceptance: (1) An acceptance written upon any part of the bill, or upon a separate paper. * * *" The several instruments here sued upon were drawn against and directed to the defendant by an indorsement at their foot in the words, "To R. E. Trognitz, San Diego, Cal." At the right of these words the defendant affixed his signature, which in our view of the matter, considered with reference to the provisions of the Code just quoted, constituted a sufficient acceptance.

It was important that the court should have found upon the issue as to whether or not plaintiff acquired the bills before maturity and for a valuable consideration, inasmuch as a finding is made that defendant was misled when he signed the instruments and did not intend to execute anything more than a mere memorandum form to be retained by the jewelry company in connection with the purchase of goods made from it by defendant. Where negotiable paper of the kind here sought to be recovered on is issued in blank, it is no protection to the acceptor to say, as against the claim of an innocent holder for value before maturity, that he did not intend to create any liability against himself. "One who makes himself a party to an instrument intended to be negotiable, but which is left wholly or partly in blank, for the purpose of filling afterwards, is liable upon the instrument to an indorsee thereof in due course, in whatever manner and at whatever time it may be filled, so long as it remains negotiable in form." Civ. Code, § 3125; Bedell v. Herring, 77 Cal. 572, 20 Pac. 129, 11 Am. St. Rep. 307. If we were to assume, in the absence of a finding upon that question, that the allegations of the complaint to the effect that plaintiff acquired the bills prior to maturity and for value are true, then that fact, taken and considered with the other facts found by the court, would require that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiff.

As the record is presented, the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, and the judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 156

MILLER v. HIGGINS et al. (Civ. 823.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 22, 1910.)

1. ADOPTION (§ 12*)—NOTICE OF PROCEEDINGS—RIGHT OF PARENT.

Civ. Code, § 224, providing that a child may not be adopted without consent of its parent, except one against whom a decree of divorce has been awarded for cruelty, does not deprive a parent, so adjudged guilty of cruelty, of the right to notice of proceeding for adoption of his child, custody of whom was by the divorce decree awarded to the mother, till the further order of the court, where the court, which made the divorce decree, has, under the authority given it by section 138 to at any time modify or vacate the order for custody, entertained a petition of the father for custody of the child, and at the hearing, at which the mother was represented by counsel, indicated its intention to grant it, but granted an adjournment for production of the child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. DIVORCE (§ 303*)—CUSTODY OF CHILD—JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

The decree in divorce awarding the mother custody of the child of the parties only till further order of the court, and subject to the restriction that the child be not removed from the court's jurisdiction, retains to the court jurisdiction and control of the divorce proceeding, so far as it relates to care and custody of the child, and such court having afterwards entertained petition of the father for custody of the child, and the mother having appeared by attorney, the court had complete power and authority to make such order as it considered best for the best interests of the child with reference to its subsequent custody and control; which jurisdiction could not be defeated by the child being secretly removed by the mother to another county, and the jurisdiction of the court thereof being invoked in proceedings for adoption of the child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

3. ADOPTION (§ 16*)—SETTING ASIDE—FRAUD.

The mother and grandparents of a child by concealing from the court, in which they instituted proceedings for the adoption of the child by the grandparents, the facts that the court of another county—which granted the wife a divorce for cruelty of her husband, awarding her custody of the child till its further order, and subject to the condition of the child not being removed from its jurisdiction—had entertained a petition of the father for custody of the child, and at the hearing, at which the mother appeared by attorney, had indicated its intention to grant the order, concealed facts on which the jurisdiction of the court in the adoption proceedings depended, which was a fraud on it, for which the order of adoption will be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 28; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by John G. Miller against M. V. Higgins and others. Decree for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jennings & Horton, James W. Scott, and Robert C. Owens, for appellants. D. K. Trask (M. M. Starr, of counsel), for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from a decree setting aside a judgment or order of adoption of the minor child of plaintiff and Nellie M. Stange, formerly Nellie M. Miller.

Nellie M. Miller procured an interlocutory decree of divorce from the plaintiff, John G. Miller, in the superior court of Contra Costa county on August 16, 1906, upon the ground of extreme cruelty, and the final decree was entered therein on December 2, 1907. By this decree the custody and control of Gerard Miller, a minor, the issue of said marriage, was awarded to said Nellie M. Miller until the further order of the court, subject to the restriction that said child was not to be removed from the jurisdiction of the court and the defendant John G. Miller (plaintiff here) should have the right to visit said minor child at all reasonable times. Nellie M. Miller thereafter married the defendant H. A. Stange and left the state of California, leaving the child in the custody of her mother in Contra Costa county. Whereupon the plaintiff herein, defendant in said divorce proceeding, on the 2d day of September, 1908, filed his petition in said superior court of Contra Costa county, setting forth the foregoing and other facts, and the hearing of said petition was set for September 14, 1908. Witnesses were called and examined on behalf of both parties, Nellie M. Stange appearing by attorney, and the court upon the hearing indicated its intention to vacate the order theretofore made awarding the custody of the child to said Nellie M. Stange; but, the child not being before the court, the court made an order directing the production of said child in court on the 5th day of October, 1908. On this latter date a further continuance was granted and another order made requiring the production of said child, and the further order that said last-named order be served upon the said Nellie M. Stange. It being made to appear on the 9th of November, 1908, that neither Nellie M. Stange nor the child could be found in the county, an order was entered modifying said decree of divorce and awarding the custody of the child to John G. Miller. During the interim between the 14th of September and the date of the actual entry of the order of modification, to wit, on or about the 16th day of October, Nellie M. Stange brought the child into Los Angeles county, and proceedings were instituted in the superior court of said county by M. V. Higgins, Vera H. Higgins, and the said Nellie M. Stange for the adoption of such child, which proceedings the court in this proceeding finds were instituted solely for the purpose of avoiding the lawful orders about to be made by the superior court of Contra Costa county with respect to the custody of the child, and for the purpose of affording a pretext for the taking of the child out of the state of California in violation of such order. It is further found by the court in this proceeding that neither of the moving parties therein acted in good faith; that neither of them informed the judge before whom the adoption proceedings were had, nor was he made aware of the fact, that proceedings were pending in the superior court of Contra Costa county relative to the custody of said child; that at the time of said adoption proceeding the only persons present in court were the said minor child, the mother, Nellie M. Stange, and the said M. V. and Vera H. Higgins; that the court, in ignorance of the fact that the superior court of Contra Costa county had assumed jurisdiction of the application to change the custody of the child, made its order of adoption, basing the same solely upon the ground that the decree of divorce awarding the custody of the child to the mother was of itself sufficient to warrant the order of adoption, without the father's consent or appearance in said proceedings of adoption; that said Higgins and wife did not assume the custody of said child and have never had the custody of said child since the order of adoption was made, but, on the contrary, the said Nellie M. Stange assumed and took the custody of said child and has ever since retained such custody and has kept and retained said child out of the jurisdiction of the court, to wit, within the state of Illinois; that in November, 1908, the father of said child, respondent herein, first obtained information of the proceedings of adoption, and in December following he filed his complaint setting forth the facts above stated and praying the court for a decree that the said adoption proceedings and the order and decree of adoption were and are illegal and void and that the same be vacated and set aside and plaintiff be decreed to be entitled to the custody of said child. Issue was presented as to all the matters set forth in the complaint, and the superior court, upon trial and hearing thereof, found the facts as hereinabove narrated and made its order vacating and setting aside said decree and order of adoption, from which action of the court this appeal is taken by appellants.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is claimed by appellants that the decree of adoption was valid; that the same was set aside by the court upon the request of a stranger to the proceedings; that Miller was not entitled to notice of the adoption proceedings under section 224, Civ. Code; that the concealment from the court of the fact that another court had assumed and was exercising jurisdiction over the custody of the child was not such a fraud as would warrant the annulment of the decree of adoption; and that to warrant the setting aside of a judgment of this character upon the ground of alleged fraud the fraud must have been perpetrated in the actual procurement of the judgment, and not in the cause of action upon which the judgment was founded. We do not regard either of the positions taken by appellants as tenable. While it is true that section 197 of the Civil Code, which confers the superior right of the father to the custody, services, and earnings of a child, is modified by the subsequent section, which removes this superiority of right in the event the husband and wife are living separate and apart; nevertheless, section 138 of the Civil Code confers upon the superior court in divorce proceedings jurisdiction and authority to make such orders for the custody and care of minor children as it may deem necessary or proper and may at any time modify and vacate the same. This last section is said by our Supreme Court in Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 634, 67 Pac. 1049, to have been enacted for the purpose of insuring to children of the marriage proper care and attention, and this power of the court cannot be abridged even by an agreement of separation between the parties in which is incorporated an agreement with reference to the custody of the children. Black v. Black, 149 Cal. 226, 86 Pac. 505. It is true that section 224 of the Civil Code with reference to the adoption of children provides that consent to such adoption is not necessary from a father or mother adjudged guilty of cruelty and for such cause divorced; but this section does not undertake, nor is it intended, to modify the other sections of the Code dealing specifically with the right of custody. This right to the custody and care of the children of a marriage is not by the Code necessarily affected by the cause upon which the decree of divorce is based, and for the obvious reason that, the children not being parties to the divorce proceedings, and their interests being affected by such a decree, the same are to be protected and guarded by the discretionary power of the court to be exercised in such divorce proceedings. It is within the power of the superior court in divorce proceedings to give the custody and care of the children of a marriage to the guilty party, whatever may be the offense, if in the opinion of the court the awarding of the custody to such parent is for the best interest of the children. It will be observed that in this particular divorce proceeding a limited custody was awarded to the mother; that is to say, a custody to be exercised and maintained while the child was within the jurisdiction of the court, to wit, within the county of Contra Costa, and even then only for such time as, in the opinion of the court, the interests of the child would be best subserved. The effect of the order of the superior court of Contra Costa county was to retain jurisdiction and control of the divorce proceeding in so far as it related to the care and custody of the children of the marriage, and this was provided for in the final decree of divorce. Circumstances having arisen which, in the opinion of the superior court of Contra Costa county, called for the exercise of this jurisdiction, and the parties having appeared before that court in answer to its order and demand and submitted themselves thereto, that court had complete power and authority to make such order as in its opinion was for the best interests of the child with reference to its subsequent custody and control. Having such jurisdiction, the same could not be defeated by removing the child secretly from the jurisdiction of the superior court of Contra Costa county and invoking the jurisdiction of the superior court of Los Angeles county in the adoption proceedings. Whether or not the father was entitled to notice of the adoption proceedings was a jurisdictional fact to be determined by the judge from extrinsic evidence. "Upon the appearance before the judge of the persons seeking to adopt the child and the child, he acquires jurisdiction to entertain a petition for adoption, but at this point it is only jurisdiction to preliminarily investigate and determine whether the presence at the hearing of the parents of the minor child is necessary or not. One parent being present and consenting, it is still incumbent upon the judge to ascertain whether the consent and presence of that parent alone is necessary to the relinquishment of the child, and to confer full jurisdiction to proceed with the hearing and make the order of adoption. * * * In all cases it becomes necessary to determine this jurisdictional fact." Estate of McKeag, 141 Cal. 407, 408, 74 Pac. 1040, 99 Am. St. Rep. 80.

The record discloses that the fraud practiced upon the court making the order of adoption in this case was the concealment from the court of facts affecting its jurisdiction. It is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition that when a court competent to adjudicate upon the subject-matter of the litigation obtains jurisdiction over the parties, within the territorial limits of its extent, such court alone has the power to adjudge upon the questions sought to be litigated in the suit, and no other court can deprive it of that power. The court finds, and it is most evident, that but for the concealment of the facts referred to it would not have made this decree of adoption in the first instance. Such concealment of facts affords ground for relief in equity. Bigelow on Fraud, vol. 1, p. 92. It is clear that the parties to the adoption proceedings concealed from the superior court the facts relative to the action of the superior court of Contra Costa county, and upon which facts the jurisdiction of the superior court of Los Angeles county depended. This was a fraud upon the court. Dunham v. Dunham, 162 Ill. 589, 44 N. E. 841, 35 L. R. A. 70.

We do not regard the case of Younger v. Younger, 106 Cal. 377, 39 Pac. 779, as having any application to the case under consideration. That case simply determines that, where the adoption was regularly had, the status of the child was changed, and it no longer remained the child of the parties to the marriage, but became the child of another, and its relation to its natural parents ceased, and the jurisdiction of the divorce court was terminated. In that case, however, it is shown that the decree awarding the custody was absolute in its terms and not a limited custody, as here provided, and that no notice was necessary to the offending party in the divorce proceeding; but in that case the assumption of jurisdiction upon application to amend the order, and practically an amendment thereto or an intention to amend made manifest, does not exist. There is a marked distinction between the jurisdiction which a court may exercise and jurisdiction which it has assumed, upon proper notice, to exercise. Further than this, actions for divorce are equitable in their character. Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 187, 22 Pac. 648, 15 Am. St. Rep. 38. When necessary for the purpose of justice, courts will, by applying the doctrine of relation, consider an act to have been done at some antecedent period. Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. Ed. 534. The circumstances surrounding the decree entered in this case affecting the custody of this child, and the rights of the father with reference thereto, furnish an instance where the effect of such decree should, by vacation and modification, be made to operate from the date of the hearing and oral announcement of the decision. Were it assumed that section 224, Civ. Code, is intended to deprive a parent, who has been awarded the custody of a child, of the right to notice of adoption proceedings simply because he had violated the marriage obligation in some particular way, would be to render such section invalid as destroying a vested right without due process of law. We think it, however, not necessary to go so far as to determine such section to be unconstitutional, but rather to read it in connection with the other sections and construe it as intending to provide for this character of notice in a particular class of cases, of which this is not one.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

14 Cal. App. 283

PEOPLE v. KINARD. (Cr. 284.)

(Court of Appeal, First District California. Sept. 22, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1910.)

Criminal Law (§ 149*) — Embezzlement — Limitations—Starting Point.

Where the prosecuting witness in a charge of embezzlement drew a check and gave it to accused with instructions not to cash it unless she sent for the money, but defendant cashed it at once and converted the money to his own use, the statute of limitations began to run immediately and not later when a demand of the money was made on accused; his withholding of the money being wrongful from the beginning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

C. E. Kinard was convicted of embezzlement and he appeals. Reversed.

James H. Boyer, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was charged in the information with the crime of embezzlement in having received and appropriated to his own use on the 10th day of December, 1907, the sum of $225, the property of one Mrs. Louisa Lamprell. The evidence shows that on the 24th day of October, 1906, Mrs. Lamprell drew a check on the Oakland Bank of Savings in favor of the defendant, and expressly instructed the defendant not to draw the money until such time as she should send for it from Australia where she intended to go on a visit. The defendant, contrary to his instructions, cashed the check on the following day, and appropriated the money to his own use on said day by paying the same to one Whitehead on account of his own indebtedness by reason of the purchase of land from said Whitehead. Mrs. Lamprell returned to California in September, 1907; and, upon discovering by inquiry at the bank that defendant had collected the money on the day after the check was drawn, made various efforts to collect the money from defendant, who put her off from time to time with various misrepresentations, excuses, and subterfuges. On December 10, 1907, after various efforts to collect the money, she made a demand in writing upon the defendant for the return of the money, which demand was not complied with and the money has never been returned to her. The information was filed March 28, 1910, three years and five months after the defendant had appropriated the money, and two years and six months after Mrs. Lamprell knew of such misappropriation.

The claim is made that the offense is barred by the statute of limitations, and we are constrained to so hold. Pen. Code, § 800; Ex parte Vice, 5 Cal. App. 153, 89 Pac. 983; Territory v. Monroe, 10 Ariz. 53, 85 Pac. 651; People v. Goodrich, 142 Cal. 216, 75 Pac. 796; People v. Fly, 107 Cal. 497, 40 Pac. 805. In this case a demand was not necessary to start the running of the statute. It is not a case where the defendant held the funds in some official capacity, such as guardian, trustee of an express trust, treasurer of a society or corporation, or under such circumstances that he could not know to whom he could legally turn over the funds. The statute commenced to run on the day the money was wrongfully appropriated and the full three years expired with no attempt at prosecution.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

14 Cal. App. 244

METCALFE, County Treasurer, v. MERRITT.

(Civ. 866.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 13, 1910.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 222*) — "RECLAMATION DISTRICT"—NATURE.

A reclamation district is a public, as distinguished from a private, corporation, acting as a state agency invested with limited powers, but it is not a municipal corporation possessing in any degree general powers of government, though, within the limits of the authority granted to it, it exercises public functions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 29*) — PUBLIC CORPORATIONS — VALIDITY OF ORGANIZATION — COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The existence of public corporations can only be questioned by the power from which they derive their right; a collateral attack testing the regularity of their organization not being permissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 79; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 222*) — RECLAMATION DISTRICTS — ORGANIZATION— VALIDITY.

One who successfully bids for reclamation district bonds on condition that they be legal and valid can question any proceeding which was so defective as to invalidate the bonds, but cannot attack the validity of the organization of the district if the district had a de facto existence when it issued the bonds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 222*) — RECLAMATION DISTRICTS — ORGANIZATION— PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

A petition for organization of a reclamation district sufficiently described the land where it referred to a well-known ranch and to a map, though the latter is not shown to have been recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 222*) — RECLAMATION DISTRICTS — TERRITORY INVOLVED—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

The acreage of lots in a town involved in a reclamation project is sufficiently shown by a map, where the map shows the scale upon which it was drawn, and by simple calculation the quantity of ground contained in each lot can be readily ascertained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by W. B. Metcalfe, County Treasurer of the County of Santa Barbara, against George P. Merritt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Squier, for appellant. Richards & Carrier, C. U. Armstrong, and Gray, Barker, Bowen, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, amici curiæ, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff in April, 1910, as treasurer of the county of Santa Barbara, offered for sale certain bonds of a reclamation district known as "Reclamation District No. 798," which district had theretofore been organized under the provisions of section 3446 et seq., Pol. Code. In response to the offer defendant submitted a bid to purchase 10 of the bonds for the price of $1,021.20. Ten per cent. of this amount he deposited with his bid. Upon his offer being accepted, demand was made that he pay the remainder of the purchase price, which he refused to do. This action was then brought to compel payment for the bonds.

In the complaint the various steps taken preliminary to the organization of the reclamation district, with the proceedings had subsequent thereto, including those for the issuance and sale of the bonds in question, are set out in detail. It is alleged, referring to the offer of defendant to purchase the 10 bonds, that the bid "was made contingent upon said bonds being legal and valid." A general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was presented and overruled. Defendant failed to answer, and judgment was entered against him for the amount prayed for. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The defendant by his demurrer sought to call into question the regularity of the organization of the district, directing his attack solely to the original petition filed with the board of supervisors, by which the proceedings for the formation of the district were initiated. He contends that this petition was insufficient to give to that board jurisdiction to act, in that certain facts required to be stated therein were not set forth. Section 3446 of the Political Code provides that the petition shall contain, among other things, "a description of the lands by legal subdivisions, or other boundaries, the county in which they are situated, the number of acres in the proposed district and in each tract." The particular objection made, touching the sufficiency of the petition, is that it did not describe all of the land embraced within the proposed district by legal subdivisions or other boundaries, and that the acreage in certain parcels was not stated. The board of supervisors approved the petition, and all of the subsequent steps required to be taken by the statute are conceded to have been taken, and to have been in regular form. They so appear to have been, as alleged in the complaint. Trustees were selected to manage the affairs of the district, work of reclamation was undertaken, indebtedness was incurred, and money expended. The district became, and continued to be up to and after the time the bonds were issued, and still asserts the right to act as, a duly organized reclamation district. It had an existence de facto if not de jure.

Reclamation districts belong to that class of civil organizations denominated "public corporations." Mr. Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations at paragraph 22, says: "Corporations intended to assist in the conduct of local civil government are sometimes styled political, sometimes public, sometimes civil, sometimes municipal, and certain kinds of them, with very restricted powers, quasi corporations. All of these by way of distinction from private corporations. Thus an incorporated school district or county, as well as city, is a public corporation; but the school district, or county, properly speaking, is not, while a city is, a municipal corporation." Under this classification a reclamation district is a public as distinguished from a private, corporation. It acts as a state agency invested with certain limited powers, and restricted to the doing of a particular work, public in its nature. It is not a municipal corporation possessing in any degree general powers of government, but nevertheless, within the limits of the authority granted to it, it exercises public functions. Among other rights conferred is that to make rules for the government of the district which are binding upon the property holders and their successors. Indebtedness can be incurred for reclamation work, and the charge may become a lien against the real property of the district. The scheme of organization comprehends a complete system for the doing of reclamation work, with all of the incidental power to compel the payment of assessments levied, and secure the accomplishment of the intended project of reclamation. Such a district, to be sure, possesses autonomy in a very limited sense, but it is in no wise a private corporation. As to public corporations of any variety, the decisions are almost unvarying to the effect that their existence cannot be called into question by any suitor, except the power from which they derive their right to be; and that an attack, collaterally made, with a view to testing the regularity of their existence or organization, will not be permitted. Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506, 37 Pac. 514, 777. In the case of Reclamation District No. 542 v. Turner, 104 Cal. 335, 37 Pac. 1039, the Supreme Court, in considering a like question, said: "This court has repeatedly held that corporations similar to the plaintiff in this case are of a quasi public character, and that the legality and regularity of the proceedings leading up to their final creation, cannot be attacked collaterally. This is the course attempted to be pursued here, and a long line of authority is opposed to it."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The defendant in this case is in the same position as was the defendant in the case last noted, and the attack which he makes is collateral and unauthorized, unless there is something in the terms of his bid which permits him to assume a different position. The bid for the 10 bonds was, as expressed in the language of the complaint, "contingent upon the bonds being legal and valid." This condition would entitle defendant to question any proceeding which was so defective as to invalidate the bonds. If the bonds are binding obligations against the property of the district, however, that is all that defendant can ask or require. As before suggested, the district had a live de facto existence when it issued the bonds. As a de facto corporation the acts of its trustees and officers were binding. The purchaser of bonds of such a district would acquire a lien against the property thereof, securing the payment of these obligations. Defendant here cannot go further in his inquiry when this fact has been ascertained, and it matters not at all to him then whether the district was duly organized or not. In the case of Hamilton v. County of San Diego, 108 Cal. 283, 41 Pac. 305, the plaintiff was a taxpayer within the Coronado school district and brought his action to recover money paid to satisfy an assessment levied for school purposes, basing his right to recover on the ground that the district had no legal existence. It was said by the Supreme Court in that case: "Since the Coronado school district had a de facto existence, the plaintiff could not have enjoined the collection of taxes, nor have resisted an action for the same on the ground of illegality of its organization"—citing cases. This decision, and the cases cited therein, fully support the position we have taken here, and these conclusions, we believe, are not in conflict with anything that was said in the cases of People v. Reclamation District No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016, and Reclamation District No. 537 v. Burges, 122 Cal. 442, 55 Pac. 156, when those decisions are considered strictly in the light of the particular points presented and the facts involved.

The appeal of defendant is thus disposed of; and while the court is not called upon to consider the objections urged to the sufficiency of the petition presented to the board of supervisors for the organization of the district, in view of further litigation which may follow upon the same subject, it is appropriate, and perhaps desirable, that something more be said. In our opinion, the petition was sufficient. The description of the land embraced within the Rancho Guadalupe was quite general in character, but it referred to what was apparently a well-known ranch and also referred to a map made by one Stratton. This map is not alleged to have been recorded, but with the reference to it, as made in the petition, under the decision in Vance v. Fore, 24 Cal. 444, the land was described with sufficient definiteness to make a good conveyance. If sufficient for that purpose, it must have been sufficient for the purposes of a petition like the one here attacked. So, also, as to the objection that the acreage of lots in the town of Guadalupe is not stated. There is a map of the town of Guadalupe attached to the complaint and made a part of it. This map bears indorsements that it was made in 1875 and recorded in 1880 in the recorder's office of Santa Barbara county. Where many of the lots are delineated thereon, the footage on exterior lines is shown dimly. There is a further indorsement on the map showing the scale upon which the lines are drawn. By a simple calculation the quantity of ground contained in each lot can be readily ascertained. A substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute is all that is required, and, tested by that measure, the petition was sufficient.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

14 Cal. App. 208

BANK OF ANDERSON v. HOME INS. CO. OF NEW YORK. (Civ. 704.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 10, 1910.)

1. Contracts (§ 335*)—Pleading—Waiver.

Plaintiff, relying on a waiver of performance of an act required by the contract on which his right of action depends, must specially plead waiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1675; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

2. Pleading (§ 205*)—Judgment (§ 18*)—Complaint—Sufficiency.

A complaint which shows the necessary facts, though inaccurately or ambiguously stated or appearing by necessary implication, is good as against a general demurrer, and supports a judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 504; Dec. Dig. § 205;* Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 34–37; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. Insurance (§ 634*) — Fire Insurance — Complaint—Sufficiency.

A complaint in an action on a fire policy, which alleges performance of all the conditions of the policy except that as to furnishing proofs of loss, and which avers that proofs of loss were not furnished "for the reason that said defendant denied and disclaimed all liability," sufficiently alleges that insured denied all liability, and refused to pay the loss, and thereby waived proofs of loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1603–1605; Dec. Dig. § 634.*]

4. Insurance (§ 385*)—Contracts—Waiver.

An insurer issuing a fire policy stipulating that it shall be void if insured procures other insurance without consent indorsed on the policy, and that no officer or agent may waive any provision of the policy except such as by the terms thereof may be the subject of agreement indorsed thereon, and the waiver must be written on the policy, may be bound by a waiver of a general agent, though no indorsement is made on the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1020–1023; Dec. Dig. § 385.*]

5. Insurance (§ 375*) — Agents — General Agents.

An agent of a foreign insurance company who issues, cancels, indorses, and delivers policies, solicits and writes insurance, collects the premiums for insurer, remits them to it, and attends to its business generally, is a general agent of insurer, and has authority to waive conditions in a policy, though the company has a general agent for the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 948; Dec. Dig. § 375.*]

6. Insurance (§ 375*) — Agents—"General Agent."

An agent of an insurance company, with general authority, is an agent who is authorized to take risks and enter into contracts of insurance without consulting the company, and such an agent has the same power to waive conditions in policies as the company itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 948; Dec. Dig. § 375.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3048–3051.]

7. Insurance (§ 386*)—Fire Policies—Waiver of Conditions.

Where insured in a fire policy stipulating that it should be void if he procured other insurance without consent indorsed on the policy procured additional insurance, and notified the agent issuing the first policy thereof, and the agent promised to make the proper indorsement but failed to do so, insurer in the first policy was equitably estopped from insisting on the forfeiture of the policy, notwithstanding its stipulation that no conditions should be waived unless written on the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1024; Dec. Dig. § 386.*]

8. Insurance (§ 378*)—Fire Policies—Waiver of Conditions.

A fire policy stipulating that it should be void if insured procured other insurance without consent indorsed on the policy covered the property of insured, and neither the agent of insurer nor a bank to whom the loss was made payable as collateral for a loan amply secured by a mortgage had any interest in the property, and insurer knew that the agent was an officer of the bank. Insurer through its general agent had full knowledge of the transaction, and ratified it. Insured procured additional insurance with the knowledge of the agent, who promised to make the proper indorsement, but failed to do so. There was no fraud on the part of insured and the bank. Held, that insurer was bound by the acts of its agent, and could not defeat a recovery for a loss on the ground that the agent's and insurer's interests conflicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 970–972; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

9. Insurance (§ 87*)—Fire Policies—Waiver of Conditions.

Where one is an agent of an insurance company, the company is bound as to third persons dealing with the agent in good faith as to all matters within the scope of the agent's real or apparent authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 121; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

10. Insurance (§ 665*) — Fire Insurance — Denial of Liability—Evidence.

In an action on a fire policy, evidence held to justify a finding that an adjuster of insurer denied liability, so that insurer was relieved of the duty of furnishing proofs of loss to hold insurer on the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1725; Dec. Dig. § 665.*]

11. Insurance (§ 558*) — Fire Insurance — Failure to Furnish Proofs of Loss.

Where the conduct of an insurer in a fire policy is such as to render the production of proofs or loss useless or unavailing, they are deemed waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1382; Dec. Dig. § 558.*]

12. Insurance (§ 670*) — Fire Insurance — Actions—Verdict.

Where, in an action on a fire policy, the jury found that there was a denial by the adjuster of insurer of all liability on the part of insurer, and that the general agent of insurer during the 60-day period after the fire denied liability, and refused to adjust the loss on the ground of a violation of a provision in the policy as to other insurance, a finding that a failure to furnish proofs of loss within 60 days after the fire was not on account of the refusal of insurer to adjust the loss did not defeat a recovery on the general verdict for insured.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1785-1787; Dec. Dig. § 670.*]

13. INSURANCE (§ 645*)—FIRE INSURANCE—PLEADINGS—ISSUES.

A plaintiff in an action on a fire policy must allege the performance of conditions precedent such as the giving of any required notice of loss and performance of promissory warranties, but stipulations which are in the nature of conditions subsequent going to defeat the liability of insurer must be alleged in the answer, and to the matters so alleged any defense by way of replication is open to plaintiff without pleading, and, where a forfeiture of the policy on the ground of plaintiff procuring additional insurance without consent indorsed on the policy is set up in the answer, plaintiff may show a waiver of the stipulation or an estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1640; Dec. Dig. § 645.*]

14. INSURANCE (§ 390*) — FIRE INSURANCE — STIPULATIONS—WAIVER.

An insurer in a fire policy stipulating that it shall be void if insured procures other insurance without consent indorsed on the policy must, to avoid a waiver of the condition on insured procuring additional insurance with the knowledge of the agent procuring the policy who agrees to make the proper indorsement, express its dissent in some way as by objecting to the additional insurance or by canceling the policy and returning the premium, and it must object in some way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1037, 1038; Dec. Dig. § 390.*]

15. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1070*)—HARMLESS ERROR — VERDICT — SPECIAL AND GENERAL VERDICTS.

Where, in view of special findings and the undisputed evidence, the general verdict was properly rendered for the successful party, the point whether an answer in the special verdict was correct was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4231-4233; Dec. Dig. § 1070.*]

16. TRIAL (§ 358*) — VERDICT — SPECIAL AND GENERAL VERDICTS.

An answer in a special verdict to a question calling for a conclusion of law cannot prevail over the findings of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 856; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Charles M. Head, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Anderson against the Home Insurance Company of New York. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Riley, for appellant. Herzinger & Herzinger, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was on a fire insurance policy, and from the judgment in favor of plaintiff and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial this appeal has been taken. The trial was had before a jury who made special findings upon various issues and also rendered a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the policy. The policy was issued December 13, 1906, to Seaman Bros. through one Barkuloo, the local agent of defendant at Anderson, Shasta county. The plaintiff had advanced said Seaman Bros. money to start them in business, and had the loss under the policy made payable to itself. After the issuance of the policy sued upon, some time in the spring of 1907, the exact time not appearing, Seaman Bros. secured other insurance from another company on the same property. The property was destroyed by fire in October, 1907, and the full amount of said second policy was paid. Other facts will appear as we proceed to notice the various points made by appellant.

1. The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. The complaint alleges a performance of all the terms and conditions of the policy, except that as to furnishing proofs of loss, and that said proof of loss was not furnished "for the reason that said defendant denied and disclaimed all liability." It is the contention of appellant that this is not an allegation that defendant did deny and disclaim all liability and refuse to pay the loss. The rule undoubtedly is that when a party relies upon the waiver of the performance of an act, upon which his right of action depends, such waiver must be specially pleaded. Aronson et al. v. Frankfort Accident, etc., Ins. Co., 9 Cal. App. 473, 99 Pac. 537. But it does appear, at least by necessary implication, that the defendant denied all liability, and it is elementary that "when necessary facts are shown by the complaint to exist, although inaccurately or ambiguously stated, or appearing by necessary implication, the judgment will be sustained. Reason requires that this rule shall be applied in case of a general demurrer." Amestoy v. Electric R. T. Co., 95 Cal. 314, 30 Pac. 551. The allegation that a certain condition exists because of a certain fact necessarily carries with it the implication that the fact exists also. The other objections to the complaint are equally technical and untenable.

2. The policy provided that "this entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added thereto, shall be void if insured now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy," and it also contained the usual and familiar provision that "no officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto; and as to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions, unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto; nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached." It is admitted that no agreement permitting the subsequent insurance nor any waiver of said provision was indorsed on said policy, and that circumstance presents the second question raised by appellant. Notwithstanding, however, the unequivocal and exacting terms of said provision, it is settled by the decisions beyond controversy that the insurer may be bound by the waiver of a general agent, although no indorsement whatever is made upon the policy.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In Arnold v. American Insurance Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 Pac. 182, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 6, it was held that, "notwithstanding a printed stipulation that any waiver must be made in writing and attached to the policy, such stipulation could not prevent the conduct of the officers of the company from constituting a waiver or estoppel of the company, based upon its presumed knowledge, when its proper officer had knowledge, where such conduct led the insured to rely upon his policy as a valid policy, although there was a breach of condition of which the company knew, in which case it will not be heard to allege such breach against a claim for a subsequent loss." In Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Insurance Co., 150 Cal. 440, 89 Pac. 102, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234, the rule is stated as follows: "General agents authorized to issue and deliver new policies are regarded as having the same power to waive conditions and forfeitures as the companies themselves. The limitations embodied in the stipulation do not prevent them from making new contracts; and waivers constituting a new contract upon sufficient consideration need not be evidenced by writing nor indorsed upon the policy, if made by a general agent having power to make the contract, no matter what limitations or conditions may be expressed in the policy." To the same effect is Raulet v. N. W. National Ins. Co. (Sup.) 107 Pac. 292. See, also, 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 935.

The evidence shows that the agent, Mr. Barkuloo, was clothed with authority to waive said condition and stipulation, and that his conduct and declarations must be regarded as a waiver of the same. He testified that "as agent for the Home Insurance Company I issued policies, canceled policies, indorsed policies, issued and delivered policies, solicited and wrote insurance, collected the premiums for the company, remitted them to the company, and attended to the business of the company generally." There is no evidence to the contrary. If the foregoing powers did not constitute him a general agent in that community, it is difficult to conceive what additional authority is required for said purpose. "Agents authorized to issue and deliver policies are regarded as having the same power to waive conditions in policies as the company themselves, and can therefore waive conditions and forfeitures." Mackintosh Case, supra. "It may be laid down as a general rule that an agent with general authority is an agent who is authorized to take risks and enter into contracts of insurance without consulting the company, may waive any of the conditions contained in the policy, and his knowledge of the facts contained in the risk is the knowledge of the company." 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 942.

In Farnum v. Phœnix Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 261, 23 Pac. 874, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233, it is said: "Whether or not any particular agent has the general power of the company to make an oral contract or an oral waiver of a condition, notwithstanding the provision in the policy requires a writing, is a question of fact. Insurance Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234 [24 L. Ed. 689]; Steen v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 89 N. Y. 326, 42 Am. Rep. 297. The authorities before cited show that a local agent who is clothed with general power to solicit and consummate contracts of insurance within a certain territory stands in the stead of the company, and represents its whole power to give validity to the contracts which he is authorized to execute and deliver, and to waive conditions precedent to liability by oral agreement, including the condition as to the mode of waiver of such conditions precedent. In this case the circumstance that the company had general agents for the state located at San Francisco does not affect the question, since it conferred its whole power in regard to the policy in question upon its agent at Stockton, who appears to have received his appointment and instructions direct from the home office, in the state of New York, and who signed himself as the direct agent of the defendant." The foregoing must set at rest the proposition that Barkuloo had authority to waive said condition and bind the company.

Did his conduct and declarations in reference to the said second policy of insurance amount to a waiver of said stipulation? Concerning this there can be no more doubt than of his authority to bind his principal. Philip Seaman testified that "I told Mr. Barkuloo that we had taken out other insurance, that the other agent told me to notify him about it and to note it on the policy of the Home. I told him to attend to the matter, and he said he would and note it on their policy. At the time the Home policy was in the Bank of Anderson and I showed him the policy of the Insurance Company of North America. I had a slip with me that Mr. Gardner gave me along with this policy. I gave it to Mr. Barkuloo and told him to note it on the policy." The testimony of the agent is substantially the same. Additionally he gives the substance of the slip which he says was in the usual form, and testifies that "I had the policy before me at the time that I had the slip. All that I had to do to affix it to the policy was to put mucilage on the slip and stick it on the policy," and he admits that he simply neglected to do it.

Strictly speaking, this is probably not a waiver of the said conditions, but a case of equitable estoppel. The effect, however, is the same. The insured did everything required of them. When they took out the second policy, they notified the agent of the Home Insurance Company who promised to make the proper indorsement for his company. The insured had a right to rely upon this promise by virtue of which they probably refrained from securing other insurance, and equity will treat that as done which ought to have been done, and not permit appellant to question it. The rule is well settled, which is stated in the case of Ætna Ins. Co. v. Eastman (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 255, as follows: "When a general agent of a fire insurance company, with power to issue and deliver policies, solicit and write insurance, and otherwise to act for and on behalf of the company in the conduct of its business in a certain place, receives notice from the insured of the taking of other insurance on property covered by a policy issued by such agent, but fails to indorse the company's consent on the policy, as required by the policy's terms to maintain its validity, and fails to make any objection to the taking of the other insurance, the company is estopped to assert a forfeiture for want of such indorsement, though the policy further provides that no agent has power to waive the provisions unless the waiver shall be written on or attached to the policy, and that no privilege affecting the insurance shall exist or be claimed by the insured, unless also written or attached."

Neither can there be any question that the evidence showing the waiver or estoppel was properly admitted. Arnold v. American Ins. Co., supra; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Grove, 215 Ill. 299, 74 N. E. 141, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

But it is contended by appellant that, admitting that "one with the powers of Barkuloo could be held to be empowered to waive the provision as to other insurance in this transaction, he could not be considered and in law was not the agent of defendant, and his acts or neglect could not bind the defendant," for the reason that his interests and those of the defendant were conflicting by virtue of the fact that he was the vice president, cashier, and manager of the bank to which the policy was made payable. The evidence, however, shows clearly that the property insured belonged to Seaman Bros., and that neither the Bank of Anderson nor Barkuloo had any interest therein and appellant had knowledge of Barkuloo's relation to the bank. Said policy was made payable to the bank as collateral security for a loan of $2,000, which the bank had made to Seaman Bros., and which was amply secured by a mortgage on $10,000 worth of real estate. The evidence shows, further, that the company, through its general agent in San Francisco, had full knowledge of the transaction and in fact ratified it. It would seem to be just and elementary that since the insurer had knowledge of the bank's interest in the policy and of Barkuloo's position in the bank, and directed its agent, Barkuloo, to have the policy made payable to the bank in case of loss that it cannot after loss question the authority of its own agent because of an act which it authorized and ratified. Under the facts disclosed, manifestly the insurance company may have cause for complaint against the agent, Barkuloo, but for his dereliction the insured, free from fault and fraud, cannot be held responsible. There is no principle of law or equity that, under such circumstances, precludes the insured from recovery. The knowledge of the second insurance acquired by Barkuloo was acquired as the agent of the insurer, and was present in his mind at the time he made the promise to the insured, and this satisfies the requirement of the rule. 6 Current Law, p. 127; Foreman v. German All. Ins. Co., 104 Va. 694, 52 S. E. 337, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1071. It cannot be controverted that, where there is an agency, the company is bound as to third persons dealing with the agent in good faith as to all matters within the scope of his real or apparent authority. Sellers v. Com. Fire Ins. Co., 105 Ala. 282, 16 South. 798. "A general insurance agency representing several companies with authority to act upon applications and issue policies, as well as to cancel the same in proper cases, may also act as the agent of the insured in waiving notice of cancellation and in accepting a delivery of a new policy when substituted for the one cancelled." Hamm Realty Co. v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 80 Minn. 139, 83 N. W. 41.

The cases cited by appellant are distinguishable from the one at bar in the following particulars, as substantially pointed out by respondent: In Rockford Ins. Co. v. Winfield, 57 Kan. 576, 47 Pac. 511, the banks, of which the agent of the insurance company was an officer in each, held security on the property covered by the policies of insurance and the companies had no knowledge of this and, besides, the question of forfeiture or waiver was not involved; the point being that the company had declined the risk. The decision is really based upon the ground that the condition of affairs was not disclosed to the insurance company, but it is held that the agent would be authorized to write a policy even on his own property, and the company would be bound by it if fully informed of the facts and the risk was accepted. The other cases—Ritt v. Washington

Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 353, Bentley v. Columbia Ins. Co., 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 595, and Spare v. Home Mutual Ins. Co., (C. C.) 19 Fed. 14—involve ownership of the property by the agent, and illustrate the rule that the agent of the insurance company cannot as such agent insure himself or the corporation of which he is an officer, shareholder or director unless all the facts are known to the company or unless such insurance is ratified after such knowledge is acquired.

There is some intimation by appellant of fraud on the part of the insured and plaintiff in regard to said second insurance, but the suggestion finds no support in the evidence. There was apparently no attempt at concealment, and the property at the time said policy was issued far exceeded in value the amount of the two policies.

3. We think there was sufficient evidence to support the allegation of the complaint that defendant disclaimed and denied all liability under the policy, and therefore the failure to furnish proof of loss was excused. One John Ehrlich was sent by defendant to adjust the loss. As to the extent of his authority he testified: "I am an independent fire adjuster and work for the Home of New York" and other companies. "As a loss comes along I am hired to adjust it. I go on the road and tell parties that I am adjusting for such and such a company, and it is accepted, and whenever I settle the loss the money is ready. I went to Anderson to adjust the loss of the Seaman Bros." Philip Seaman, among other things, testified that Ehrlich said: "You know this company is not responsible for the loss on that policy." George Seaman's testimony is that Ehrlich said: "Well, I cannot do anything with this. The company is not responsible or liable for this loss. Just before we left for home on the morning train I asked Ehrlich what he was going to do about the matter, if he was going to straighten it up, and he said, 'No; the company isn't liable.' I told him their agent at Anderson had been notified of the other insurance being taken out." Barkuloo's testimony was of the same import, and he added: "I was trying to persuade him (Ehrlich) that the company was responsible, and he insisted that they were not, and finally he said that he had a stipulation, I believe he called it, signed by the brothers, and it was to be taken up by the home office. He said I could take it up with them if I wasn't satisfied with his statements regarding it." We think the foregoing justifies the inference that Ehrlich disclaimed any liability on the part of the company, and from his statements the insured could reasonably conclude that any proof of loss would be unavailing, as the company would reject it. It would also seem that his authority was broad enough to include the matter in question. In McCollough v. Home Ins. Co., 155 Cal. 659, 663, 102 Pac. 814, 816, formal proofs of loss were not made by reason of the statements of the adjuster, and the court said: "The court was fully justified in finding from this evidence that the company had waived the requirement of written and sworn proof of loss"—citing cases. Again, within the time for presenting proofs of loss, a letter was received from the general agent at San Francisco in which expressions are found indicative of the company's purpose to resist the claim. This letter was in answer to those written by Barkuloo in which he stated his reasons for believing the company was liable for the loss. In the reply Barkuloo was charged as responsible for the condition of affairs and reference is made to "this alleged claim" and the "gross negligence" of said Barkuloo as "the obstacle in the way of an adjustment." Furthermore, it is stated that "What action he (Ehrlich) took as an adjuster would necessarily have been the action of the undersigned." While said letter is somewhat evasive, it is a fair inference from it that the company would resist the claim in any event, and it may be considered as furnishing additional assurance of the authority of Ehrlich. There is some other correspondence between the same parties tending to the same conclusion, but we deem it unnecessary to notice it. We cannot hold that there was no substantial evidence to support said allegation, and, of course, the rule is well settled that, "Where the conduct of the company is such as to render the production or correction of proofs of loss useless or unavailing, they are deemed waived." Williams v. Hartford Ins. Co., 54 Cal. 442, 35 Am. Rep. 77; 13 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 347; Farnum v. Phœnix Ins. Co., supra; Allen v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 12 Idaho, 653, 88 Pac. 245, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 903; Home Ins. Co. v. Balt. Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 527, 23 L. Ed. 868; Civ. Code, § 3522.

This view is not inconsistent with special finding No. 11 of the jury wherein the answer, "No," was given to the following question: "Did Seaman Bros. and said plaintiff or either of them fail to furnish proofs of loss of the fire to defendant as required by the policy of insurance for the reason that said defendant within 60 days after said fire and loss denied and disclaimed all liability under said policy of insurance on account of said fire and loss and refused to adjust said loss and pay the amount of said policy?" As pointed out by respondent, the material questions as to this were: Did the company actually deny all liability, or was there a refusal to pay, and was it apparent from the conduct and statements of the company that proofs of loss would be useless and unavailing? The jury in said finding No. 11 did not answer these questions, but, in view of the testimony of Barkuloo to the effect that he thought he had furnished proofs of loss, the jury found that these other considerations were not the reason for his failure. The jury actually did find that there was a denial by the adjuster of all liability on the part of the company, and also that the general agent at San Francisco, during the 60-day period after the fire, denied liability and refused to adjust said loss and pay the same on the ground of the violation of the provision as to other insurance.

4. There is no merit in the contention that it was necessary for plaintiff to allege the waiver or estoppel by reason of the agreement of Barkuloo to make the necessary indorsement on the policy. The true rule is stated in Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 668, 84 Pac. 185, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 6, as follows: "It is incumbent upon plaintiffs in an action upon a policy of insurance to allege the performance of conditions precedent, such as the giving of any required notice of loss, etc., and performance of all promissory warranties; but limitations, stipulations, and conditions which are in the nature of conditions subsequent, and go to defeat the liability of the insurer, must be alleged in the answer, as they were in this case. To this matter so alleged in the answer, under our system of pleading, any defense by way of replication was open to plaintiff without pleading." Here the forfeiture was set up in the answer, and it was proper in order to meet that for the plaintiff to show the waiver or estoppel. The cases cited by appellant involved conditions precedent and not subsequent.

5. It is claimed that the court erred in instructing the jury that "a provision of a fire insurance policy that it should be void if the insured procured other insurance without the consent of the insurer, and without such consent being indorsed upon or attached to the policy is waived by failure on the part of the insurer to object or cancel the policy and return the unearned premium, before loss by fire of the insured property, after said insurer had knowledge that other insurance had been procured." The contention is that the retention of premium does not waive forfeiture. It is argued that the insurer is entitled to payment of the premium as soon as the thing insured is exposed to the peril insured against (section 2616, Civ. Code), and that the contingency upon the happening of which the insured is entitled to a return is provided for in sections 2618 and 2619 of the Civil Code, as follows: "If a peril insured against has existed, and the insurer has been liable for any period, however short, the insured is not entitled to return of premiums so far as that particular risk is concerned." "A person is entitled to a return of the premium when the contract is voidable on account of the fraud or misrepresentation of the insurer, or, on account of facts, of the existence of which the insured was ignorant without his fault; or, when by any default of the insured other than fraud, the insurer never incurred any liability under the policy." The argument is that by virtue of these provisions, if appellant had canceled the policy for the reason that the insured had secured other insurance, there was no obligation to return any portion of the premium, and therefore its failure to do so could not be considered as a waiver of said stipulation in the policy. The instruction is in harmony with many decisions from other jurisdictions, but, granting that it required more of the insurer than the statute justifies, it is perfectly apparent that it could have done no injury to appellant. Under all the decisions and according to the familiar doctrine of equitable estoppel, to avoid a waiver under the circumstances mentioned the insurer must express its dissent in some way. It could be done manifestly by objecting or by canceling the policy and returning the premium. It was at least its duty to object, and, since it did not do so, it waived the said stipulation, and it is entirely without prejudice that the court exacted too much in the other alternative. In other words, while the instruction, abstractly considered, may be erroneous, when applied to the undisputed facts, it could possibly have done no harm. Besides, the instruction may be entirely disregarded for the reason already suggested that the evidence shows without conflict that the company, through its authorized agent, promised to make the proper indorsement, and this was sufficient to bind the company. The authorities probably all agree to the rule stated in Wood on Insurance, p. 1102, and quoted with approval in Kalmutz v. Insurance Co., 186 Pa. 576, 40 Atl. 817, as follows: "Where other insurance is required to be indorsed on the policy, if notice thereof is given to the insurer or its agent, and consent is not indorsed, nor the policy canceled, further compliance is treated as waived and the insurer is estopped from setting up such other insurance to defeat its liability upon the policy, and the same is true when the same agent issued both policies, although consent is not indorsed upon either policy, yet, being issued with knowledge of the facts, the insurer is treated as having waived compliance, and is estopped from setting up nonindorsement in defense. In all cases where the insurer, at the time the policy was issued, knew of other insurance, and there is no agreement for its cancellation or nonrenewal, or when notice is given that other insurance has been obtained, it is bound either to indorse consent upon the policy or cancel it, or, failing to do either, it will be treated as having assented thereto."

6. There was sufficient evidence to support all the material special findings. The answer "Yes" to the question: "Was any consent in writing to said other insurance given by defendant?" is not strictly correct, although it represents the legal effect of defendant's conduct. But it is entirely immaterial since, if answered either way, in view of the other findings as to waiver and the undisputed evidence, the general verdict must have been for plaintiff. Many special findings were submitted to the jury, some of them complicated, and quite likely to produce confusion in the minds of the jurors. They probably answered inadvertently "No" to the following question: "Did the defendant, with knowledge of the facts relied upon by plaintiff as a waiver of the provision as to other insurance, namely, the alleged taking of a slip to Barkuloo, the alleged notification to him of the other insurance, dispense with the condition that consent to such insurance must be indorsed in writing on said policy?" But this plainly calls for a conclusion of law and should not prevail over the findings of fact.

7. The nonwaiver agreement signed by the insured Seaman Bros., cannot have the effect claimed for it by appellant. The acts upon which plaintiff relied for a waiver of the requirement to furnish proofs of loss occurred after said agreement was executed and are not included within its terms. McCollough v. Home Ins. Co., supra.

No further specific consideration of appellant's objections is considered necessary. We think the complaint is sufficient, the cause was fairly tried, the evidence supports the findings, and they, in turn, support the judgment, that no prejudicial error was committed, and the judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 224

PEOPLE v. TOMALTY. (Cr. 229.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 12, 1910.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 1023*)—Orders Appealable.

Under Pen. Code, § 1237, authorizing appeals from a final judgment of conviction, from an order denying a new trial, and from any order made after judgment affecting the substantial rights of accused, an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment, is not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2588; Dec. Dig. § 1023.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 1134*)—Appeal—Questions Reviewable.

Under Pen. Code, § 1259, authorizing the court on appeal from a judgment to review any intermediate order involving the merits, the court on appeal from a judgment may review any error committed in denying a motion in arrest of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2997; Dec. Dig. § 1134.*]

3. Forgery (§ 5*)—"Falsifying Record"—Intent.

Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, punishing falsifying any record in any public office, do not make a fraudulent purpose an ingredient of the offense, and a falsification of a public record willfully and knowingly made is an offense without regard to any purpose to defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. Forgery (§ 15*)—Falsification of Records—"Public Record."

The charter of the city and county of San Francisco, which requires the treasurer to keep the account belonging to each fund separate, and which requires the bond and warrant clerk of the police court to account for and pay to the treasurer all moneys received as bail, requires the treasurer to receive, and, on proper order pay out, bail money, and he must keep a separate and distinct account of such receipts and disbursements, and, where the accounts are kept in a ledger, the ledger is a "public record" within Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, and falsification of an entry in the ledger is an offense under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 15.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5818; vol. 8, p. 7773.]

5. Forgery (§ 15*)—Falsification of Records—"Public Record."

To make an entry or record of the official acts of a public officer a public record within Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, prohibiting the falsification of public records, it is not necessary that the record is expressly required by law to be kept, but it is sufficient if it is necessary or convenient to the discharge of official duty, and any record required by law to be kept by an officer, or which he keeps as necessary or convenient to the discharge of his official duty, is a public record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

6. Forgery (§ 15*)—Falsification of Records.

The purpose of Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, punishing the falsification of public records, is to protect the public archives, and not to affect private rights, and ledger entries constituting a public record may be falsified in violation of the statute, though the ledger entries are inadmissible as evidence of the facts therein shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

7. Forgery (§ 15*)—Falsification of Records—"Filed or Deposited."

The books of account of the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, showing the condition of the account of bail moneys received and paid out, are "filed or deposited" within Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, punishing the falsification of records "filed or deposited" in any public office; the quoted words being equivalent to the words "on file or on deposit."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

8. Forgery (§ 27*)—Alteration of Record—Indictment—Surplusage.

An allegation in an indictment charging an alteration of a public record in violation of Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, that the alteration was fraudulently done, may be disregarded as surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

9. Indictment and Information (§ 148*)—Uncertainty—Demurrer.

A demurrer to an indictment for uncertainty must indicate in what particular the indictment is not direct or is not certain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 495; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

10. Criminal Law (§ 369*)—Evidence of Other Offenses—Admissibility.

Evidence connecting accused with the commission of other crimes wholly independent of the one for which he is on trial is inadmissible; but evidence of other crimes logically tending to prove any fact necessary or pertinent to the proof of the crime charged is admissible.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

11. Criminal Law (§ 372*)—Evidence—Admissibility—Other Offenses.

On a trial for altering an entry in a ledger on file in the office of the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco so as to increase the amount of money apparently paid by the treasurer out of a particular fund, evidence of other falsifications of accounts in the office and of the destruction of some leaves from a ledger of accounts of a special fund is admissible to show that the alteration for which accused was on trial was not a lawful alteration to correct an error in his books, but was a willful falsification as a part of a plan to conceal a shortage in the moneys in the treasury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 833, 834; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

12. Forgery (§ 38*)—Falsification of Records—Evidence—Admissibility.

On a trial for falsifying an entry in a ledger in the office of the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco so as to increase the amount of money apparently paid by the treasurer out of a fund, evidence of a shortage in the treasurer's office is admissible to show a motive for accused to make the falsification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 108; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

13. Criminal Law (§ 489*) — Opinion Evidence—Cross-Examination—Extent.

That an expert has been employed and paid by the party calling him is a proper matter for cross-examination for consideration by the jury to affect the credibility of the expert; but it is not error for the court to refuse to allow a showing of the amount paid to the expert.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1078; Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

14. Criminal Law (§ 448*)—Evidence—Opinion Evidence.

A question as to whether, during the experience of a witness in the office of the treasurer of a municipality, it was possible for a bookkeeper in the office to have access to any of the funds in the treasury, was properly excluded as calling for an opinion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1035–1051; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

15. Criminal Law (§ 534*)—Evidence—Sufficiency.

The guilt of accused cannot be proved by his confessions without other evidence or circumstances showing the commission of the crime, and unless there is other evidence the jury must acquit accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1202–1205, 1222–1224; Dec. Dig. § 534.*]

16. Criminal Law (§ 1173*)—Appeal—Harmless Error.

Where, on a trial for falsifying a record in a public office, there was evidence aside from any extrajudicial confession showing the commission of the offense, and there was evidence that accused before his indictment admitted that he had altered the public record to correct an entry therein and make it conform to the truth, and the court charged that accused was not guilty if he made the alteration in the ordinary course of business of keeping the records in the office, and also charged on the necessity of proof of guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, the refusal to charge that accused could not be convicted on his confession without other evidence of the offense was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3164–3168; Dec. Dig. § 1173.*]

17. Criminal Law (§ 829*)—Instructions—Sufficiency.

Where the court charged, in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, that the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth or his motives, the refusal to charge that the jury in judging of the testimony of accused must presume that he told the truth, and that unless the presumption had been repelled his testimony was entitled to full credit, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

James C. Tomalty was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert Choynski and Costello & Costello, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HALL, J. The defendant was charged by indictment with a felony under sections 113 and 114 of the Penal Code. Upon his trial he was found guilty as charged, and upon judgment being pronounced against him he appealed to this court from the judgment and the orders denying his motions in arrest of judgment and for a new trial. The order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable (section 1237, Pen. Code); but this is of no consequence, for any error committed by the court in denying such motion is reviewable on appeal from the judgment (section 1259, Pen. Code). Section 113 of the Penal Code provides that "every officer having the custody of any record, map or book, or of any paper or proceeding of any court, filed or deposited in any public office, or placed in his hands for any purpose, who is guilty of stealing, willfully destroying, mutilating, defacing, altering or falsifying, removing or secreting the whole or any part of such record, map, book, paper or proceeding, or who permits any other person so to do, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than one year nor more than fourteen years." Section 114 of the Penal Code provides that "every person not an officer such as is referred to in the preceding section, who is guilty of any of the acts specified in that section, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, or in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by both." The indictment does not charge that defendant was an officer such as is referred to in section 113, but expressly alleges that he was not such officer. The gravamen of the charge set forth in the indictment is that defendant on or about the 17th day of May, 1906, did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, knowingly, and fraudulently alter and falsify an entry in a certain book designated as the "ledger," filed and deposited in the treasurer's office of the city and county of San Francisco, and in which were stated, kept, and entered the accounts of the various special funds of said city and county, including the police court bail money special fund. As appears from the allegations of the indictment, prior to the alteration and falsification charged against defendant, there was an entry in said ledger under date of April 17, 1906, consisting of the figures "605," indicating and intended to indicate that the sum of $605 and no more had been disbursed by the county treasurer on the 14th day of April, 1906, out of the police court bail money special fund, and in truth and in fact the sum of $605 and no more had been so disbursed by said treasurer on said day. That defendant, well knowing that said entry of the figures "605" correctly represented the amount of disbursements by the said treasurer out of said fund on said date, did on or about the said 17th day of May, 1906, willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, knowingly, and fraudulently alter and falsify said record, book, and paper, to wit, said ledger, and particularly said entry of the figures "605," by then and there inserting before said figures "605," the figure "5," so that the figures as they stood and appeared after such alteration were "5605," whereby it was made to appear by said record and book and the said entry as so altered that the amount of money paid and disbursed by said treasurer out of said fund, on the day when said $605 was disbursed, was the sum of $5,605; whereas, in truth and in fact the sum of $605 and no more was disbursed by said treasurer from said fund. It thus appears that, though it is in form charged that defendant altered and falsified the entry, the alteration charged was in fact a falsification of the entry. The trial court took this view of the indictment, and accordingly charged the jury to the effect that they must acquit the defendant unless they were fully satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the alteration of the entry rendered the entry false, and that defendant knew it to be false at the time of making it. The indictment is quite long, and we have not attempted to set it forth at length, but only the substance of such part as we deem necessary to an understanding of the points involved in the contentions of appellant. To the indictment the appellant filed a demurrer, which was by the court overruled, and appellant now urges that the court erred in so ruling.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is claimed that the indictment is fatally defective in not alleging that the alteration or falsification was done with intent to defraud some one. But the section under which the indictment was framed does not make a fraudulent purpose an ingredient of the offense, and it has accordingly been so held. People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45. As was indicated in the O'Brien Case, the very wide range permitted in the punishment, which may in the discretion of the trial judge be a light fine only, indicates that the Legislature intended to cover cases involving little or no moral turpitude. We do not doubt that a falsification of a public record willfully and knowingly made is prohibited and punished under this statute without regard to the existence of any purpose to defraud. Such is clearly the rule laid lown in People v. O'Brien, supra.

It is also urged that the accounts kept in the treasurer's office of the various funds in his charge are not public records, and that any book in which such accounts are kept is not "filed or deposited in" such office. While the law does not expressly require the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco to keep a ledger, showing the accounts with the various funds in the treasurer's office, it clearly intends that he shall keep accounts with all the different funds in his charge. In chapter 3 of article 4 of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco it is provided: "Sec. 2. The treasurer shall receive and safely keep all moneys which shall be paid into the treasury. * * * At the close of business each day he shall take an account of and enter in the proper book the exact amount of money on hand. At the end of each month he shall make out and file with the mayor and publish quarterly in the official newspaper a statement of the condition of the treasury, showing the amounts of receipts into and payments from the treasury, and on what account, and out of what fund. * * * He shall keep the account belonging to each fund separate and distinct, and shall in no case pay demands chargeable against one fund out of moneys belonging to another. * * *" The duties of the bond and warrant clerk of the police court are set forth in chapter 8 of article 5 of the charter, and in section 5 thereof it is provided that "he must account for and pay to the treasurer all moneys received as bail. * * *"

Under the law it is thus the duty of the treasurer to receive, and upon proper order pay out, bail moneys. It is clearly his duty to keep a separate and distinct account of such receipts and disbursements. So much is distinctly required of him by the state law. What particular books of account he shall keep is not specified in the statute; but it is a matter of common knowledge that a ledger is a proper and practically necessary part of any system of bookkeeping. It certainly should be a part of the system used in an office receiving and disbursing such vast amounts of money, belonging to so many different funds, as is the case in the treasurer's office of the city and county of San Francisco.

In order that an entry or record of the official acts of a public officer shall be a public record, it is not necessary that such record be expressly required by law to be kept; but it is sufficient if it be necessary or convenient to the discharge of his official duty. "Any record required by law to be kept by an officer, or which he keeps as necessary or convenient to the discharge of his official duty, is a public record." Cyclopedic Law Dictionary, p. 776. Accordingly, it has been held in Michigan that certain tax sales books, made and kept by the receiver of taxes, are public records, although there was no express statutory provision requiring such books to be kept. Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, 44 N. W. 282, 7 L. R. A. 73. In Coleman v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. (Va.) 865, 23 Am. Rep. 711, the defendant was indicted for having erased the figure "1" from the figures "$18,100" in the warrant book of the sinking fund, so as to make them read "$8,100." It was contended that such warrant book was not a public record. Although the statute did not expressly require such book to be kept, the court held it to be a public record, and affirmed the judgment of conviction in the case. The court said: "Whenever a written record of the transactions of a public officer in his office is a convenient and appropriate mode of discharging the duties of his office, it is not only his right but his duty to keep that memorial, whether expressly required so to do or not; and when kept it becomes a public document, a record belonging to the office and not to the officer; it is property of the state and not of the citizen, and is an no sense a private memorandum." In the case of the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, not only the nature of the duties to be performed by him requires that he keep accounts showing the receipts to and disbursements from the various funds in the treasury, but the statute expressly requires that he keep separate and distinct accounts of each fund. While the keeping of such accounts in a ledger is not expressly required, it is certainly an appropriate and practically necessary method of keeping such accounts. When so kept, we do not doubt that such accounts in such ledger belong to the public and are public records.

Much has been said in the brief of appellant upon the question as to whether or not the ledger entries are admissible as evidence of the facts therein shown. Whether they are or not is not important. In McInerney v. United States, 143 Fed. 729, 74 C. C. A. 655, the court was considering a statute almost identical with section 113, Pen. Code, and, in discussing what constitutes a "record" within the meaning of the statute, said: "But in a statute like the one in question, intended to protect government archives, the view is entirely different, because the word is used in a popular, or at least in a more general sense. The purpose of the statute was not to describe a record which shall conclude rights, but records to be protected from destruction, and the purpose changes entirely the point of view, and consequently the sense of the words employed." The purpose of our statute seems to be to protect the public archives from destruction, mutilation, alteration, and falsification, and not to conclude or affect private rights. This is apparent by the omission, as an ingredient of the offense of any fraudulent purpose or intent to injure any one. See People v. O'Brien, supra. We are of the opinion that the entry alleged to have been falsified is a "public record" within the meaning of the statute. But it is also contended that the treasurer's books of account, showing the receipts and disbursements of his office, are not "filed or deposited" in his office within the meaning of the statute. We cannot agree with this contention. The purpose of the statute is not to protect or safeguard the act of filing or depositing, but to protect records in the custody of a public officer as such. The words "filed or deposited" as used in this statute are equivalent to "on file or on deposit." The account books of the treasurer, as such, are constructed in the treasurer's office, the records are made in such office, but when made they become and are records of the office, and are then on file and on deposit in such office, and are in the official custody and keeping of the treasurer. In People v. O'Brien, supra, the record altered was the record of a deed contained in a record book in the recorder's office. This book was doubtless procured just as account books are procured by the treasurer. The record of the deed was entered in the book in the recorder's office. The method of putting the book and its contents on file or on deposit, or, in other words, into the official custody of the officer, is the same in either case. No one would dispute that a record of a deed in the county recorder's office is within the statute. The accounts in the treasurer's office of his official monetary transactions bear the same relation to his office as the records of deeds in the recorder's office bear to his office.

Appellant also discusses the want of particularity concerning the allegations that the alteration was fraudulently done; but, as we have already shown, a fraudulent purpose or intent is not made by the statute an ingredient of the crime charged, and such allegation may be disregarded as surplusage.

Defendant's attempt to demur for uncertainty is wholly insufficient to present any such question for review. No attempt is made in the demurrer to indicate in what particular the indictment is not direct or is not certain. This is necessary in order to raise any such question. People v. Bradbury, 155 Cal. 808, 103 Pac. 215. The indictment states a public offense, and the court neither erred in overruling the demurrer nor in denying appellant's motion in arrest of judgment.

Over the objection of defendant, the prosecution was allowed to introduce much testimony tending to prove the commission by defendant of other offenses than the one for which he was indicted. It is undoubtedly the rule that evidence connecting the defendant with the commission of other crimes wholly independent of the one for which he is on trial is inadmissible. But this does not exclude evidence of other crimes, when such evidence logically tends to prove any fact necessary or pertinent to the proof of the crime for which defendant is being tried. "If the evidence of another crime is necessary or pertinent to the proof of the one charged, the law will not thwart justice by excluding that evidence simply because it involves the commission of another crime. People v. Tucker, 104 Cal. 440, 38 Pac. 195. The general tests of the admissibility of evidence in a criminal case are: (1) Is it a part of the res gestæ? (2) If not, does it tend logically, naturally, and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the people, or to overcome any material matter sought to be proved by the defense? If it does, then it is admissible, whether it embraces the commission of another crime or does not, whether the other crime be similar in kind or not, whether it be part of a single design or not." People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216, 46 Pac. 153. To the same effect, see People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138, 32 Pac. 864; People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 565, 12 Pac. 679; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 36 Pac. 16; People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049, 40 L. R. A. 269; People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 Pac. 600; People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 Pac. 43; People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 608, 38 Pac. 502.

In the case at bar evidence was given tending to show a shortage in the money in the treasurer's office of $60,000. That besides the falsification of the ledger account charged in the indictment, evidence was given of two other false entries amounting to $15,000, and in addition evidence was given of other falsifications to the amount of $40,000. In other words, it was shown that the books kept by defendant and in his handwriting showed $60,000 of expenditures in excess of the actual expenditures. Thus did the defendant, as it is claimed by the prosecution, make his book balance with the money actually in the treasury. As to the evidence concerning the shortage in the treasurer's office, it tended to show a motive for the defendant to make the falsification for which he was indicted. All the falsifications were part of one and the same scheme to conceal and make it difficult to discover the shortage. Evidence of all the falsifications was necessary to explain and make clear the motive and object of the defendant in making the particular falsification for which he was indicted. All this evidence tended to prove that the alteration for which he was indicted was not an innocent and lawful alteration made by defendant to correct an error in his books, and to thus make them conform to the truth (Reclamation District v. Wilcox, 75 Cal. 443, 17 Pac. 241), as was claimed by him in a statement made to the Deputy Attorney General, but was a willful falsification made by him as part of a plan or scheme to conceal a shortage in the moneys in the treasury. The evidence tending to prove that defendant removed and destroyed some leaves from the ledger containing accounts of the county clerk special fund was admissible upon the same theory. It was an attempt to conceal his criminal act. The destruction of a part of the ledger accounts made it more difficult to prove the shortage in the moneys, and consequently the falsity of the alteration for which defendant was being prosecuted. Concealment of a criminal act tends to a greater or less extent to prove the willfulness of the act as well as the criminal purpose with which it was done. The court did not err in allowing, under the circumstances disclosed by the record in this case, the evidence complained of tending to prove the commission by defendant of other offenses.

Theodore Kytka was examined as an expert by the prosecution, and it is complained by the appellant that the court unduly restricted the cross-examination of the witness, in that the court sustained objections by the people to the questions: "How much of a bill have you presented the city and county of San Francisco for your work in this case?" and "How much have you been paid by the city and county of San Francisco in the past year for work done for the district attorney's office?" The court did allow appellant upon the cross-examination of the witness to show that he had been employed by the district attorney not only in this case but in other cases during the year, as well as by the police department. That an expert has been employed and paid by the party calling him is a proper matter for consideration by the jury as going to the credibility of the witness. This is as far as the cases cited by appellant go. Wrisley v. Burke, 203 Ill. 250, 67 N. E. 818; Jones v. Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 50 N. W. 731, 16 L. R. A. 437. This the court allowed appellant to do, and only refused to allow a showing as to the amount paid. Such a showing would have opened the door for a long examination as to the kind and extent of the services rendered. Under the circumstances, we do not think the court erred in the two rulings complained of.

Complaint is also made of the ruling of the court sustaining an objection to the question: "During your experience in that office, was it possible for the bookkeeper to have access to any of the funds of the treasury?" This question clearly called for the opinion of the witness, for which reason the ruling of the court was correct.

Neither did the court err in refusing to grant the motion of appellant to strike from the evidence the ledger claimed to have been falsified. This motion was urged upon the ground that such ledger was not a public record. This ground we have disposed of in discussing the demurrer to the indictment.

The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: "The guilt of the defendant cannot be proved by the confessions or statements of the defendant without other evidence or circumstances tending to show the commission of the crime, and unless there is other evidence it is your duty to acquit the defendant." The court refused this instruction, as well as one of similar import requested by defendant, and appellant now urges that error prejudicial to him was thereby committed.

The instruction above set forth is correct as an abstract proposition of law, and the court might well have given it (People v. Thrall, 50 Cal. 415); but it does not necessarily follow that prejudicial error was committed in refusing the instruction. There is abundant evidence in the record, aside from any extrajudicial admissions or confessions of defendant, tending to show the commission of the crime charged. There is no evidence in the record that defendant ever made any confession or admission of guilt. Appellant in his brief has not attempted to point out any evidence of admissions of defendant, but our examination has revealed that evidence was given to the effect that he admitted that the entry claimed to be false was made by him, but in this connection his counsel in open court admitted the entire entry to be in his handwriting. Evidence was also given to the effect that defendant before his indictment admitted that after the great conflagration of April 18, 1906, he had written the figure "5" before the figures "605"; but this was coupled with the statement that this was done to correct the entry and thus make it conform to the truth. As pertinent to this phase of the evidence, the court, at defendant's request, charged the jury that defendant was not guilty if he made the change or alteration complained of in the entry in question in the ordinary course of business of keeping the accounts of the treasurer's office, and that their verdict must be not guilty unless they were fully satisfied from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the change so made rendered the entry false, and that the defendant knew it to be false at the time of making it.

The court fully charged the jury as to the necessity for proof of defendant's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt. There is in the record abundant evidence, not only of the corpus delicti, but that defendant committed the crime charged, aside from the evidence of extrajudicial admissions. Indeed, there is no evidence of any extrajudicial admissions concerning any controverted matters save the evidence to the effect that he admitted that he changed the original entry of "605" to "5605" to correct an error, and to thus make the entry conform to the truth. Upon this state of the evidence as disclosed by the record, it is beyond the realm of possible belief that the jury could have found him guilty as charged solely upon the evidence of any extrajudicial admission. Defendant never admitted that the insertion of the figure "5" before the figures "605" rendered the entry false, or that he knew such entry to be false, both of which facts the court charged the jury to be necessary to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt before a verdict of guilty could be rendered. It was not only proved outside of his extrajudicial admission, but it was admitted in open court that the entire entry in question was in defendant's handwriting. The only proof of its falsity and of his knowledge of its falsity was evidence other than evidence of his extrajudicial admissions. For these reasons it is clear to us that defendant could not have been injured by the refusal of the court to give the instruction in question.

Appellant asked for an instruction concerning the weight to be given the testimony of the defendant. This instruction was in the language of the instruction challenged by the defendant in People v. Hill, 1 Cal. App. 414, 82 Pac. 398. In that case the court held that no error was committed to the prejudice of defendant, but it does not follow that a defendant would be entitled to have such an instruction given. The instruction as requested contains the statement: "And, in judging of the defendant who has testified before you, you are in duty bound to presume that he has spoken the truth; and unless that presumption has been legally repelled his evidence is entitled to full credit." It may be seriously doubted whether or not this statement is not an invasion of the right of the jury to judge of the credibility of all the witnesses. It contains a very direct instruction that his evidence is entitled to full credit, with a somewhat vague suggestion that the presumption of its truth may be in some way, not stated, legally repelled. The court did give the correct rule as to all witnesses as set forth in section 1847, Code Civ. Proc., as follows: "A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives, or by contradictory evidence, and the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility." The defendant was a witness, and this rule covered his case as well as that of other witnesses. Under it the jury would properly understand that in judging of the credibility of the evidence given by a defendant they would have a right to consider his motives, that is, his interest in the case, and for that reason refuse to give full credit to his testimony. We think that the rule as given by the court in the language of the statute, as to the powers and duty of the jury in judging of the credibility of witnesses, more clearly and fairly states the law than does the requested instruction refused by the court. And for this reason the court did not err in refusing such instruction.

The court refused to give several long instructions requested by defendant as to what constitutes a public record, and as to what is meant by filed and deposited. We do not deem it necessary to set out these instructions. Suffice it to say that they were all pointed to the proposition that such a ledger as the indictment charged to have been kept was not a public record, and was neither filed nor deposited in a public office within the meaning of sections 113 and 114 of the Penal Code. If what we have said concerning the character of the ledger and the entries therein in discussing the demurrer be correct, the instructions were properly refused.

For the same reason the court did not err in giving the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence in the case to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that 'People's Exhibit A in evidence' is and was at all the times mentioned in the indictment a loose leaf ledger and book, and that at all of said times it was physically kept in the office of the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and that also at all such times there was then and there and therein stated, kept, and entered the accounts of various special funds of the said city and county, and that one of such funds was the police court bail money special fund, and that said fund and account thereof was therein known and designated as 'special fund police court bail money,' and that in said loose leaf ledger and book and in said account therein there was then and there at all of the said times kept and entered and stated a record of the various amounts of money disbursed by said treasurer out of the police court bail money special fund, in the custody of said treasurer of said city and county of San Francisco, then I instruct you as a matter of law that the same was a public record of the city and county of San Francisco, and that as a matter of law the said 'People's Exhibit A' was a book filed and deposited in the public office of said treasurer as stated in the indictment, and within the meaning of the provisions of sections 113 and 114 of the Penal Code."

Neither did the court err in refusing appellant's instruction to the effect that the people must prove the allegation of fraud. As we have before seen, such allegation is surplusage and not an essential element of the offense under the statute.

It is claimed that the court erred in disallowing appellant's challenge to two jurors for actual bias. We think the evidence sufficient to support the ruling of the court.

Upon the whole record the defendant seems to have had a fair trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 180

ROBERTS v. SIERRA RY. CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 727.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 1, 1910.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 346*) — INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a passenger on a special freight train caused by the derailment of a car loaded with dynamite exploded thereby, evidence held to show that the passenger assumed the risk of falling off the flat car on which he was riding, but did not assume the risk arising from the car loaded with dynamite.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 318*) — PASSENGERS — NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a passenger on a special freight train caused by the derailment of a car loaded with dynamite exploded thereby, evidence held to support a finding that the carrier was negligent in loading slabs on a flat car in front of the car loaded with dynamite, and that the slabs fell from the car and caused the derailment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a passenger suing for injuries pleaded general and specific acts of negligence, and the cause was tried on the theory that both specific and general negligence was alleged, the presumption of the carrier's negligence arose on proof of plaintiff's injury while a passenger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1261–1294; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—THEORY IN TRIAL COURT—OBJECTIONS ON APPEAL.

Where the parties proceeded without objection to make a particular case by evidence not strictly within the pleadings, and the court without objection submitted the evidence to the jury, the case so made could not be assailed for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053–1069; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 119*) — PLEADINGS — GENERAL AND SPECIFIC NEGLIGENCE.

The rule that, where general allegations of negligence are followed by an enumeration of specific acts, plaintiff will not be confined to proof of the specific acts, unless the complaint clearly indicates his intention to limit the negligence to such acts, applies where the specific acts pleaded precede the general negligence alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 200–216; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—ISSUES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where a passenger suing for injuries caused by the derailment of a car loaded with dynamite exploded thereby submitted evidence of the specific and general negligence alleged, and the carrier attempted to explain the cause of the derailment and to show that it was not due to any want of care, a charge that the passenger, to recover, need only prove that he was a passenger, and that while he was riding on the car provided for him he was injured by the derailment without his fault, and that the burden of proving absence of negligence was then on the carrier, was proper.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 316*) — INJURIES — PRESUMPTIONS—NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for injuries to a passenger on a special freight train caused by the derailment of a car, evidence held not to rebut the presumption of negligence arising from the proof that the passenger, while riding on the car provided for him, was injured by the derailment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 237*) — INSTRUCTIONS — PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

An instruction that the affirmative of the issue was on plaintiff, and that, if the evidence was contradictory, the decision must be made according to a preponderance of the evidence, followed by the statement that the jury must reconcile the contradictions in the testimony, and that, where that could not be accomplished and the evidence was so equally balanced in weight that the scales of proof hung even, the verdict should be for defendant, did not violate the rule that defendant need not rebut plaintiff's case by a preponderance of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 542–551; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

9. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

A requested charge that a passenger applying for permission to ride on a special freight train on which there are no accommodations for passengers assumes the extra risks incident to the train, provided the carrier uses such care as is required on usual passenger trains consistent with the purposes for which the train is made up, is properly modified by adding, "and the highest degree of care consistent with the practical and common use of the appliances and cars on a freight train is exacted * * * of a carrier * * * in the transportation of passengers when fare is taken" therefor, where the court also charges that a carrier must furnish its passengers a suitable and safe road and safely operate its trains, and where it charges that a carrier is required to use only such care as may be consistent with the practical operation of the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

10. CARRIERS (§ 280*) — PASSENGERS—LIABILITY OF CARRIER.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 483, 2100, 2168, 2175, imposing on carriers of passengers for hire on freight trains the liability imposed on carriers of passengers on passenger trains, and requiring a carrier to use the utmost care for the protection of passengers, etc., a carrier accepting for reward a passenger on a special freight train must exercise the care required of a carrier of passengers for reward.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1085–1117; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

11. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS COVERED BY THOSE GIVEN — PASSENGERS — LIABILITY OF CARRIER.

Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger on a special freight train caused by the derailment of a car, the court charged that a carrier might, except for gross negligence, willful wrong, or fraud, require the passenger to assume the dangers, and that a passenger might not ride on such a train except on the conditions demanded by the carrier, the refusal to charge that the carrier could limit its responsibility by special contract was not erroneous because the instruction given covered the point of the instruction requested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651–659; Dec. Dig. § 260;* Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1407.]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—ERRORS IN FAVOR OF PARTY COMPLAINING.

A defeated party cannot complain of an instruction too favorable to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4052–4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

13. CARRIERS (§ 331*)—PASSENGERS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A passenger taking passage on a special freight train, carrying with his knowledge a car loaded with dynamite, did not take the risk of an explosion of the dynamite proximately caused by the negligence of the carrier, and he was not guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for injuries caused by the derailment of the car through the negligence of the carrier and the explosion of the dynamite thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1371–1382; Dec. Dig. § 331.*]

14. TRIAL (§ 253*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS IGNORING ISSUES.

Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger on a special freight train caused by the derailment of a car loaded with dynamite and the explosion thereof, the evidence showed negligence in loading and operating the train, a charge that the carrier could not be charged with negligence if it, at the time of the receipt of the car, carefully examined it without finding any defect therein, etc., was properly refused because confining the issue to the condition of the car and ignoring acts of negligence proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613–623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

15. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to a passenger on a special freight train caused by the derailment of a car loaded with dynamite exploded thereby, an instruction that the passenger could rely on the presumption of negligence on proof of the "derailment" of the car and the injuries, and an instruction that no presumption of negligence arose from the "explosion" of the dynamite and resulting injuries, were not contradictory, the former relating to the "derailment," and not to the "explosion" of the dynamite.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Action by Alfred E. Roberts against the Sierra Railway Company of California. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court (111 Pac. 527).

Solinsky & Wehe, for appellant. John Hancock and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff while a passenger upon defendant's cars. The cause was tried by a jury and plaintiff had a verdict for $5,760, on which judgment was entered accordingly. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The complaint alleges that defendant was at the times therein mentioned operating a steam railway for the carriage of passengers and freight for hire between the town of Tuolumne and the town of Jamestown in Tuolumne county, and also between Jamestown and the town of Angels in the county of Calaveras, and during all said times defendant was and now is a common carrier of persons and freight for hire; that on June 26, 1906, defendant received plaintiff as a passenger on its said railway at the town of Tuolumne, and, in consideration of the regular fare paid by plaintiff, the said defendant agreed to transport plaintiff as a passenger over its said lines from said Tuolumne to said Angels by way of said Jamestown; that plaintiff boarded the train of defendant at Tuolumne and proceeded to Jamestown and, on his said ticket purchased at Tuolumne, again boarded the train of defendant at Jamestown, and was received as a passenger thereon by defendant for the purpose of transporting him to said town of Angels; "that the railway train upon which said defendant so received plaintiff as a passenger at Jamestown consisted of a locomotive propelled by steam and numerous cars and there was included in said train on said day a car containing a large amount, to wit, ten tons, or thereabouts, of dynamite; that said train, so constituted as aforesaid, proceeded on its way from Jamestown to Angels, with said plaintiff thereon as a passenger, while between said points aforesaid, and while within said county of Calaveras, and while plaintiff was riding thereon as such passenger, said defendant carelessly and negligently allowed its railway track upon which said train was running to become obstructed, and said defendant carelessly and negligently allowed certain obstructions to fall or become placed thereon, and so negligently and carelessly managed and operated its said locomotive and train that a portion of said train, to wit, several cars thereof, including said carload of dynamite, became and were on said day last aforesaid wholly derailed; that, by reason of the derailment of said cars and the concussion caused thereby, said car load of dynamite was instantly exploded and by reason thereof a violent explosion occurred; that said derailment and explosion occurred without any fault on the part of said plaintiff." The remaining averments of the complaint relate to the character and extent of plaintiff's said injuries "by reason of the derailment of said train and of said explosion," the destruction and loss of his clothing and baggage, expenses incurred in employing medical attendance, etc.

A general demurrer to the complaint was interposed and also a special demurrer on the ground that there is a misjoinder of actions, in that there is a cause of action for injuries to the person of plaintiff, also for damages sustained by loss of personal effects; also, that the complaint is ambiguous and uncertain in not alleging the value of said personal effects. No action seems to have been taken on the demurrer, and it is not now urged. Defendant filed an amended answer admitting the averments of the complaint as to plaintiff's purchase of ticket for passage from Tuolumne to Angels, but avers that the said transportation was to be only by way of the regular passenger trains of defendant; that the regular passenger train from Jamestown to Angels did not leave Jamestown until late in the afternoon, and plaintiff, having arrived in the forenoon and being desirous of proceeding without delay, importuned defendant to transport him by a special freight train that was then being made up, and which among other cars included one which contained 15 tons of dynamite; that defendant, by its superintendent, endeavored to dissuade plaintiff from going on that train, and informed him of the danger by reason of its having in the train said car of explosives, but finally yielded to plaintiff's solicitations after plaintiff had agreed to assume all dangers of said transportation, and it is averred that plaintiff did so agree and boarded said special train and became a passenger thereon under said agreement and not otherwise. Defendant further avers "that the said explosion occurred without any fault or negligence on its part whatsoever, and that the same was an accident beyond the control of the said defendant and which it could not with reasonable care and diligence have provided against," and that any damage suffered by plaintiff was the result of his own carelessness and negligence directly contributing thereto. Defendant also sets up as a special defense that plaintiff became a passenger upon said special freight train under an agreement that, if allowed to be transported thereupon, he would assume all the dangers connected therewith, and would relieve defendant from all liability of every kind and character connected with plaintiff's transportation upon said special freight train and the said agreement was in force at the time of said explosion.

Plaintiff was a civil engineer, and was in the pursuit of his profession when he took passage upon defendant's cars. He testified that he purchased a ticket at Tuolumne for passage to Angels; that he arrived at Jamestown in the forenoon and learned from a nearby bartender, one Reed, that the regular passenger train to Angels did not leave until late in the afternoon; that, being anxious to reach Angels and being told that a special freight train was being made up, he went to the superintendent, Mr. Blanton, whom Mr. Reed had pointed out, and, after stating his anxiety to get on in his journey, was told that he might ride on that train. The train consisted of five cars besides the engine: First, an oil car; second, a flat car loaded with a traction engine and other machinery; third, a flat car on which were one or two cords of sawmill slabs; fourth, a box car loaded with dynamite powder; and, fifth, a flat car on which plaintiff and two other men sat.

It was claimed by defendant, as disclosed in the answer, that plaintiff assumed the risks of every kind including that arising from the presence of the car loaded with powder. Bartender Reed testified that plaintiff had told him that the superintendent had called his, plaintiff's, attention to this powder car, and plaintiff said he would take any risk from that. Plaintiff testified that he made no such statement, and that he saw no placard on the car showing that it contained powder. On his cross-examination upon this point plaintiff testified: "I made one trip back to the barkeeper, and told the barkeeper that the superintendent had consented to my going, but that I would have to ride on a flat car, and that he questioned me closely as to my ability to ride on that flat car, and I assured him that I would not fall off." Then he says: "The superintendent told me then that there is more or less danger riding on a flat car, and that, if I would take the chances of it, riding on a flat car, all right I could go. Mr. Wehe: Q. Wasn't anything said at all about riding at your own risk? A. Riding on a flat car at my risk; yes. Q. He did say you must ride on that flat car at your own risk? A. Yes; in view of the fact that there was no accommodation, no caboose accommodations. Q. That is what I am trying to get at. Then he did say you must ride on that flat car at your own risk? A. Yes; risk of falling off, of course, is referred to—meant. Mr. Wehe: Q. Now you are sure, are you, Mr. Blanton didn't say anything to you about powder car? A. He certainly did not." Superintendent Blanton testified on cross-examination as follows: "Q. Now, Mr. Blanton, coming back to the matter of the conversation between yourself and Mr. Roberts at Jamestown on the morning of the accident, you said to Mr. Roberts, I understood you to say in your testimony that you had no place for him on that train, and you advised him not to go. What did you mean by saying that you had no place for him? A. We never carried passengers in all my experience on a train of that kind. There was no place where he could ride safely. Q. There was no caboose, no seat, no place where he could safely ride? A. No place I considered it was safe. Q. You considered it would not be safe for him on an open car? A. Yes, sir. Q. What you meant by your suggestion was it was not safe for any passenger to ride on any flat, open car without any regard to powder? A. Yes, sir. I was going to place him on a different car altogether. I was going to put him on the inside with the machinery. Q. It was because you feared that he would fall off that you advised him not to go on the train; that was the idea? A. That was the principal idea. Q. Did you say anything as to the powder at all? A. I think we spoke about it. I don't recollect. Q. You won't say that you did? A. No. Q. That was not the reason you advised him not to go on the train, on account of the powder? A. No; I didn't think the powder was going to explode, of course. Q. Do you, of your own knowledge, know that there was a sign on this car indicating that it was a powder car? A. Yes; I remember seeing it on one side. I don't remember whether it was on the other side or not. On the side next to the station there was a sign—the usual placard. Q. What did the train crew consist of on this morning? A. The engineer, fireman, conductor, and two brakesmen. Q. Did the conductor tell you that he had placed Mr. Roberts on the rear car? A. He told me he would do so, and I saw him there afterwards." The evidence fully justified the jury in finding that plaintiff did not, in his conversation with superintendent Blanton, assume any risk beyond what he testified to.

Conductor Hawkins testified: "Mr. Blanton was the superintendent of the railroad at that time. Received from Mr. Blanton before the train pulled out that morning instructions to take on the train Mr. Roberts, the plaintiff; directed the plaintiff to a place on the train, on the flat car in the rear of the powder car. * * * This car containing the slabs was right next forward of the car containing the powder. They were refuse of logs sawed off, of different lengths, I presume 20 inches to 2 feet, and they were lying on this flat car in front of the powder car. The car upon whch these slabs were lying had nothing on the end to protect the slabs from falling off. I wouldn't be positive about the sides. I don't think they had any on the sides. * * * The slabs were on the bottom of the flat car from one end to the other at least about two feet from the rear end. That was the position they were in when the train pulled out of Jamestown. Some of them were piled and some loose, wasn't very particularly piled, just thrown on loosely." On further cross-examination witness testified there were about two cords of slabs on the car.

Witness Demarest testified: "I saw the marks of the flanges on the ties, of the wheels there. I saw slabs on the car and on the track; saw a wheel mark on one of them; the same kind of an impression as I saw on the ties; don't know the quantity of slabs on the car; would not know how to express it in cords. The slabs were scattered over the flat car on the bottom; would not know how much it would make if they were piled up. Q. By Mr. Grant: Quite a lot were there? A. Wasn't so very many. They were covering the bottom of the flat car. Q. Some towards the end of the car? A. Yes; I think they were pretty well scattered over the bottom of the car. I didn't see any sideboards. I saw some stakes in the clips on the sides; didn't see any boards at the end of the car; looked all around, was desirous of ascertaining the cause of the accident." On cross-examination witness testified: "Could not say positively where the wheel mark was; do not remember whether it went across or lengthwise of the slab. I remember seeing the wheel marks on the slab. The marks on the ties were at the point of explosion, about there. Our going over there was purely a matter of curiosity."

Witness Monteverdi testified: "Observed an excavation caused by the explosion about 15 or 16 feet below the tracks. Wasn't between the rails, below the track on the down side of the cañon. The track was raised up from the bed a little. The ties were still attached to the rails. The ties had the appearance of the flange of a wheel jumping from one tie to another right at the point of explosion; observed slabs of wood at that point. They were outside pieces sawed off of round timber. They were kind of rounding—wedge shaped—on one side, and on the other flat. They were about three feet or so long. Some I guess were from an inch and a half to four or five inches at the half circle point. I observed the imprint of a flange of a wheel on some of these slabs that were at this point on the track; saw the plaintiff, Mr. Roberts, there at that time; had known him some time before that; did not speak to him, he did not recognize me; saw a man lying down there dead; saw a flat car there with slabs on it. The slabs were of a similar character to the slabs I saw the imprint of the wheel on. To the best of my knowledge I believe there was no tailboard to the car to restrain the slabs from falling off. The slabs were thrown on loosely. Some were near the end of the car."

From Jamestown the grade descended to the Stanislaus river, and thence it was upgrade to and beyond a point where the accident occurred called "Gee Whiz Point," an elevation of about 1,000 feet above the river crossing. The grade was ascending here, as testified by superintendent Blanton, and just before the explosion the train had rounded a curve of 12 to 16 degrees.

Conductor Hawkins was on the flat car containing the machinery. He testified: "I thought the train was going kind of slow, and I was going to step off the car and see if there was any brakes stuck, air stuck, as we usually, of course have a half dozen or dozen times over the road. I got to the front end of the machinery car and I looked down to see if the oil car was sticking first, and then I was in the act of just going to swing around and jump off and was getting in kind of a side position, with my back to the cañon, to the precipice you might call it, and I had hold of the machinery with my both hands. I happened to look back and I saw the powder car off the track. When it left the rail, it curved out to the end of the ties, and it had gone for a short distance before it dropped off the end of the ties and started to roll over, and I seen the boys on the rear car, of the flat car behind, running toward the rear end for their life, and just about the time they got to the rear end and tried to make the fatal jump to get off, the flat car had disconnected from the powder car and kind of flopped back on the track, and the box car rolled and just about the time it made a roll, only about a revolution, one revolution, it was all off. The explosion took place. It fell over on the side, just about making one turn so that the top was almost down where the bottom was before, and then the explosion occurred."

The evidence was that both of the men on the flat car with plaintiff were killed, and plaintiff's injuries were of a severe and permanent character. Other witnesses testified to the fact that the powder car left the track and turned partly over down the hillside before it exploded, and there was evidence tending to show that some of the slabs fell from the flat car next in front of the powder car and the trucks of the latter car coming in contact with them were thrown off the track and thus caused the accident. The evidence upon this point cannot be said to be conclusive, but the known facts and certain circumstances, such as the markings of the truck wheels on the slabs and that the powder car was the first to leave the track, as testified to, pointed to the falling slabs as the cause of the accident, which would have been averted had the slabs on the flat car been secured in some way from falling off, which admittedly was not done. It was gross negligence on the part of defendant to expose this powder car to such danger, and, as there was evidence tending to show that the derailing and explosion of the powder car was traceable to such negligence of the defendant, we think the plaintiff was not called upon to make clearer proof of this fact, aside from any presumption of defendant's negligence as the cause of the accident.

In an 86 page brief defendant devotes one page to the proposition that the evidence does not sufficiently show that the accident was caused by the falling of these slabs. No evidence seriously conflicting with that introduced by plaintiff is called to our attention, and no suggestion is made which leads us to doubt the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict upon this point.

The stress of defendant's argument for a reversal is laid upon questions of law arising out of the pleadings and alleged errors in giving and refusing instructions to the jury, and to this branch of the case we will now address ourselves. Defendant makes the concession "that in damage cases of this character the plaintiff, upon proper allegations of general negligence, is entitled to a presumption of negligence," but it is claimed that "he is not entitled to such presumption of negligence where the allegations are of acts of specific negligence." Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 534, 91 Pac. 481, and Bonneau v. North Shore Railroad, 152 Cal. 406, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68, are cited as stating the rule where general negligence is averred, but cases are cited to show that no such presumption arises where specific acts are alleged, even though general negligence is alleged. To the soundness of this latter proposition we cannot agree. If it be the rule that, where specific acts of negligence are alleged as the cause of the accident, the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove his averments, we think he satisfactorily sustained such burden, and that the evidence was sufficient to justify the inference that the acts of negligence averred and proved were the cause of the accident. Plaintiff, however, not only alleged specific acts of negligence, but he also alleged general negligence. It is true that he did not set up his alleged specific and general negligence in separate counts, as was done in Green v. Pacific Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 439, 62 Pac. 747, but there was no demurrer addressed to this feature of the complaint. The averments of the complaint were specifically denied. The evidence went in without objection touching the issues as thus presented and defendant makes no pretense of being surprised.

Inasmuch as there was an issue of general negligence presented, a presumption of negligence arose upon proof made of plaintiff's injury while a passenger on defendant's cars. And the case was tried upon the theory that both specific and general negligence was alleged, for defendant introduced evidence for the purpose, first, of showing that the powder car was not derailed by the falling slabs; and, second, by showing that the accident occurred through no preventable cause and "without any fault or negligence" on defendant's part, and "beyond the control of said defendant and which it could not with reasonable care and diligence have provided against," as alleged in the answer. "Where parties, without adhering closely to the written pleadings, proceed without objection and make a particular case by the evidence and the court allows that case without objection to go to the jury, it is a violation of all correct rules of law then to assail the case thus made for the first time by the motion for a new trial on the assignment of error in the appellate court on the ground of failure of proof. Such a procedure works fraud upon the opposite party, and there is no authority for it outside of Missouri." 6 Thompson on Negligence, § 7473. This author further says in speaking of the general rule in pleading negligence that "ultimate facts only are to be pleaded, and it is not good pleading to plead matters of evidence." Further he says: "If the pleading fairly informs the opposite party of what he is called upon to meet, and the specific acts of negligence are followed by a general statement that the acts were negligently done, or if it fails to state the acts particularly and the opposite party nevertheless fails to claim a surprise or take the necessary steps to extricate himself from the difficulty, there ought not to be much trouble about the question." Id. § 7447. It has been held, and we think rightly, that, where general allegations of negligence are followed by an enumeration of specific facts, the plaintiff will not be confined to proof of specific acts, unless the complaint clearly indicates the intention of the pleader to limit the negligence to such acts, and the rule, we think, should be equally applicable where the specific acts pleaded precede the general negligence alleged. U. S. Express Co. v. Wahl, 168 Fed. 851, 94 C. C. A. 260; Traver v. Spokane St. Ry. Co., 25 Wash. 225, 65 Pac. 284, 291.

The discussion of the question arises under instructions of the court, to which defendant objects, to the effect that plaintiff was not required to prove how or why the car containing dynamite was derailed or overturned, if he was injured by its derailment or overturning. "That the plaintiff was a passenger of the defendant and that while he was riding on the car provided for him he was injured by the derailment or overturning of a car containing dynamite, without his fault, is all the plaintiff need establish in the first instance, in order to recover for such injuries which may have been caused him thereby. When the plaintiff has done this, the presumption arises that the derailment or overturning of the car containing dynamite occurred through the negligence of defendant, and the burden of proving that there has been no negligence is cast upon the defendant." The contention that this was error for the reason that plaintiff had pleaded specific acts of negligence cannot be maintained. Plaintiff submitted evidence tending to establish his averments of specific negligence, and he was entitled to rely upon this presumption under his averments of general negligence. Defendant offered evidence to explain the cause of the derailment of the dynamite car, and to show that it was not due to any want of care or foresight or operation of the train on its part. This evidence consisted mainly of the fact that one of the truck axles of the powder car was found, some distance from the scene of the explosion, broken off at the wheel, and this, it was claimed, caused the wheel to leave the track. It appeared that this car was shattered into fragments, but few of which were ever found, and that the downward effect of the powder excavated a large hole in the mountain side below the track; the latter being but little affected thereby. It could not be stated with any degree of certainty whether the breaking of the truck axle occurred before the derailment of the car or was caused by the explosion; and it appeared that the breaking of one axle at one wheel would not necessarily cause the car to leave the track immediately, for the bearings on the truck were such as that the other wheels would support the load and hold the car on the track for some distance. There was, we think, a failure on defendant's part to show that it was free from fault, and it is not claimed that plaintiff was in any degree guilty of contributory negligence except in riding upon the train thus endangered, which is a matter later to be noticed.

The court instructed the jury: "In civil cases the affirmative of the issue must be proven. The affirmative of the issue in this case is upon the plaintiff. If the evidence is contradictory, the decision must be made according to a preponderance of the evidence." Without quoting further, defendant complains that this is in violation of the rule "that the defendant is not required to rebut plaintiff's case by a preponderance of the evidence"—citing Mitchell v. S. P. Ry. Co., 87 Cal. 62, 25 Pac. 245, 11 L. R. A. 130. But the court further instructed the jury in the same connection: "It is your duty, however, if possible, to reconcile such contradictions, if any there be, in the testimony offered in the entire case so as to make the evidence reveal the truth. If this cannot be accomplished and the evidence is so equally balanced in weight and quality that the scales of proof hang even, your verdict should be for the defendant." This is equivalent to saying that "if the evidence is equally balanced," which is the expression used in the case cited.

The court instructed the jury that "it is the duty of a carrier of passengers by rail to furnish its passengers a suitable and safe road and to safely operate its trains upon which it carries its passengers, and in the performance of these duties it is required to exercise the highest degree of care," and that, "when fare is taken by a railway company for transporting passengers on any passenger, wood, gravel, or other car, the same care must be taken and the same responsibilities assumed by the defendant corporation as for passengers on passenger cars." The court added: "The carrier, however, is not an insurer of its passengers. Its undertaking to its passengers is simply that, so far as human care and foresight can reasonably go, it will transport them safely. It is not liable if injuries happen from sheer accident or misfortune where there is no negligence or fault, or where no want of caution, foresight, or judgment would prevent the injury. But it is liable for the smallest negligence in itself or its servants." At defendant's request the court instructed the jury as follows: "A passenger who applies for permission to ride upon a special freight train upon which he is informed there are no accommodations for passengers, if he takes passage upon such train after such information, he assumes all of the extra risks necessarily incident to such train, provided thereafter the carrier uses such diligence and care as is required on usual passenger trains so far as such care is reasonably consistent with the purposes for which such train is made up" (to which the court added), "and the highest degree of care consistent with the practical and common use of the appliances and cars on a freight train is exacted and required of a common carrier of persons in the transportation of passengers when fare is taken for such transportation." When these instructions are read together, they meet every objection made by defendant. It is conceded that the law requires the exercise of the highest degree of care by the transportation company, but it is said that the instruction quoted in defendant's brief omits the condition that the carrier is required to use only such care as may be "consistent with the practical operation of the road." But the court covered this very point in its instructions seemingly overlooked by defendant.

Civ. Code, § 2100, requires that "a carrier of persons for reward must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe arrival, must provide everything necessary for that purpose, and must exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill." The Supreme Court said in Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 409, 93 Pac. 106, 107, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68: "A carrier of passengers is held to the exercise of the highest degree of care for their safety and transportation, and is liable for any injury sustained by them in the course of transportation through failure to exercise such care." That the train in question was a special freight train, and not a regular passenger train, did not affect defendant's responsibility as a carrier for hire. Green v. Pacific Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 441, 62 Pac. 747. See, also, section 483, Civ. Code, expressly covering this point.

The court refused an instruction requested by defendant which, after stating the duties and responsibilities of a common carrier engaged in carrying passengers by regular passenger or freight trains, proceeds to state that these rules "do not apply where the common carrier is not obliged by law to carry passengers, as in the case of a special freight train made up for a special purpose," and, thereafter stating that defendant was not bound to receive plaintiff as a passenger, the instruction states: "For as to said special freight train, in so far as plaintiff was concerned, the defendant was a private carrier, and the acceptance of said ticket did not change the defendant's character from a private carrier to a common carrier." Section 2168 of the Civil Code declares: "Every one who offers to the public to carry persons, property or messages, except only telegraphic messages, is a common carrier of whatever he thus offers to carry." And "a common carrier cannot be exonerated by any agreement, made in anticipation thereof, from liability for the gross negligence, fraud, or willful wrong of himself or his servants." Civ. Code, § 2175. Furthermore, as already shown, section 483 of the same Code provides that, when fare is taken for transporting passengers on any freight train, the same responsibility is assumed as for passengers on a passenger car. We think the court very properly refused to give the instruction.

Defendant contends, under section 2174, Civ. Code, it could limit its responsibility "by special contract," criticising the apparently contrary view expressed in Pierce v. S. P. Co., 120 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 874, 52 Pac. 302, 40 L. R. A. 350. It is not necessary to discuss the point for the evidence was that the only risk assumed by plaintiff had no relation to the accident causing his injury. Furthermore, the court, at defendant's request, gave an instruction under section 483 of the Civil Code to the effect that, if as a condition precedent to riding upon a car such as referred to in the Code section "the railroad demands from the passenger that he assume all dangers and release the railroad company from all liability, it has a right, except for gross negligence, willful wrong or fraud, so to do, and in no such case is a passenger entitled to ride except upon such condition demanded by the railroad company." Defendant, then, in less objectionable phrase, but quite to its purpose, got an instruction covering what it was aiming at, and, if the instruction went too far, it was in defendant's interest and cannot now be made the subject of complaint by it.

Defendant was refused the following instruction: "The plaintiff has alleged in his complaint that the said special train at said time included a car containing 10 tons of dynamite, and it is in evidence before you that said car contained 15 tons, and if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff knew that this car was a part of said train and of the dangerous and explosive character of said dynamite and of its liability to explode without any apparent cause, or from sudden jar or jolt, if from the evidence you believe that it was so liable, he was guilty of such negligence when he undertook to ride upon such special freight train that it contributed proximately to his injuries, and he cannot recover even though you believe from the evidence that the said explosion was proximately occasioned by the negligence of the defendant; for a person cannot negligently expose himself to possible injury and recover for such injury when suffered even though the injury was occasioned by the negligence of another."

The cases cited by defendant are instances where the plaintiff contributed directly by his own act to his injury, such as alighting from a car, heedlessly standing on the street where cars or vehicles were accustomed to pass. Plaintiff may have known of the presence of the dynamite car in that train, and that "it was liable to explode without any apparent cause or from sudden jar or jolt," and may have taken the risks of an explosion from some such cause, but he certainly cannot be presumed to have taken the risk of an explosion "proximately occasioned by the neglect of defendant," as is assumed in the instruction. It is not claimed that plaintiff contributed to the derailment of the car except by his presence on the flat car and this with defendant's consent. We cannot agree with defendant's suggestion that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence by voluntarily riding on the train, and that he could and should have avoided his injury by remaining at Jamestown. Plaintiff, according to superintendent Blanton's testimony, was "not advised not to go on that train on account of the powder." Blanton said he "didn't think the powder was going to explode of course." In all human probability the explosion would not have occurred but for the derailment of the car, and, if this was caused by defendant's negligence, we cannot hold defendant free from liability on the ground that plaintiff's injury was caused by his alleged contributory negligence in riding on the train.

Error is claimed for refusing an instruction referring to the evidence tending to show the sudden breaking of the axle of the powder car and stating: "The defendant cannot be charged with negligence if you believe from the evidence that the defendant, at the time it received the car upon its road, carefully examined the said car, and the said axle without finding any defect in said axle, and that such defect was at the time of such examination so hidden as not to be apparent to such careful examination, then your verdict should be for the defendant." It is claimed that the rule is thus stated in McCall v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 123 Cal. 42, 55 Pac. 706. Where it appears that the injury results from some latent defect in machinery, which defect was not discernible upon careful examination by the owners and operators of the machinery, the rule appears to be as claimed by defendant and stated in the case cited. But here the negligence shown was not in operating a defective car but in loading and operating the train in a negligent manner.

The instruction confines the issue to the condition of the axle of the powder car and ignores other acts of negligence, such as so loading the flat car next ahead of the powder car as to allow the slabs to fall and derail the powder car. We see no error in refusing this instruction.

It is further contended that the instructions given at the request of plaintiff that plaintiff was entitled to the presumption of negligence upon proving the derailment of the cars and the injuries to him are contradictory of the instruction given at the request of defendant as follows: "It is undisputed in this action that on the 26th day of June, 1906, while plaintiff upon his paying fare therefor was riding upon a special freight train of the defendant, made up for that occasion only, between the town of Jamestown in Tuolumne county, and the town of Angels in Calaveras county, an explosion occurred upon said train and that thereby plaintiff was thrown to the ground from said train and in some degree injured. I charge you that no presumption of negligence on the part of said defendant in any way whatsoever arises from the said explosion and any resulting injuries to the said plaintiff therefrom." We can discover no contradiction in these instructions. The presumption which the court stated plaintiff was entitled to was a presumption of negligence upon proving the "derailment of the car," not its "explosion." The distinction is obvious.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

(14 Cal. App. 180)

ROBERTS v. SIERRA RY. CO. (Sac. 1,747.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 1, 1910.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Action by Alfred W. Roberts against the Sierra Railway Company of California. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Court of Appeal (111 Pac. 519), and defendant moves for rehearing. Denied.

Solinsky & Wehe, for appellant. John Hancock and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause. The trial court erred in refusing to give instruction No. 11, referred to in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal. As requested it reads as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that the explosion was occasioned from the sudden breaking of the front axle of the car containing the said dynamite, and that the said breaking was occasioned by some hidden defect in such axle, the defendant cannot be charged with negligence, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant at the time it received the car upon its road carefully examined the said car and the said axle without finding any defect in said axle, and that such defect was at the time of such examination so hidden as not to be apparent to such a careful examination, then your verdict should be for the defendant."

This instruction presented the sole and entire defense to the action, and there was evidence to sustain the hypothesis upon which it was based, viz., a careful examination of the car at the time defendant received it upon its road (which was the day before the accident). The defendant had a right to invoke a finding of the jury upon this, its sole defense on the merits, and, if the finding had been in its favor, it was entitled to a verdict. McCall v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 123 Cal. 42, 55 Pac. 706.

(158 Cal. 493)

Ex parte SIZELOVE.
(Cr. 1,641.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 11, 1910.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 993*)—OFFENSES—PROBATIONARY ORDERS—MODIFICATION.

Pen. Code, § 1203, subd. 4, provides that the court shall have power, during the probation of one convicted of crime, to revoke or modify its order. Held, that the court has power thereunder to enlarge the probationary term at any time before it expires, and where one pleaded guilty to burglary, and was placed upon probation for two years, and within that time was charged with a violation of his parole, and the term of probation extended two years, the court had power, upon a second violation of the parole after the first two-year probationary period, to sentence him to the penitentiary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 993.*]

In Bank. Application by one Sizelove for a writ of habeas corpus, directed against William Hammel, Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Writ denied.

Thomson & Spencer, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner, on July 20, 1907, pleaded guilty to a charge of burglary, and was on that date placed upon probation under the provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code. The term of probation was fixed at two years. Within that term he was brought before the superior court, charged with a violation of his parole. This charge was dismissed, but the court at the same time made an order extending the term of probation two years from July 20, 1909. In the month of June, 1910, petitioner was again brought before the court upon another charge of violating his parole at a date subsequent to July 20, 1909. Upon this charge, and after an informal hearing of the alleged facts of violation of parole, he was sentenced to a term of imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin, and committed to the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles, by whom he is now detained.

It is contended that the imprisonment is illegal, for the reason that the court lost jurisdiction upon the expiration of the probationary term as originally fixed. We do not agree to this construction of the statute. The power to modify such orders, conferred upon the court by subdivision 4 of section

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

1203 of the Penal Code, includes the power to enlarge the probationary term at any time before it expires.

Writ denied.

(158 Cal. 494)

Ex parte HANSEN. (Cr. 1,577.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 15, 1910.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 122*)—Ordinances—Pleading.

The rule that municipal ordinances are recognized as private statutes and must generally be pleaded as such, either by setting forth the ordinance in full or the substance of the provision relied on, or by pleading it by title and date of passage, under Pen. Code, § 963, applies more particularly to courts of superior jurisdiction, as to which such ordinances are regarded as private statutes to be pleaded as such, and does not apply to inferior courts, established for the express purpose of enforcing such ordinances, or invested with full jurisdiction to enforce them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 281-283; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. Justices of the Peace (§ 91*)—Pleading—County Ordinances.

As county ordinances operate throughout the county and their enforcement is necessarily brought within the territorial jurisdiction of every justice court within the county, such ordinances are the law of that forum as effectually as other subjects over which justices' courts are given jurisdiction by Pen. Code, § 1425, and, as their enforcement must be had in such courts, their existence, as pertaining to the jurisdiction of the court to enforce them, is a thing established by law, of which judicial notice must be taken by such courts under the express provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 2, so that they need not be pleaded as private statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

3. Intoxicating Liquors (§ 206*)—Illegal Sale—Prosecution—Sufficiency of Complaint.

In a prosecution for violating a county ordinance relating to traffic in intoxicants, the complaint charging that accused did willfully and unlawfully encourage, abet, and assist in a violation of such ordinance by purchasing, receiving and accepting malt liquors, and intoxicating drinks, to wit, beer, and furnishing, selling, etc., and giving away, the same to divers persons, contrary to the ordinance sufficiently charged that accused himself violated the ordinance, and was not insufficient because it also charged that he aided and assisted in its violation by purchasing and accepting such liquors, without charging that he aided or assisted any person to violate the ordinance or that any one in fact violated it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 226; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

4. Intoxicating Liquors (§ 206*)—Prosecution—Sufficiency of Complaint.

In a prosecution for violation of a county ordinance relating to traffic in intoxicants, the complaint charging that accused did willfully and unlawfully, etc., encourage, abet, and assist in a violation of the ordinance setting it forth by number and title by purchasing, receiving, and accepting malt liquors, and intoxicating liquors, to wit, beer, and furnishing, selling, distributing, delivering, and giving away the same to divers persons to complainant unknown contrary to such ordinance, sufficiently informed accused of the offense charged against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 226; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

In Bank. Application by one Hansen for a writ of habeas corpus directed to Mobley Meadows, Sheriff of Imperial County. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

See, also, 11 Cal. App. 754, 106 Pac. 262.

M. W. Conkling and C. H. Brown, for petitioner. John M. Eshleman, Dist. Atty., and Phil. D. Swing, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Petitioner was convicted before a justice of the peace of Brawley township in Imperial county of a violation of an ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquor in that county outside of municipalities. He seeks a discharge from imprisonment after conviction on the ground that the complaint under which he was prosecuted and convicted does not state any offense.

The complaint charged that the defendant "did willfully and unlawfully," etc., "encourage, abet and assist in a violation of Ordinance 2 of the county of Imperial and more particularly section 4 of said ordinance entitled 'An ordinance for police regulation relating to places where spirituous, vinous, malt or mixed liquors are deposited, distributed, sold, delivered or given away in the county of Imperial, outside of municipal corporations; and making unlawful the sale or giving away of such liquors within the limits of the county of Imperial, outside of municipal corporations; providing for the sale of same by druggists under guarded restrictions; and repealing all ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict therewith and providing for punishment for the violation thereof,' by then and there purchasing, receiving and accepting malt liquors and intoxicating drinks, to wit, beer, and furnishing, selling, distributing, and delivering and giving away the same to divers persons, to complainant unknown, * * * contrary to the Ordinance No. 2 of the said county of Imperial."

Petitioner attacks the sufficiency of the complaint upon two grounds: First, that the ordinance which he is charged with violating is not sufficiently pleaded; and, second, that, if it were so pleaded, the charge that he aided and assisted in the violation of the ordinance as set forth therein charged no offense because it failed to charge that he aided or assisted any person to violate the ordinance or that any one in fact violated it; that, unless some one violated the ordinance, it would be impossible for the petitioner to unlawfully aid or assist in such violation.

Upon the first point, it is true that ordinances of a muncipality are recognized as private statutes, and, as a general rule must be pleaded as such (Tulare v. Hevren, 126 Cal. 226, 58 Pac. 530), either by setting forth the ordinance in full or the substance of the provision relied on, or by pleading it in the more simplified way provided under section 963 of the Penal Code, by referring to its title and date of passage, whereupon the court must take judicial notice of it. This rule, however, applies more particularly to courts of superior jurisdiction, as to which ordinances of a municipality are regarded as private statutes to be pleaded as such, and has no application, or rather should have no application to inferior courts, when such courts are either constituted for the express purpose of enforcing such ordinances, or, if not constituted expressly for that purpose, still are invested with full jurisdiction to enforce them.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In Ex parte Davis, 115 Cal. 445, 47 Pac. 258, the proceeding was in habeas corpus and involved the sufficiency of the complaint before a recorder's court for the violation of a city ordinance. The claim of the petitioner was that the ordinance was not pleaded in the complaint. After discussing the general rule as to the necessity of pleading and proving ordinances in proceedings in courts of general jurisdiction, it is said: "But when the proceeding is in a municipal court, instituted for the express purpose of enforcing the municipal ordinances, and vested with full jurisdiction for that purpose, the rule ought to be and is different. In such case the ordinances are the peculiar law of that forum, and it is bound to take notice of their existence. To such laws it holds the same relation that the superior courts hold to the laws enacted by the Legislature, and may notice their provisions because they are among the things which, as to it, are established by law [citing cases]. These cases show that the practice in municipal courts, with respect to municipal ordinances, constitutes an exception, and a proper and necessary exception, to the rule invoked by the petitioner. The complaint, therefore, was sufficient, if there was an ordinance prohibiting the acts charged, and, as to that, we must presume, in this proceeding, which raises only the question of jurisdiction, that there was such an ordinance of which the recorder's court took judicial notice." It is true that in this case the court was considering the rule of pleading with respect to a strictly municipal court constituted for the express purpose of enforcing the ordinances of the city, but we perceive no valid ground for denying the application of the same principle to justices' courts, where those courts are invested, as they are in this state, with full jurisdiction to enforce county ordinances. In fact, it appears to us that the rule should be made applicable to them for the same reasons as it is made applicable to municipal courts.

While justice courts are courts of larger jurisdiction than purely municipal courts, and are not constituted for the sole purpose of enforcing county ordinances, still they are by law invested with jurisdiction to enforce them. Such ordinances operate throughout the county, and their enforcement is necessarily brought within the territorial jurisdiction of every justice court within the county. This being true, such ordinances constitute the law of that forum just as effectually as other subjects over which justices' courts are given jurisdiction by section 1425 of the Penal Code, and, as their enforcement must be had in those courts, their existence as pertaining to the jurisdiction of the court to enforce them is a thing established by law of which, under section 1875, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc., judicial notice must be taken by those courts. No good reason suggests itself, nor has any been advanced by petitioner, why a distinction should be made in the application of the rule between proceedings for the enforcement of ordinances in municipal courts and in justices' courts. Municipal courts are constituted for the express purpose of enforcing municipal ordinances, and it is held that as such ordinances are the peculiar law of that forum—that is, are matters over which it exercises jurisdiction and whose existence can only call for the exercise of that jurisdiction—they are therefore, as to such courts, things established by law of which they must take judicial notice. But so are the justices' courts constituted with jurisdiction, among other things, over the enforcement of county ordinances such as the one involved here. As far as their jurisdiction over them is concerned, these ordinances are the peculiar law of that forum, just as fully and effectually as are the municipal ordinances the law of the municipal forum, and they are things which, as to the exercise of the jurisdiction of such justices' courts to enforce them, are established by law. The legal conditions being similar, the same rule of judicial notice should apply, and we have no doubt that it does, and that justices' courts, like municipal courts, take judicial notice of ordinances which they are expressly invested with jurisdiction to enforce.

This was the view entertained by the District Court of Appeal in Ex parte Luening, 3 Cal. App. 76, 77, 84 Pac. 445, a habeas corpus proceeding, where the application for a writ was dismissed and the matter terminated in that court.

As to the other point made by petitioner. The ordinance makes it unlawful for any person within the county and outside municipalities therein to sell, furnish, distribute, or give away intoxicating drinks of any kind, except for certain purposes, and makes it also unlawful for any person to furnish, purchase, receive, accept, or otherwise obtain intoxicating drinks, or in any manner encourage, aid, abet, or assist in the violation of the ordinance. Selling or giving away intoxicating drinks is declared an offense, as well as to assist or aid others in doing so. The offense charged against defendant under the complaint was purchasing, receiving, and accepting a particular intoxicating drink, and furnishing, selling, distributing, and delivering the same to persons unknown. While the complaint, it is true, alleges that he was aiding and assisting in doing this, the substantive charge is that he himself violated the ordinance by selling, furnishing and giving away the liquor. Hence it would not seem to be very material in determining his guilt, whether the acts committed by him were done individually or with the view of aiding or assisting others to violate the ordinance. While the complaint is rather inartificially drawn, it sufficiently informed the petitioner of the offense which was charged against him.

The writ is discharged and the prisoner remanded.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

158 Cal. 514

BASLER et ux. v. SACRAMENTO GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Sac. 1,682.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 20, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1910.)

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 89*)—INJURY TO WIFE—IMPUTATION OF HUSBAND'S NEGLIGENCE.

As affecting liability for injury to a wife, in the care and custody of her husband, his negligence is imputable to her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 132; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 89*)—INJURY TO WIFE—HUSBAND'S RIGHTS.

Since recovery for injuries to a wife is community property under the husband's control, if his negligence contributes proximately to the injury there can be no recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 132; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 1*)—NATURE.

Negligence may be active or passive, consisting in heedlessly doing an improper thing or in heedlessly refraining from doing the proper thing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4743–4763; vol. 8, pp. 7729–7731.]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 82*)—"CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE"—ESSENTIALS TO BAR RECOVERY.

Contributory negligence which will bar recovery must be such as to show that the person charged therewith by failing to use the required care proximately contributed to the injury so that but for his concurring fault it would not have happened.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 112–114; Dec. Dig. § 82.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1540–1547; vol. 8, p. 7617.]

5. CARRIERS (§ 343*)—ALIGHTING PASSENGERS—INJURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

On a suit for injury to a passenger caused by cars colliding while she was alighting, a plea that the motorman of the colliding car was engrossed in his personal affairs and became excited at the presence of the other car, but not stating why he became excited or whether he perceived the car sufficiently far away to have stopped his car, that the passenger's husband was standing on the ground to assist her to alight and saw the car in ample time to have given an alarm and caused the on-coming car to stop or the other car to move on, but took no steps to prevent the collision, and that the employés on the standing car failed to observe the approach of the other car because engaged in assisting alighting passengers, is insufficient to show contributory negligence of the husband imputable to the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 343.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—HARMLESS ERROR—STRIKING PLEADED MATTER.

Striking matter from an answer, instead of sustaining a demurrer thereto, was harmless error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4101, 4104; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

7. COSTS (§ 42*)—TENDER AFTER SUIT—TORTS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 997, authorizing a tender by a defendant after suit, applies to suits for tort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

8. TENDER (§ 22*)—AFTER SUIT—PLEADING.

A plea of tender after suit under Code Civ. Proc. § 997, should not contain explanatory or extenuating matters not affecting the defense, and such matter is properly stricken as surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tender, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–75; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 209*)—SUIT BY WIFE—HUSBAND AS PARTY.

A husband is a necessary party to a suit for personal injuries to a wife, though it be brought solely for her injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 767; Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

10. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 229*)—SUIT BY WIFE—PLEADING.

A complaint by a husband and wife for personal injuries to her asking compensation for "plaintiffs" is not bad as involving compensation for the husband as well as for the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 268*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—PERSONAL INJURY.

Where defendant in a personal injury action seeks to show a previous condition of invalidism of, or malingering by, plaintiff, liberal latitude in cross-examining plaintiff should be permitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 931–937; Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

12. TRIAL (§ 54*)—EVIDENCE.

In establishing a personal injury to a wife, evidence showing deterioration in her physical condition after the accident was not improperly admitted as involving compensation to the husband, where on objection the trial court and counsel expressly confined the effect of the testimony to her condition before the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

13. DAMAGES (§ 210*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that, if plaintiff was injured through defendant's negligence, she could recover for any physical suffering and pain and mental anguish suffered or reasonably certain to be suffered, was not improper as authorizing an award for suffering by her husband.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

14. Carriers (§ 300*)—Injuries to Passengers—Negligence—Liability of Carrier.

A street railway company was not relieved from responsibility for injury to an alighting passenger caused by colliding cars, though its employés were skillful, if on the particular occasion they did not use due care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

Action by Charles M. Basler and wife against the Sacramento Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. B. Bosley, J. P. Coghlan, and L. T. Hatfield, for appellant. W. E. Kleinsorge, C. E. McLaughlin, and R. T. McKisick, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action by husband and wife to recover damages for injuries sustained by the wife while a passenger upon one of defendant's street railway cars. The action was tried before a jury. Plaintiffs obtained a verdict, and from the judgment which followed and from the order of the court refusing its motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

Plaintiffs were returning from an evening entertainment. Reaching their place of debarkation, the car stopped to permit them and other passengers to alight. The husband had stepped off the car and was waiting to assist his wife therefrom, when another car of defendant heedlessly collided with the rear of the stationary car. Mrs. Basler, who was standing at the time, was thrown across a seat and to the floor of the car, receiving the injuries for which compensation was sought. The answer was, first, by way of general denial, and, for a second and special defense, contributory negligence was charged against Mrs. Basler's husband. The court struck out this special defense, and its ruling in this regard first demands attention. This special defense alleged: That Basler, debarking from the car, had reached the ground "for the purpose of assisting his wife to alight," when another car came into collision with the car upon which plaintiffs had been passengers. That the other car was fully equipped with all necessary appliances, and that the motorman thereof was of long experience and skill in operating such cars; but that when approaching the stationary car he was "temporarily engrossed in his own personal affairs, and became excited and alarmed at the presence of the car upon which plaintiff had been riding, * * * and upon the spur of the moment, and in the exercise of his judgment under the circumstances, such employé failed to take proper action to stop such other car until the same struck the car upon which plaintiffs had been riding. * * * That plaintiff, Charles M. Basler, at the time of the approach of such other car, was standing upon the ground alongside of such car upon which he and his wife had been riding and was not otherwise engaged, and saw such car approaching for a long distance and in ample time and full opportunity to have given a signal or alarm and caused such oncoming car to stop or the other car to move, but he gave no alarm or signal of any kind to the persons in charge of the car upon which he had been a passenger and took no steps whatever to prevent such collision, but stood silently and idly by and observed such other car come in contact with the car upon which he had been riding and upon which his wife still was. That the persons in charge of the car upon which plaintiffs had been passengers were engaged in seeing that the passengers thereon were enabled to alight and did not see the approach of the car that caused the collision. That plaintiff, Charles M. Basler, claims to be familiar with the operation of cars and capable of judging of the speed of cars and of the best mode of controlling the same, but he made no effort to prevent such collision nor did he do anything whatever to avoid it, although fully aware that a collision was imminent. * * * Defendant avers that if the said Bessie M. Basler received any injury of any character by reason of such collision it was because she did not exercise due care on her part to avoid injury and also by the failure of plaintiff, Charles M. Basler, to notify the persons in charge of the car in which plaintiff, Bessie M. Basler, was riding, or to notify the employés of defendant on said other car of the danger of collision, he thereby directly contributed to whatever injury may have been sustained by the said Bessie M. Basler."

Appellant's contention is that this special defense charges a complete case of contributory negligence against the plaintiff husband, and that this negligence bars the right of either and of both plaintiffs to recover: First, because the wife was in the care and custody of her husband, and consequently his negligence is imputable to her, under the doctrine of Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56; McKune v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 487, 42 Pac. 980; Paine v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 143 Cal. 658, 77 Pac. 659. And, second, regardless of the question as to whether or not the wife was so in the husband's care and custody, if his negligence contributed proximately to her injury (since under the laws of this state the recovery for her injuries is community property, in which the husband shares and over which he has control), the law will not permit him to benefit by his own wrong, and therefore a recovery will not be permitted. McFadden v.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Santa Ana, etc., Ry., 87 Cal. 468, 25 Pac. 681, 11 L. R. A. 252; Beach, Con. Neg. p. 165, note. The propositions of law here advanced by appellant are sound and accepted doctrines in this state. It is also true that negligence may be active or passive in character. It may consist in heedlessly doing an improper thing or in heedlessly refraining from doing the proper thing. Whether the circumstances call for activity or passivity, one who does not do what he should is equally chargeable with negligence with him who does what he should not. These principles are but an elaboration of the maxim, Idem est facerem et non prohibere cum possis; et qui non prohibit cum prohibere possit in culpa est (aut jubet). The questions thus resolve to the single proposition: does or does not the special defense charge contributory negligence with legal particularity and certainty; in other words, are the allegations of this defense sufficient in law as a defense?

Herein it is to be noted that the contributory negligence which will bar a recovery must be such as to establish that the person by failure to exercise the required amount of care proximately contributed to produce the injury complained of "so that but for his concurring and co-operative fault the injury would not have happened." Williams v. S. P. Co., 9 Pac. 152; Cross v. California St. R. R. Co., 102 Cal. 315, 36 Pac. 673. What does the defense aver in this respect? It declares that the motorman was "engrossed by his personal affairs"; that "he became excited and alarmed at the presence of the car upon which plaintiffs had been riding, at the place where the same had stopped." It does not say how far distant he was when he perceived the car, why he should have become excited or alarmed, or whether or not he perceived the car when it was sufficiently distant to have enabled him to have stopped his own car. The declaration in this regard is merely to the effect that, when he discovered the presence of the other car (and where his car was at the time of that discovery is not indicated), he "failed to take proper action to stop his car" and so the collision occurred. So much for the conduct of the motorman. Basler it is averred was standing upon the ground waiting to assist his wife to debark "and was not otherwise engaged." He saw the approaching car for a long distance and in ample time to have given the signal or alarm and cause such on-coming car to stop or the other car to move on but gave no alarm or signal of any kind and took no steps to prevent the collision, "and stood silently and idly by and observed such other car come in contact with the car upon which he had been riding and upon which his wife still was." The failure of the employés upon the stationary car to observe the approach of the other is then sought to be excused upon the allegation that they "were engaged in seeing that the passengers thereon were enabled to alight." But in this connection it is to be noted that the defense also avers that Basler "had reached the ground for the purpose of assisting his wife to alight." It is then charged that by the failure of Basler to notify the persons in charge of the car upon which he had been riding, or to notify the employé of the approaching car, of the danger of collision, he thereby directly contributed to Mrs. Basler's injuries. The plea is singular, in that the defendant excuses its own employés for nonobservance of the approaching car upon the ground that they were "seeing that the passengers were enabled to alight," but charges Basler with full knowledge of the approaching car, notwithstanding the fact that he was standing on the ground doing the very thing which is offered as an excuse for the conduct of defendant's employés, namely, watching and waiting for the purpose of assisting his wife to alight. However, the plea is not to be condemned for its singularity. It is to be condemned solely, if at all, for deficiency. But we think it is subject to condemnation upon this ground. To constitute a good plea of contributory negligence, it must, as has been said, be charged and made to appear that the act or omission was such that but for it the injury would not have happened. To sustain this plea it must be assumed and charged against Basler that he not only knew that the car was approaching, but knew also that its motorman was temporarily engrossed in his own personal affairs and did not know that he was nearing a collision, that when the motorman discovered that he was approaching a stationary car, although in time to avert the accident, he would become excited and alarmed and so not check the speed of his car. He must also be charged with knowing that the employés upon the stationary car, whose duty it certainly was to protect their car from accident and injury, were themselves so engaged as not to discover the approach, and it must finally be charged against Basler, as matter of law, and under all these circumstances, that, if he had notified the employé or motorman of the approaching car, the latter would not, as he did, become excited and alarmed, but with calmness and discretion would have prevented the accident. Such knowledge is not imputable to Basler, and it may not be said that there is the slightest showing that if Basler had done that, which it is alleged he failed to do, the collision would have been in any wise averted. Basler was entitled to consider, as any other person would be entitled to consider, that it was a thing not to be expected, merely because one street car was running up behind another, that the danger of accident was imminent, and that it was his duty to sound an alarm. The case is entirely different from that presented by Lawrence v. Fitchburg & L. St. Ry. Co., 201 Mass. 489, 87 N. E. 898, where upon a dark night a street car ran into an automobile, stalled alongside the track, where the occupants of the automobile had ample time to make known their position, yet sat indifferent in the car, trusting to the motorman to see them and stop, and this, when their automobile was out of the traveled highway at a place where vehicles did not run and where the presence of a vehicle was not to be expected. In that case the Supreme Court merely declared that they omitted to employ any precaution to avert the accident which an ordinarily prudent person situated as were the plaintiffs would have used. But to say that that case is authority for the proposition that one must sound a warning when he sees a street car approaching another stationary one from the rear is an extension of the doctrine of contributory negligence to which assent cannot be given.

The court's action in striking out this matter, rather than in sustaining a demurrer to it, was an irregularity without injury. The special defense was doubtless as complete as it could be made, and an amendment to cure its defects manifestly could not be pleaded.

Defendant offered to permit plaintiffs to take judgment in the sum of $2,000, and the offer was refused. It renewed its offer in its answer, with certain argumentative and exculpatory averments as to why it was made, and that it was made in reliance "solely upon the statements of plaintiffs, their attorneys, physicians, and representatives," and more to the same effect. The court struck out this argumentative matter and left the simple offer as contemplated by section 997 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are not disposed in the least to question the right of a defendant in an action for tort to make such an offer under the Code provision. Douthitt v. Finch, 84 Cal. 215, 24 Pac. 929; Redington v. Pacific Postal Tel. Co., 107 Cal. 322, 40 Pac. 432, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132; Kaw Valley Fair Ass'n v. Miller, 42 Kan. 20, 21 Pac. 794; Hammond v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 23 Or. 157, 31 Pac. 299. But it is not in contemplation of the law that the pleading of tender shall be burdened with explanatory, apologetic, or extenuating matters in no way going to the defense of the action, and the court properly struck out such matters here alleged as mere surplusage.

Nor did the court err in overruling defendant's demurrer to the complaint. The husband was a necessary party to the action, notwithstanding that the action was solely for a recovery for damages for injuries inflicted upon the wife. The complaint sounded in damages for this reason and for this reason alone. Neither in the complaint nor in the taking of evidence is there any indication of a violation of the rule declared in Tell v. Gibson, 66 Cal. 249, 5 Pac. 233. The whole argument of appellant in this regard is that the complaint asks compensation for the "plaintiffs," and "upon such allegation it must be that two elements are involved," compensation for the husband and compensation for the wife. This position is absolutely untenable.

Much argument is indulged in to the effect that the court injuriously limited and curtailed the cross-examination of plaintiff Bessie M. Basler, and confined the defendant's inquiry into the condition of her health before the accident, to the year immediately preceding. It would be useless to answer in detail all that is urged upon this proposition, for the answer itself would consist principally of extracts and quotations from evidence actually introduced to show that the asserted grievance is ill-founded. Suffice it to say that we recognize the rule that where the defendant seeks to establish a previous condition of invalidism upon the part of plaintiff, or seeks to prove that the plaintiff is malingering, liberal latitude in cross-examination should be permitted. But that latitude was here allowed.

This same declaration will serve to answer many of the appellant's objections to the rulings of the court in the admission and rejection of testimony. Certain evidence was admitted, in establishing plaintiff's injuries, to show deterioration in her physical condition after the accident from what it had been shortly prior thereto. It is argued by appellant that the admission of this evidence was error because the evidence itself was testimony touching the ability of the plaintiff to perform physical labor, and therefore involved the question of the husband's compensation for loss of her services, which question was, of course, not involved in the action. This objection, too, is overrefined. An excerpt from the evidence, declarations of counsel, and rulings of the court will serve to illustrate this beyond argument: "Testimony of Mrs. Basler. Q. Mrs. Basler, prior to the 17th day of November, 1906, state to the jury the condition of your health and your ability to perform your household duties. A. Well, I had always been able to do my own work and look after my family, do my own sewing, and so on, general housework. Mr. Hatfield (for defendant): I understand the counsel that these questions have reference simply to her physical condition, not to any loss of time. Mr. McLaughlin (for plaintiff): Simply the physical condition. We confine it solely to show her condition before the accident. We state, your honor, that we are offering this line of testimony solely to show her physical condition and for no other purpose and to confine it to that physical condition. The Court: I understand it. Mr. Hatfield: We object on the ground that any testimony as to her ability to do work is incompetent and irrelevant under the pleadings in this case. It should be confined solely to the physical injury of the plaintiff. The Court: This testimony is to show her health, for that purpose, not for the purpose of fixing damage for loss of personal service. Mr. Hatfield: I understand the purpose, but we do not agree with the conclusion, that is what we say. We object to that as irrelevant and incompetent, not within the issues of this case; not involved in any manner, personal services. Mr. McLaughlin: Understand, your honor, our offer of this evidence of each witness along this line is confined to this one purpose. The Court: Only admitted for this one purpose, to show her physical condition, that is all. Mr. Hatfield: I move to strike out the answer. The Court: Admitted for the sole purpose, as offered."

Complaint is made of many of the instructions, that they authorized the jury to give damages for the physical and mental suffering endured by the husband; whereas, the action was limited to a recovery for such sufferings as the wife alone had endured. Instruction No. 3 will illustrate them all: "The jury is instructed that, if they find that the plaintiff Bessie M. Basler was injured through the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint, in estimating the damages they will allow plaintiffs for any physical suffering and pain and mental anguish, if any, she has suffered and shown in evidence, or which it is reasonably certain she will suffer in the future in consequence of the said alleged injuries." Wherein, by this and the other like instructions, the jury is informed that it may make an award for any physical suffering or mental anguish which the husband has endured, we are utterly unable to perceive.

Exception is taken to certain other instructions actually given and to certain proposed instructions which the court refused to give. Generally speaking, appellant was contending for the proposition that, if it had used proper care in the equipment of its cars and in the furnishing of competent men to operate those cars, its responsibility was at an end, and that any other rule would make of the defendant company an absolute insurer. The court in fact instructed in these matters that the defendant was not relieved from responsibility, notwithstanding that its employé might have been skillful, if in fact upon the particular occasion in question the employé did not use due care and skill. This is the law as universally recognized in this state. Cunningham v. Los Angeles Ry., 115 Cal. 561, 47 Pac. 452; Bosqui v. Sutro Ry. Co., 131 Cal. 399, 63 Pac. 682; Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 522, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85; Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 411, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68.

No other matters seem to call for specific consideration, and for the foregoing reasons the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

---

158 Cal. 499

MERRILL v. LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (L. A. 2,414.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 19, 1910.)

1. TRIAL (§ 351*) — INTERROGATORIES — REFUSAL.

On a suit against a gas company for injury to a restaurant patron caused by an explosion, special interrogatories, whether before the explosion defendant's employés notified the proprietor to put out all lights and fires, whether they were put out, whether an open fire was burning at the time of the explosion, if so, whether it proximately caused the explosion, and, if the explosion was not so caused, what was the proximate cause, were properly refused as being covered by a submitted interrogatory, "What was the proximate cause of the explosion?"

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 56*)—"PROXIMATE CAUSE"—NATURE OF DOCTRINE.

In law "proximate cause" refers to the person producing it, as against "proximate cause" in logic, which refers to the moving influence itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 70; Dec. Dig. § 56.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5758–5769; vol. 8, p. 7771.]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 56*)—"PROXIMATE CAUSE"—NATURE OF DOCTRINE.

The legal doctrine of "proximate cause" is based on the principle that consequences which follow from an original wrong in unbroken sequence, without an intervening sufficient independent cause, are natural and proximate, and for these the original wrongdoer is responsible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 70; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 61*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE—INTERVENING CONCURRING CAUSES.

Proximate causation of injury is not always arrested by intervention of an independent concurring cause, whether the latter cause be an act of God or the wrongful act of a third person, and an independent wrongful act to constitute proximate cause by displacing the original cause must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage was not a natural or probable consequence of the original wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 61*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE—INTERVENING CAUSES.

An original act of negligence as primary causation may be so continuous that a concurrent wrongful act will be regarded not as independent but as conjoining with the original act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

6. GAS (§ 18*)—EXPLOSIVES—DEFECTIVE GAS PIPE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Where an explosion of gas results from joint negligence of a gas company in discovering and repairing a leak and of another in bringing a light in contact with the gas, a third person injured may recover from either or both, they being severally and jointly the proximate cause; and hence, on a suit against a gas company for injury to a restaurant patron caused by such an explosion, it was not error to refuse to submit the company's interrogatories designed to show that an open fire caused the explosion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

7. DAMAGES (§ 210*)—PERSONAL INJURY—INSTRUCTIONS—"BECAUSE OF."

The words "because of," in an instruction authorizing recovery for suffering sustained because of injury, is equivalent to the word "caused."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

8. DAMAGES (§ 48*) — PERSONAL INJURIES — "MENTAL SUFFERING"—ELEMENTS.

Mental worry, distress, grief, and mortification are proper elements of mental suffering for which an injured person can recover; recovery not being limited to the form of mental suffering described as physical pain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 100–105; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by F. H. Merrill against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. A. Cheney, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, Lawler, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, and Leroy M. Edwards, for appellant. Ernest E. Wood, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff through defendant's alleged negligence. The charge of negligence is that defendant, engaged in the business of supplying gas, while so supplying a restaurant in the city of Los Angeles, negligently and carelessly permitted gas to escape from its pipes and collect in and about the building, and negligently and carelessly caused this gas to explode with great force and violence, whereby were inflicted upon the plaintiff the injuries complained of. The answer was a general denial of negligence. A trial was had before a jury and a verdict rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. Judgment followed the verdict. Upon motion for new trial the court made its order that it would grant the same unless plaintiff filed a written consent to a reduction of the judgment to the sum of $8,555. This plaintiff did, and from the judgment so modified and from the court's order refusing to grant its motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

The facts, in brief, are these: On arriving at his restaurant at about 6 o'clock of the morning of the explosion, Cressaty, the proprietor, noticed the smell of gas, and telephoned to defendant's office that gas was escaping and that he wished it attended to immediately. Nobody coming, he telephoned again at half past 7, saying that the smell was much stronger and that there was a dangerous leak. At 8 o'clock he telephoned again for the superintendent. "I called the gas company many times and asked for the complaint department and asked them to send some one to attend to that leak on the gas, and he said, 'All right,' and he would go and do his best to send some one at once. I told him the leak was very dangerous and the smell was getting stronger. At 9 o'clock my cashier telephoned and told him there was a strong smell of gas and send some one right away. No one telephoned after 9 o'clock. I employed a plumber to shut off the gas. He came and shut off the meter between 8 and 9 o'clock, but that didn't stop the flow of gas." Defendant's foreman of the mechanical and complaint department testified that he was first notified of the leak at Cressaty's at about 10:40 in the morning. No one had informed him about it before that time; if they had done so, he would have sent a man to repair it. The foreman sent two men to the place and shortly after followed them. He reached there about five minutes of 11, without tools. Neither of the other men had tools. They told the foreman that the service pipe was broken, that the leak was under the floor, and that the gas was gushing up with a sizzling noise. The foreman sent one of the men back to the office for a flash light and tools with which to saw the flooring, for the leak was in a dark corner of the basement, and the foreman was afraid to chop up the floor with a hatchet lest, striking a nail, he might produce a spark, causing an explosion. The foreman gave directions to Cressaty to extinguish all lights in the restaurant, and Cressaty said, "all right." One of the men remarked that he had given Cressaty the same directions before. The foreman and one employé went across the street to lunch while the third went for the tools. None of them took pains to see whether the directions to extinguish the lights had been carried out, although all knew that gas was escaping in large and dangerous quantities. There was fire in the range, and gas was burning under a large coffee urn. When the man came back with the flash light and tools, the foreman handed the flash light to Holderman, the other employé, and told him to proceed. Holderman was about ten feet in advance as they walked toward the location when the explosion occurred. Plaintiff had entered the restaurant for his lunch and was just about to sit down when the shock came. Both his legs were bruised and broken at the ankle, his knees injured, his side bruised, his eye and nose cut. Abcesses formed. It was six months before he could walk with crutches. At the time of the trial he was still visibly suffering from the results of the injuries.

Two propositions are advanced upon the appeal: The first, that the court erred in refusing to submit to the jury certain special issues requested by defendant. Second, that the court erred in an instruction which it gave.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

1. The particular interrogatories requested by defendant, which the court refused to submit, were as follows: "(1) As soon as defendant's servants arrived at Cressaty's café, did they notify Mr. Cressaty to put out all lights and fires? (2) Did Mr. Cressaty put out all the lights and fires? (3) Was there an open fire burning in Mr. Cressaty's café from the time the defendant's servants first arrived at said restaurant up to the time of the explosion? (4) If you answer the last question affirmatively, was the sole proximate cause of the explosion the fact that an open fire was kept burning in the kitchen of Mr. Cressaty's café? (5) If you answer the last question in the negative, what was the proximate cause of the explosion?"

Appellant's contention in this regard is that, notwithstanding it may have been negligent, if the jury in answer to its proposed interrogatory had declared that the sole proximate cause of the explosion was an open fire kept burning in the kitchen of Cressaty's cafe, such answer would have exonerated it from liability. But there are two complete answers to this. The first is that to the jury was submitted the interrogatory, "What was the proximate cause of the explosion?" and they answered it, "Escaping gas through negligence of the defendant." The interrogatory which the court did thus submit was fair and full. It was in no way suggestive, as most obviously are defendant's proposed interrogatories 3 and 4. Moreover, the proximate cause of the law is not the proximate cause of the logician, nor even always in strictness the proximate cause in fact, and a jury may easily be confused and misled by overniceties in these abstractions. In actions involving negligence, when the law regards the proximate cause, it is always in reference to the person producing it. When the logician is considering the proximate cause, he has in contemplation the moving influence itself, and not at all the person by whom the impetus was given. Thus, if an explosion should occur upon a vessel, forcing open its seams and admitting sea water which damaged goods, the law having regard, as has been said, to the person, would declare the explosion to have been the proximate cause, and the person causing it, if culpable, to be liable in damages for the goods injured by the water. But, to the logician the proximate cause, the causa causans of the damage would be sea water. The cause of the admission of the sea water would be the forcing apart of the ship's seams, and the cause of forcing apart the ship's seams would be the explosion. So that, to the logician, the explosion would be the cause third removed, and it, with the second cause, would be causa causæ causantis. The legal concept of the proximate cause is quite distinct. It is based on the principle that consequences which follow from the original wrong in unbroken sequence, without an intervening sufficient independent cause, are natural and proximate and for these the original wrongdoer is responsible. Wells, Poll. Torts, 36. We are not unmindful of the rule expressed by Judge Ray in "Negligence of Imposed Duties to Passengers" (669, 670), a rule which he states in the following language: "Where the concurring cause is the independent wrongful act of a responsible person, such act arrests causation, being regarded as the proximate cause of the injury; the original negligence being considered merely as its remote cause. As in the law it is the proximate and not the remote cause which is regarded, he who is guilty of the original negligence is not chargeable, but redress must be sought from him who directly causes the injury." But unless the rule as stated be taken with one or two very important modifications, it is not justified by the law. One of these modifications is that the original wrongdoer is not relieved, that the proximate causation is not always arrested by the intervention of an independent concurring cause, whether that independent concurring cause may be classified as an act of God, or the wrongful act of a third person. If, to illustrate, a railroad company negligently left a car of dynamite within a city and at a place prohibited by law, and by the explosion of the car injury was occasioned, "causation would not be arrested," and the railroad company relieved from liability, whether the explosion was occasioned by a stroke of lightning or by the act of some wrongdoer making a target of the car for rifle practice. The cases serve to illustrate the true rule, which is that the independent wrongful act, to constitute the proximate cause by displacing the original primary cause, must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage occasioned was in no way a natural or probable consequence of the original wrongful act or omission. Thus, a car carrying crude petroleum had no valve regulating the outflow of the oil. This was negligence chargeable to the consignor. The consignee, with the knowledge that the car was leaking, attempted to draw off the oil near the plaintiff's mill, the engine room of which mill was lower than the railroad track. In the absence of a valve to control the flow, the oil ran out so rapidly that it reached plaintiff's engine room, exploded, and destroyed the mill. It was held that the defendant consignor was not liable therefor, in that the injury was not a natural or probable consequence of the original negligent act in sending out the oil car without a suitable control valve. Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 63 Fed. 400, 11 C. C. A. 253, 27 L. R. A. 583. So in Lockridge v. Fesler (Ky.) 37 S. W. 65, where plaintiff had consigned his horse for keeping to a livery stable, the horse, being improperly tied, escaped through the door of the stable to the public street, where it fell and killed itself. The defendant sought to prove that, notwithstanding the horse might have been negligently fastened and by reason of the negligence have so escaped to the street, yet that its death was occasioned through fright caused by the noise and hullabaloo made by persons on the street. It was held error to refuse to admit the testimony, since if it were believed by the jury, it would establish that the injury was occasioned by an intervening, independent, and sufficient wrongful cause. But upon the other hand, in such cases as Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87, and numerous cases hereinafter to be referred to enunciating the same principle, the concurring cause was not regarded as so independent in character as to relieve the first wrongdoer from responsibility. Pastene v. Adams was an action brought to recover damages caused by the falling of lumber carelessly piled by the defendant a long time before the injury. It was urged by the defendant that the lumber was caused to fall by the negligence of a stranger. It was held that this did not constitute a defense, for the negligence of the defendant merely concurred with the negligence of the stranger, and together they constituted the direct primary cause. And so Judge Ray's definition is not to be accepted in its fullness, nor to be accepted at all, without the important further modification that the original act of negligence, the primary causation, may be in its nature so continuous that the concurrent wrongful act precipitating the disaster will in law be regarded not as independent, but as conjoining with the original act to create the disastrous result. And this brings us to the second answer to appellant's proposition.

The second answer is that if these interrogatories had been submitted, and the jury in answer to them had found that the sole proximate cause was the ignition of the gas by a fire in the restaurant, this finding, under the circumstances of this case, would not have controlled a general verdict favorable to plaintiff. We say under the circumstances of this case, because here admittedly the plaintiff was but a patron of the restaurant, owing no duty to either the gas company or the restaurant keeper, and not charged with negligence in any respect so far as the explosion is concerned. A very different case would be that presented were the restaurateur himself suing for damages and the answer of the gas company charged him with negligence in failing to extinguish the lights in his house upon its demand. In such a case the proposed interrogatories would be pertinent and proper, not for the purpose of establishing that the fire was the sole proximate cause of the explosion (for except in the logician's sense and not within the meaning of the law this could not be), but for the purpose of showing that there was concurrent negligence upon the part of the plaintiff and that he should be forbidden a recovery under the maxim which denies one the right to take advantage of his own wrong. But saving in such cases, and this is not one of them, the English as well as the American rule of decision is uniform to the effect that where an explosion of gas causing damage to a person results from the joint negligence of the gas company in discovering and repairing a leak in its pipes and of another in bringing a light in contact with the gas, whereby it explodes, a person damaged may recover from either or both at his election, each is and both are the proximate cause of the injury. Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (3d Ed.) § 338a; 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 938; 20 Cyc. p. 1170, and the cases there collated. Haley v. Jump River Lumber Co., 81 Wis. 412, 51 N. W. 321, 956, relied on by appellant, is not at variance with this reasoning, nor in conflict with these authorities. There a workman was injured upon a logging train owned by defendant. The accident occurred by the breaking of a chain and the falling off of logs on one of the cars. These cars were loaded by an independent contractor. Special interrogatories were submitted to the jury touching the negligence of the defendant. It was possible, in the view of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, that the accident might have occurred singly and solely by reason of the negligence of the independent contractor in loading the cars, and it was held error to refuse special interrogatories covering this point. In the case which we have under consideration, however, it is indisputable that the negligent act of Cressaty in permitting his lights to burn, conceding such to be a fact and conceding further that such burning of the lights actually ignited the gas which exploded, constituted but one of two concurrent causes of the accident. The legal result of the jury's so finding could not have been to relieve the defendant company from liability, but merely to declare that the company and Cressaty were joint tort-feasors. Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87; Barrett v. S. P. Co., 91 Cal. 303, 27 Pac. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 186; Lewis v. Terry, 111 Cal. 45, 43 Pac. 398, 31 L. R. A. 220, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146; Muller v. Hale, 138 Cal. 168, 71 Pac. 81; Herr v. City of Lebanon, 149 Pa. 222, 24 Atl. 207, 16 L. R. A. 106, 34 Am. St. Rep. 603.

2. The court instructed the jury as follows: "If, on the other hand, from such consideration, and in view of these instructions, you should conclude that the plaintiff ought to recover, then you will award him damages in such amount as, in your judgment, will fairly compensate him for the injuries which he has sustained; and, in estimating such damages, you may consider what, before the accident, was his health and physical ability, the extent and nature of his wounds, hurts, bruises and broken limbs he received, also the extent to which, if at all, the injuries he received are permanent in their character, as well as the physical suffering and mental worry which he has endured or will suffer in the future because of the injuries, if any, also the loss, if any, which plaintiff has sustained or will hereafter sustain by reason of abatement of ability to follow business pursuits or engage in business employments as the direct results of the injuries he received. The law prescribes no measure by which such damages can be estimated, but leaves it to the sound discretion of the jury to fix the amount thereof in such sum as, under all the circumstances, may be deemed just and proper. The law does not require that the plaintiff present any direct evidence to show the amount of damages which he has sustained, or the amount of money which would compensate him for the injuries he has received. All that is necessary is to show to the jury the extent of the injuries, and then it is for the jury to determine, in the manner I have indicated, the amount of damages which ought to be awarded. In determining the amount of damages, if any, which should be awarded to the plaintiff as compensation for the injuries he has sustained, you can add nothing by reason of sympathy, nor as punishment for the defendant."

The language of the instruction which is complained of is found in the italicized words. The complaint is twofold. First, that the recovery must be limited to compensation for the physical pain and mental anguish caused by the injuries, and that this is very different from a recovery for the physical pain and mental anguish which the plaintiff might have suffered because of the injuries. Second, that the instruction permitted a recovery for mental worry entirely disconnected from his physical pain, while the law contemplates a recovery for the physical pain and for the mental anguish or suffering only as a part of or as growing out of that physical pain. And it is argued that to tell the jury that plaintiff can recover for mental worry is to tell them that they may give him as damages compensation for such anxiety as he may have undergone, or recompense him for worrying over future inability to work, the possible duration of his injuries, or the thousand other subjects disconnected from his physical pain, over which the average man when idle and injured may brood and grieve.

To trace an injurious distinction from the use of the phrase "because of," instead of the phrase "caused by" is mere logomachy. Even this court in laying down the rule declares that plaintiff is entitled to a recovery for "the physical and mental suffering he has sustained by reason of the injury." Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409. If thus "by reason of the injury" is a fair equivalent to "caused by the injury," certainly no just complaint can be lodged against the phrase "physical and mental suffering he has sustained because of the injury."

The more important objection to the instruction, however, is that found in the argument of the appellant above adverted to, namely, that the court, by its language, permitted the jury to consider as an element of damage not alone the mental suffering which plaintiff had sustained by reason of his injuries, and growing out of the physical suffering occasioned thereby, but allowed the jury to consider generally the "mental worry" which he had endured and would in the future suffer caused by or because of or by reason of these injuries. It is said that such worry, being remote, speculative, and incapable of anything like exact ascertainment, is not within the contemplation of the law permitting recovery for physical pain and mental suffering.

The courts of the land have divided upon this question, and, as it is new to this state, it merits somewhat detailed consideration. The Supreme Court of Oregon lays down the rule that mental distress or anguish resulting from the realization of physical inability because of the injury to properly care for those dependent on plaintiff for support and education is not an element of consequential damages to be recovered in an action for personal injuries. Maynard v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 46 Or. 15, 78 Pac. 983, 68 L. R. A. 477. In Linn v. Duquesne Borough, 204 Pa. 551, 54 Atl. 341, 93 Am. St. Rep. 800, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, perhaps as fully as any other, sets forth the reasoning of the rule adopted by that court and contended for here by appellant. It is as follows: "While in this state it is a well-settled rule of law that damages may be allowed in cases like this, for the pain and anguish of mind caused by the personal injury, yet we are not aware of any case holding that anguish of mind, wholly sentimental, arising from a contemplation of a disfigurement of person, can be considered for the purpose of swelling such damages. The words 'pain and anguish of mind' are used in a popular sense to denote such as may arise from any cause, and are not necessarily restricted to that arising from personal injury. But the legal meaning of such words found in the reports of decided cases in this state, as will plainly appear from their reading, confines such meaning of the words to such pain and anguish of mind as occur necessarily and spontaneously from any injury of or shock to the nerves of sensation or such pain and anguish as remain during the continuance of the original and exciting cause and arising therefrom. But, where the injury only comes about by reflection or contemplation, then, in the legal sense, it is not caused by the injury, but arises and is produced by a combination of causes other than the injury."

In Southern Pacific Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 274, 68 C. C. A. 26, 28, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, the court laid down its rule as follows: "The rule which has been adopted by this court, however, and the rule which seems to us the better one, is that in actions for personal injury the plaintiff may recover for the bodily suffering and mental pain which are inseparable and which necessarily and inevitably result from the injury. But mortification or distress of mind from the contemplation of the crippled condition and of its effect upon the esteem of his fellows, that mental pain which is separable from the physical suffering caused by the injury, is too remote, indefinite, and intangible to constitute an element of the damages in such a case."

Without further multiplying quotations, suffice it to refer to the following cases as either wholly or partially embodying the principle for which appellant contends: Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Caulfield, 63 Fed. 396, 11 C. C. A. 552; Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co. Express, 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Planters' Oil Co. v. Mansell (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 913; Indianapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313; Augusta R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 297, 11 S. E. 706; Giffen v. City of Lewiston, 6 Idaho, 231, 55 Pac. 545; Railroad Co. v. Chance, 57 Kan. 41, 45 Pac. 60, and Railway v. Douglass, 69 Tex. 694, 7 S. W. 77.

The other view may, in turn, be presented by the following quotations: Thus, the Supreme Court of Washington, in Gray v. Washington Water Power Co., 30 Wash. 665, 71 Pac. 206, declares: "The objection urged to instruction No. 9 is that it indorsed the doctrine of compensation for mental suffering and distress of mind for disfigurement. On this subject the authorities are somewhat divided, though the decided weight of authority, we think, is to the effect that compensation can be recovered for such damages. We also think that such damages are sustained by the better reasoning. Some of the cases cited by appellant, while permitting compensation for mental suffering induced by physical pain, distinguish such mental suffering from suffering arising from causes other than physical pain, viz., such suffering as arises from the contemplation of a maimed body or deformed face; and the reason assigned is that this element of damage is too vague and indefinite to be susceptible of proof. But we think this discrimination cannot be maintained in sound reasoning, and that mental suffering which is induced by the relations of mind and body is as difficult to measure as mental suffering induced by mortification and disfigurement. Not all people suffer equally from the same bodily injury. In practice mental suffering is always an element considered by juries in slander and libel cases, in actions for false imprisonment and breach of promise, and many other cases of their character, and it ought to be. A wound to one's sensibility is none the less painful when one's character is slandered. The law ought not to grant redress alone to the business man who sustains commercial damage and refuse redress to others who have sustained a more poignant affliction. And he who negligently causes injury to another who is faultless, which makes the latter an object of pity and abhorrence to his fellow men, and an object of ridicule to the thoughtless and unfeeling, and deprives him of the comforts and companionship of his fellows, ought to respond in damages for the injury sustained."

And the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in Heddles v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 77 Wis. 228, 46 N. W. 115, 20 Am. St. Rep. 106, declares: "The first error assigned is the instructions of the court to the jury on the question of damages. The instruction objected to reads as follows: 'The amount of the damages which you will assess is left to your judgment and discretion, considering the proper elements of damages, which are as follows: Adequate compensation for all of the physical and mental pain and suffering which the plaintiff suffered at the time of the accident, which he has suffered since that time, and which he is reasonably certain to suffer in the future by reason of his injuries; also, for the mortification and anguish of mind which he has suffered, and will in the future suffer, by reason of the mutilation of his body, and the fact that he may become an object of curiosity or ridicule among his fellows.' The learned counsel for the appellant take exceptions to the use of the words, 'for the mortification and anguish of mind which he has suffered, and will suffer in the future, by reason of the mutilation of his body, and the fact that he may become an object of curiosity and ridicule among his fellows.' It is urged that these words convey to the jury an idea different from that conveyed by the words 'mental pain and suffering' which resulted from the injury. We think the learned judge only used the expressions excepted to as indicative of the causes from which the mental pain and suffering would be likely to arise from the injury received. There can be no doubt that the loss of the plaintiff's limbs will naturally cause mortification and anguish on the part of the plaintiff, and it is also quite certain that he would be to a considerable extent an object of curiosity, and to the thoughtless and unfeeling an object of ridicule. We think there was no error in the instructions excepted to. For authorities sustaining the instructions, see the following cases cited by the counsel for the respondent: Wilson v. Young, 31 Wis. 574; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 36 Wis. 657, 677 [17 Am. Rep. 504]; Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107 [23 N. W. 606]; The Oriflamme, 3 Sawy. 397 [Fed. Cas. No. 10,572]; Atlanta & R. A. L. R. R. Co. v. Wood, 48 Ga. 565; Toledo W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Baddeley, 54 Ill. 19, 5 Am. Rep. 71; Ballou v. Farnum, 11 Allen [Mass.] 73; Western & A. R. R. Co. v. Young, 81 Ga. 397 [7 S. E. 912], 12 Am. St. Rep. 320; McMahon v. Northern, etc., R. R. Co., 39 Md. 438."

A reference may also be made to Sedgwick, Measure of Damages, p. 31; Webb v. Railroad Co., 51 App. Div. 194, 64 N. Y. Supp. 491; Sherwood v. Chicago R. R. Co., 46 N. W. 776;[1] Railway Co. v. Dobbins, 60 Ark. 481, 30 S. W. 887, 31 S. W. 147; Schmitz v. Railroad Co., 119 Mo. 256, 24 S. W. 472, 23 L. R. A. 250; Galveston R. R. Co. v. Clark, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 167, 51 S. W. 276.

Upon mature consideration of these and other cases, we express the views: First, that the grief, anxiety, worry, mortification, and humiliation which one suffers by reason of physical injuries are component parts of the "mental suffering" for which, admittedly, damages may be awarded. If this be not so, then "mental suffering" is a meaningless phrase, and, when the laws says that recovery may be had for physical pain and mental suffering, it means only that recovery may be had for physical pain. Second, we think that the question is largely of academic, and to a very trifling extent, of practical, importance, since always and inevitably and against any instruction which a court may present the jury will take into consideration these very elements of mental suffering. Physical pain is a meaningless phrase if it is sought to dissociate it from mental suffering. Physical pain is but one of many forms of mental suffering. If the law contemplated an award of damages solely for physical pain, it is meaningless to say that recovery may also be had for mental suffering. It is equally meaningless to say that the mental suffering must be that occasioned by the physical pain, for then the latter phrase would alone be sufficient to convey the full meaning of the law. Therefore, when the law says that a recovery may be had for mental suffering, it means a recovery for something more than that form of mental suffering described as physical pain. What more does it mean? To mean anything it must include the numerous forms and phases which mental suffering may take, which will vary in every case with the nervous temperament of the individual, his ability to stand shock, his financial condition in life, whether dependent upon his own labor or not, the nature of his injuries, whether permanent or temporary, disfiguring and humiliating, and so through a long category, the enumeration of which it is unnecessary here even to attempt. Worry and anxiety over the future of his family would be a great element of mental suffering to a man dependent upon his own exertions for his and their support. It would not constitute any element of suffering to a man of abundant means and wealth, identically injured. A woman's mental suffering would be much increased by knowledge of facial disfigurements—a man's naturally not so much so. Shall a jury be not permitted to consider these matters in estimating mental suffering, and is it an answer to say that they are too remote or "too delicate to be weighed by any scales which the law has yet invented?" They are not remote. They are direct and consequential. They differ in degree with individuals, with their sex, circumstances, and positions in life. But so do men differ in sensing physical pain; so do they differ in the mental suffering occasioned by physical pain alone. No one would pretend to say that the actual physical suffering of a crushed leg is the same in the case of a sodden, phlegmatic tramp as it would be with a high-strung, nervous, active man of affairs. Yet the law has scales by which it measures the compensation for suffering of this kind, and measures it, of course, in terms of money. Why should it be supposed that those scales would break down and prove inadequate when other legitimate elements of mental suffering are cast into their balance? In truth the admeasurement of suffering in terms of money is a most clumsy device; but it is the best device which the law knows, and it is a device which the law will employ until some better is discovered. To forbid the consideration of these other elements of mental suffering, because the scales are not sufficiently delicate for their admeasurement, is equally to condemn the use of the scales, in the very cases and for the very purposes now admittedly sanctioned by the law.

We think, therefore, that mental worry, distress, grief, mortification, where they are shown to exist, are properly component elements of that mental suffering for which the law entitles the injured party to redress in monetary damages.

But, as we have said, we think the whole matter possesses more academic than practical significance. Conceive the case of a plaintiff before a jury with a face shockingly mutilated and distorted. He testifies that he endured mental suffering caused by his injuries. He is asked of what the mental suffering consists. He replies, physical pain, anxiety for fear his injuries may prove so permanent and disabling as to render him incapable of supporting his family, grief as he reviews the whole situation lest his disfigurement may humiliate him and make him an object of ridicule to his fellows. At the suggestion of defendant's counsel, the jury is instructed to disregard all the elements of mental suffering excepting that arising solely from the physical pain. Can the jury do it? Will the jury do it? It is mere self-stultification to believe that it will do other than to make up its verdict under the rule which, while not one at law, is one of well-nigh universal human conduct the rule of, "Put yourself in his place." Each juror will consider how he would feel under like circumstances, and he will not narrow his contemplation to the mere matter of physical suffering under the direction of any court. So that in fact verdicts always have and always will be rendered from this point of view.

---

[1] 82 Mich. 374.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

---

158 Cal. 525

BROWNING v. McNEAR. (S. F. 5,295.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 20, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1910.)

1. Customs and Usages (§ 14*)—Contracts—Construction.

The trade or commercial meaning of the phrases "payable against shipping receipts," "payable when shipped," "payable f. o. b.," is controlled by the express contract of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Customs and Usages, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. Sales (§ 218½*)—Executed Contract—Evidence.

In an action for the price of barley sold and delivered, evidence held to justify a finding that the contract of sale was an executed one, so as to pass title to the buyer under Civ. Code, § 1140, declaring that title to personalty sold passes to the buyer when the parties agree on a transfer and the thing itself is identified, and hence the risk of accident to the property vested in the buyer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 586, 587; Dec. Dig. § 218½.*]

3. Principal and Agent (§ 116*)—Power of Agent—Secret Limitations—Effect.

Limitations privately placed by a principal on the general authority of his agent, not communicated to a third person dealing with the agent, are not binding on the third person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 377, 377½; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by J. W. Browning against G. W. McNear. From a judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering & Gregory, for appellant. Adams & Adams and Thomas Rutledge, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is a second appeal after the second trial. The decision of this court upon the former appeal is reported in 145 Cal. 272, 78 Pac. 722. The pleadings are the same. The findings of the court declare an executed sale upon October 9, 1899, without any warranty express or implied, and declare also that the sale was not by sample. In the opinion rendered upon the former appeal it was said: "Whether or not the parties, plaintiff and Hickok, representing defendant, then agreed upon a present transfer of the barley, is a question of fact, the determination of which may well be left to the superior court upon another trial. It is proper to say, however, that the mere fact that payment for the grain was expressly deferred to the time of shipment, and was to be made only as against shipping receipts, does not exclusively establish that the purchase was against shipping receipts only, or that there was no agreement for a present transfer of the property."

If the court's findings of an executed sale upon October 9th, with delivery postponed at the purchaser's risk, is supported by the evidence, there is an end of the controversy between the parties on this appeal. The evidence touching this matter was the same upon the former trial as upon this. The court's finding upon the former trial was that the sale was executory. Concerning that finding this court declared: "There is some doubt as to whether the evidence supports the finding of the court." Clearly, therefore, if there was doubt whether the evidence supported the finding of an executory contract, it must be that there was substantial evidence to support a finding of an executed contract, which is the finding upon the present appeal. "The title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not." Section 1140, Civ. Code. "When the terms of sale are agreed on, and the bargain is struck, and everything that the seller has to do with the goods is complete, the contract of sale becomes absolute, without actual payment or delivery, and the property and risk of accident to the goods vest in the buyer." 2 Kent's Com. p. 492; Mechem on Sales, § 483. The facts established in support of the court's findings are the following: The barley in question was stacked along the river bank in the grainyard owned and operated by plaintiff as a warehouseman in connection with a warehouse situated in the yard. It was weighed and ready for sale and shipment. Plaintiff held the warehouse receipts commonly called "yard receipts" for the barley. These receipts showed the quantity and weight. Upon the day of the sale plaintiff was hauling the barley from the yard into the warehouse. Eight hundred and thirty-two sacks had so been hauled; but, upon the completion of the transaction with Hickok, defendant's agent, no more was hauled. Upon that day Hickok inquired what Browning would take for the barley, and Browning stated that his rice was 81¼ cents per hundred pounds. Hickok conferred with his principal by telephone. What that conversation was was not reported to Mr. Browning, but later in the day Hickok told Browning that he would take the barley at that price, and that defendant would send a boat for it and take it from the river bank and warehouse and would pay for it as soon as it was shipped. Browning demurred, desiring payment at the time, but finally agreed that he would accept payment as the barley was shipped. The yard receipts for the barley, as indicia of ownership, were delivered to Hickok and accepted by him, and Hickok drew his draft for $3,000 in part payment of the barley. Browning testifies to the delivery by him to Hickok and the acceptance by the latter of the yard receipts, and Mr. Hickok's testimony is as follows: "Q. What do you say, Mr. Hickok, then, in regard to the delivery of the barley on that day as between you and Mr. Browning? A. Mr. Browning delivered the yard receipts. Q. It is a fact that you did accept those receipts? A. I took them, yes, and accepted them."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Whatever may be the general trade meaning of the phrase "payable against shipping receipts," or "payable when shipped," or "payable f. o. b," the fact remains that such trade or commercial meaning is always controlled by the express contract of the parties, and in this case the evidence substantiates the finding, not that the sale was to be complete when the barley was shipped, but merely that the payments were to be made when the barley was shipped. Such was Browning's testimony; Mr. Hickok again corroborating it, in the following language: "Q. Wasn't the statement that you made to Mr. Browning that you would pay Mr. Browning for this barley as soon as it was shipped? A. Yes, sir; I probably made that statement to Mr. Browning. Q. Payable when shipped, or against shipping receipts. Which is it? Which did you tell him? A. I could not say positively which I told him, but it means one and the same thing."

As further evidencing that the sale was complete and executed, there was direct testimony concerning the party to the sale on whom the loss should fall in the event that the grain was injured by rain before it was taken on to the steamer or barge by defendant. It appears, first, that the time of its removal was wholly a concern of defendant, with which plaintiff had nothing to do, and that with the actual transportation from the yard and warehouse to the barge or steamer plaintiff likewise had no responsibility or concern. At the time of the sale, and in the presence of Mr. Harrington, the cashier of the bank with whom the draft and yard receipts were deposited, Mr. Browning stated, "If the grain got wet, got rained on, it was their (defendant's) loss and not mine," and that Mr. Hickok so understood and agreed. The witness Harrington corroborates this and testifies to Mr. Hickok's assent thereto. Mr. Hickok wrote a letter to his principal to the following effect: "Note what you say about Mr. Browning. There was no memorandums passed between us at the time except the draft I gave him for $3,000, the same to be paid when the barley was shipped. (Elements not considered.) At the time I purchased this barley, Mr. Browning was hauling it off the river bank and putting it in the warehouse, and after selling it to me stopped hauling, expecting it would be shipped at once, and thus save all this labor, as it was my understanding that steamer would be after it soon, and I so informed him to that effect." Mr. Hickok explains the meaning of the phrase used in his letter "elements not considered" as follows: "Q. You mean to say by that that it was purchased regardless of whether or not there would be any damage by rain? Is that what you mean? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you so testify? A. Yes, sir. Q. That is what you meant, was it not, when you said damage by the elements not considered? A. Yes, sir."

The finding is thus abundantly supported. Nor can there, we think, be any doubt as to the power of the agent, Hickok, to bind his principal, for Hickok had general authority to buy grain in the vicinity of Colusa, and was the general agent of McNear for such purpose, and any limitation upon his authority not communicated could not, of course, affect a seller in dealing with him as such agent. The new evidence introduced by defendant, which was in the form of a telegram to the agent, was a communication after the completed sale, and therefore of no operative force. The telegram was dated November 4th, and advised that the Browning barley was at Port Costa on the barge and, "as transportation company insists upon discharge, will have to be stored for account of Browning. We absolutely refuse to accept it as it is damaged throughout." The same principle applies to the private letter written by McNear to Hickok after the sale was made, to the effect that, if the barley was rained upon, Hickok was not to pay Browning for it. It is not contended that any of these instructions antedated the executed sale, and, as said by this court upon the former appeal: "In the determination of the question as to what the agreement actually was, limitations as to the general transaction privately placed by defendant upon the general authority of the agent, and not communicated to plaintiff, cannot, under the circumstances of this case, play any part." Whitton v. Sullivan, 96 Cal. 480, 31 Pac. 1115; Stockton Combined Harvester Works v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 557, 33 Pac. 633; Ruggles v. Am. Central Ins. Co., 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674; Mechem on Agency, § 283.

What has been said answers appellant's contention as to the 832 sacks of barley which were never delivered from the warehouse. The transaction being a completed sale, defendant was liable for the agreed price.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

158 Cal. 530

PEOPLE v. WILKINS. (Cr. 1,531.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 25, 1910.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 485*)—Evidence—Opinion Evidence—Hypothetical Question.

In a prosecution for the murder of a woman, a physician who testified to a few simple facts concerning the condition of the body at the time of the autopsy was then asked a hypothetical question based on these facts, but which did not re-enumerate them. Held that, by allowing the question, the court did not commit error, because the facts were few and simple.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1073, 1074; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 485*)—Evidence—Opinion Evidence—Hypothetical Question.

The objection that the language of a hypothetical question, "If there should have been between a third and a half grain of strychnine," did not embody any fact in evidence, and was purely speculative, is overrefined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1073, 1074; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

3. Criminal Law (§ 519*)—Evidence—Confession.

Upon discovering the body of a missing woman in his barn, the defendant was brought there handcuffed. He admitted burying the body, stating the woman committed suicide. Held that, as this was not a confession of murder, the fact of duress would not make it inadmissible, and the fact that the secret burying of a body is a crime was immaterial, as the defendant was not on trial for that, but for murder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1167–1171; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 480*)—Cross-Examination.

In the preliminary examination to qualify as an expert witness a chemist who had analyzed the vitals of the deceased, the defense cannot cross-examine him as to what he did with such vitals; that being matter for his examination in chief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1069; Dec. Dig. § 480.*]

5. Criminal Law (§ 404*)—Evidence.

In a prosecution for murder by means of strychnine, it was not error to admit in evidence a bottle containing that drug, which was found in the home of defendant and fully identified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 873, 891–893; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

6. Criminal Law (§ 680*)—Evidence—Order of Proof.

In a prosecution for murder, where circumstantial evidence is relied on, the facts may be given as they come, without proving the corpus delicti before connecting the defendant with the crime; this being a question of order of proof, which rests in the discretion of the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1610; Dec. Dig. § 680.*]

7. Criminal Law (§ 761*)—Trial—Province of Court and Jury—Instructions.

An instruction that, to make the killing murder, the party must die within a year and a day after "the" stroke was received, etc., is not objectionable in assuming a killing against defendant's contention that death was by suicide, as this manifestly was and would be understood as an abstract proposition of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731, 1738, 1754–1771; Dec. Dig. § 761;* Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 582, 599, 607.]

8. Criminal Law (§ 759*)—Trial—Instructions.

In a prosecution for homicide, the refusal of an instruction that the absence of motive was a circumstance in favor of innocence, was proper, that being a matter of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1737; Dec. Dig. § 759.*]

9. Criminal Law (§§ 763, 764*)—Trial—Instruction—Credibility of Witnesses—Experts.

It was not error to refuse an instruction that opinion and expert evidence should be scrutinized with the utmost care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1745; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry A. Melvin, Judge.

Mark A. Wilkins was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh J. McIsaac, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Everett J. Brown, Dist. Atty., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. The defendant was tried and found guilty of murder in the first degree. The death penalty was imposed. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The victim of defendant was a married woman, who had been intrusted by her husband with money arising from the sale of their business in an eastern state. She came to California with defendant, and they lived together as husband and wife. They purchased a place in Elmhurst in Alameda county, where they resided. Mrs. Wilkins, as she was known, was well advanced in pregnancy and looked forward to her confinement in October. Upon a Sunday afternoon of July she was last seen sitting upon the front porch of her residence. Following her disappearance inquiries were made by the neighbors, to whom Wilkins represented that his wife had gone to her mother in Kansas City to await her confinement. About the middle of October he told a neighbor that he had received a telegram from Doctor James in Kansas City calling him there at once. He disappeared for about 10 days. Upon his return he announced that he was the father of a baby boy. He represented at first that his wife would return to him in a short time, and later that she was not strong and would not return until the following spring. In truth, the defendant did not go to Kansas City, but went to San Francisco. While in San Francisco he formed the acquaintance of a man named Anderson. Anderson and his wife became guests of Wilkins at his Elmhurst home. To the Andersons he said that he had just returned from Kansas City, where he had taken his wife to bury her, she having died in childbirth. To another he represented that his wife had died in Hong Kong and that he had brought the body over with him on the steamer. Wilkins then made the proposition to Mrs. Anderson that she personate his wife in the acknowledgment of a deed to the Elmhurst property in order that he might sell it. When asked by Mrs. Anderson why he did not get a death certificate he made no answer. Suspicion was aroused against Wilkins, a little boy in the neighborhood relating that in July he had peeked through a knothole in a barn or shed upon the Wilkins place, and had seen there a hole like a grave with the earth thrown up on one side. Wilkins was arrested on the 25th day of November, 1907, and taken to the county jail of Alameda county. There he was interrogated by the district attorney and the sheriff, who told him that they were investigating the reported disappearance of his wife. They asked where his wife was. He said that he had not had a wife for 20 years, that the woman with whom he had been living was not his wife, and that he "supposed she was in the East somewhere." They asked when she went away, and he replied that he had nothing to say. They told him that they were simply investigating the matter of her reported disappearance, and that he should be able to aid them a great deal. He still replied that he had nothing to say. Meantime a search of the Elmhurst place was in progress, and about 8 o'clock in the evening the body of the woman was found in a grave dug in the shed as described by the boy. The defendant was taken to the place handcuffed, and shown the body in the grave, with the interrogatory, "Well, what have you got to say now?" or "What do you think about it?" to which he replied, "Well, I buried her." Asked "Did you kill her?" or "Didn't you kill her?" he replied that he had not, that she had committed suicide by taking strychnine. This, of course, was before a post mortem examination of the body was made. An analytical examination of the contents of the stomach and other organs disclosed the presence of strychnine in more than sufficient quantity to cause death. The body itself, where decomposition had not destroyed the evidence, gave indications of death in convulsions. The right hand was clenched and the tongue protruded from the mouth. These and other matters of suspicion pointing to a death by murder and to the defendant as the criminal were shown before the jury. The defendant's appeal presents the following matters charged as error:

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

1. Doctor Hamlin performed the autopsy, but not the chemical examination of the organs which resulted in the discovery of strychnine. He had previously testified to the protruding tongue and the clenched hand, as being evidence that the woman had died in convulsions, whether caused by criminal means or not of course he did not know. He had also testified to other matters, such as the discovery of the fœtus and its probable age. Evidence had then been introduced touching the presence of strychnine in the organs analyzed. Subsequently he was asked: "If in addition to the facts that you found at the time of performing the autopsy upon this body there was between a third— there should have been between a third and a half grain of strychnine either in the stomach, in the kidneys, in part of the kidneys that you brought to Mr. Benzinger, or in part of the intestines that you brought to Mr. Benzinger or any or all three of these, or in any two of the three, could you then state the cause of death?" The court overruled the objection to the question and permitted the witness to answer: "Yes, I can. The cause of death under those conditions was strychnine poisoning." The contention is here made that the form of question was improper under the intimations of the Le Doux Case (People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 Pac. 517); that it was error to have permitted the witness to answer the hypothetical question upon "the facts that you found at the time of performing the autopsy" without re-enumerating those facts. But this is precisely such a condition as that referred to in the Le Doux Case, where the facts touching the cause of death, from the outward appearance of the body, were few and simple, and a repetition of them, under the very language of the Le Doux Case was not necessary. Appellant objects to the language employed in the question "if there should have been between a third and a half grain of strychnine" as not embodying any fact in evidence, and thus making the question purely conjectural and speculative, that the language should have been "if there was between a third and a half grain of strychnine." The objection is overrefined. Nobody in reading the language could conceive it to have any other meaning than that which the other phrase conveys.

2. It is urged that the duress and menace involved in taking the defendant handcuffed to his home and there confronting him with the body in the grave were such as to forbid the admission of the statements which he at that time made. Those statements were not confessions, and did not therefore come within the rule established in this state, distinguishing between the admissibility of confessions and other statements in the nature of admissions not amounting to confession. People v. Ramirez, 56 Cal. 533, 38 Am. Rep. 73; People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 613, 4 Pac. 649; People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 87, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Miller, 122 Cal. 87, 54 Pac. 523; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 Pac. 671. The fact that his admission that he buried the body is a confession of another crime, since under our law the secret burying of the body of a human being is an offense (St. 1905, p. 115), has no bearing on the matter. He was not charged with the crime of secretly burying the body, and his admission that he buried it was not a confession that he committed murder. To the contrary, at that time and in that conversation he denied this crime, stating that the woman had committed suicide by taking strychnine.

3. Upon his preliminary examination Richard Benzinger, who made the analysis of the dead woman's organs and discovered therein strychnine, qualified himself as an analytical chemist, and was given over to the defense for cross-examination touching these qualifications. In the course of that cross-examination he was asked: "State what you received and exactly what you did with it?" ("it" meaning the organs of the dead woman). Objection was interposed and sustained. It is insisted that this unduly curtailed the cross-examination, in that there might have been disclosed by the witness' description of the methods which he employed, his lack of knowledge and skill as an expert.

The complaint is not just. The defendant was allowed to carry the witness through an elaborate cross-examination touching the general methods, their number and kind, for the discovery of strychnine, and he was examined particularly as to the methods which he employed for this purpose. What he did in the particular instance was matter for his examination in chief after the foundation of his qualifications as an expert had been laid. If his examination in chief upon this matter disclosed lack of skill or inefficiency, which in the opinion of defendant's counsel established that he was not qualified as an expert, the defense could have interposed its objection and taken the witness for further cross-examination before the final question going to his expert judgment of the results of his analysis was asked. People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 651, 33 Pac. 791.

4. A bottle, proved to contain strychnine, was found in the home of the defendant, and produced in evidence. Its identity and integrity were both sufficiently established to justify its admission in evidence.

5. Complaint is made that admissions and facts tending to connect the defendant with the alleged crime were admitted without proof of the corpus delicti. This is a complaint which goes rather to the order of proof than to the sufficiency, and in a case such as this, the order of proof being within the sound discretion of the court, the evidence by which it is sought to prove the crime being circumstantial, and the facts interwoven, made it not only proper, but even necessary that the proof should be given as it was. "The order of proof, however, is of no consequence, if the facts appear in evidence in the case." People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 565; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440; People v. Ward, 141 Cal. 628, 75 Pac. 306; People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 398, 77 Pac. 177. And as to the sufficiency of the proof in this case it is needful only to cite People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 346, 40 Pac. 440; People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 233; Carroll v. People, 136 Ill. 463, 27 N. E. 18; People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 428, 33 N. E. 65, and 3 Rice on Evi. 465, 466, where it is said: "Nor is it necessary that the corpus delicti should be proved by direct and positive evidence. It would be most unreasonable to require such evidence. Crimes, and especially those of the worst kinds, are naturally committed at chosen times, and in darkness and secrecy; and human tribunals must act upon such indications as the circumstances of the case present or admit, or society must be broken up. Nor is it very often that adequate evidence is not afforded by the attendant and surrounding facts, to remove all mystery and to afford such a reasonable degree of certainty as men are daily accustomed to regard as sufficient in the most important concerns of life; to expect more would be equally needless and absurd."

6. Complaint is made of a general instruction beginning: "Gentlemen of the jury, I instruct you that to make the killing murder, it is requisite that the party die within a year and a day after the stroke is received," etc. It is said that the use of article "the" vitiates this instruction, since it tells the jury that there was a killing—against the defense that the death was by suicide. Manifestly the instruction was meant, and would be understood by the jury, to be but a declaration of a principle of abstract law. Like complaint, that the instruction assumed the corpus delicti, was made in People v. Ramirez, supra, People v. Chun Heong, 86 Cal. 333, 24 Pac. 1021, and in People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 363, 97 Pac. 874, and in each of those cases the criticism was declared unwarranted. It is so here.

7. The court refused to give an instruction to the effect that the absence of motive was a "circumstance in favor of innocence and should be so considered by you." In People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 163, 72 Pac. 965, the trial court refused to give a similar instruction, and this court declared that its refusal was justified in that it was an instruction with respect to a matter of evidence, and "as such the court was not bound to give it. While an instruction of this character may be and usually is harmless if given, it is not error to refuse it."

8. The court likewise refused to give an instruction proposed by the defense, admonishing the jury "to scrutinize opinion evidence or expert evidence with the utmost care." The refusal was not error. People v. Smith, 106 Cal. 73, 39 Pac. 40; Estate of Blake, 136 Cal. 311, 68 Pac. 827, 89 Am. St. Rep. 135; Nelson v. Nelson-Bennett Co., 31 Wash. 116, 71 Pac. 749.

No other asserted errors are called to our attention on this appeal. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

14 Cal. App. 261

In re BALFOUR & GARRETTE. (Civ. 718.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 19, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1910.)

1. Corporations (§ 610*)—Proceedings for Voluntary Dissolution — Burden of Proof.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1228, prescribes the essential averments of a petition for a voluntary dissolution of a corporation; among them the fact that all claims and demands against the corporation have been satisfied and discharged. Held, that the facts required to be stated in the petition must be proved to give the court jurisdiction to decree a dissolution, and the burden of proving such facts is on the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2424–2430; Dec. Dig. § 610.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. Brokers (§ 43*) — Contract of Employment—Written Memorandum.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6, provides that an agreement employing an agent to purchase or sell realty for a commission is invalid unless the agreement or some memorandum thereof be in writing subscribed by the party to be charged. Held that, where a corporation agreed with an agent orally to pay him a certain commission for selling land, a letter written to the agent after execution by him of the oral agreement, signed by the corporation, stating the sales made, the terms thereof with which the agent was familiar, and that the corporation had agreed to pay him a commission of 2½ per cent. when the contracts had been complied with, followed by a list of the names of purchasers with the respective amounts, which they were obligated to pay to the corporation, and concluding with a request that the agent "check this up, and if any errors exist report them to us," which defined the terms of the oral agreement, took the agreement out of the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43;* Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 131.]

3. Frauds, Statute of (§ 104*)—Operation and Effect — Subsequent Reduction to Writing.

Though the statute of frauds declares that the contracts with which it deals are invalid unless reduced to writing in some form, its provisions affect the remedy only, and not the validity of the agreement, its purpose being to require contracting parties to commit to writing and thus put in unquestionable form, as evidence thereof, the terms of their agreement upon subjects to which the contracts affected by the statute relate, and a reduction of the agreement to writing, even after performance, is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 209; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 204*) — Review — Necessity for Objection in Lower Court.

Where a corporation, applying for a voluntary dissolution, did not on the contest thereof object to the admission of a letter offered as a written memorandum by the corporation of an oral agreement to pay an objector commissions for sale of land on the ground that the letter was not, and appeared not to have been, authorized by the corporation, it could not urge such objection on appeal from an adverse judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1258–1280; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

5. Corporations (§ 610*)—Voluntary Dissolution—Objections—Amendment.

Upon contest of an application by a corporation for voluntary dissolution, where the original objections alleged that the corporation was indebted to the objector in excess of $300 for commissions, and the evidence showed that the commissions to which he would be entitled would become due only when the installments on the sums for which certain lands were sold by him were paid to the corporation, an amendment to the original objections of the allegation that the commissions would become due when payments for the lands were made to the corporation by its purchasers, to make the original objections conform to the proof, was not objectionable as stating a new and different cause of opposition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2430; Dec. Dig. § 610.*]

6. Corporations (§ 607*) — Voluntary Dissolution—Demands of Objectors.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1228, prescribing the essential averments of a petition by a corporation for a voluntary dissolution, among them that all claims and demands against the corporation have been satisfied and discharged, a liability of the corporation to an agent for commissions on sales made by him will prevent such voluntary dissolution, though the liability be contingent upon the discharge by the purchasers of their obligations under their contracts of sale, where such contracts fixed definite times at which all payments should be made, and therefore definitely fixed the times at which such contracts might become functus officio, whether their terms were complied with or not; the gist of the opposition being that there existed a valid claim, and the form of such claim being immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2415; Dec. Dig. § 607.*]

7. Corporations (§ 610*) — Voluntary Dissolution—Right of Creditors to Object.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1228, prescribes the essential averments of a petition for voluntary dissolution of a corporation, and among them the fact that all claims against the corporation have been satisfied. Section 1231 provides that, at any time before the expiration of the time of publication of notice of the application, any person may file his objections to the application. Civ. Code, § 400, provides that, unless other persons are appointed by the court, the directors or managers of the affairs of a corporation at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders or members of the corporation dissolved and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation. Held, that the remedies prescribed by the Civil Code and the Code of Civil Procedure do not conflict, the one authorizing the creditor after dissolution of the corporation to proceed if necessary against the directors or other persons appointed by the court as trustees of the corporation, and the other reserving to such creditor the right to proceed directly against the corporation, and the Civil Code provision does not prevent such creditor from objecting to the corporation's application for voluntary dissolution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2430; Dec. Dig. § 610.*]

8. Appeal and Error (§ 1057*) — Harmless Error—Exclusion of Evidence.

On the trial of a contest of a corporation's application for voluntary dissolution under Code Civ. Proc. § 1227 et seq., providing that the petition shall aver that all claims and demands against the corporation have been satisfied, where the alleged creditor's claim was not only properly proved, but admitted by the corporation's officers to exist against the corporation, errors, if any, in excluding evidence as to whether the alleged creditor knew at a certain time that he was a creditor of the corporation and testimony as to the details of the transactions between the corporation and the alleged creditor and of an officer of the corporation, explaining why he gave the alleged creditor the commission which was the basis of the claim, were immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4197; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

9. Appeal and Error (§ 1050*)—Harmless Error—Admissibility of Evidence.

The creditor's claim against the corporation resting upon an oral agreement for commissions, evidenced by a written memorandum, error, if any, in the admission of parol testimony, as to the terms and conditions of the agreement as originally made, was not prejudicial, where it in no wise changed or varied the terms and conditions as evidenced by the writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153–4160; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; N. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Application for the voluntary dissolution of Balfour & Garrette, a corporation, to which contestant, T. C. Worley, filed objections. From a judgment disallowing the petition and denying a new trial, the corporation appeals. Affirmed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

E. E. Gaddis, for appellant. Arthur C. Huston, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an application on the part of the above-named corporation for its voluntary dissolution. The proceeding is authorized by the provisions of section 1227 to 1233, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Before the expiration of the time of the publication of the notice of said application as prescribed by section 1230 of said Code, the contestant, T. C. Worley, filed objections to said application. Section 1231, Code Civ. Proc. The ground upon which said opposition is interposed is that said corporation "is indebted to the said T. C. Worley in a sum exceeding $300 for commissions due to the said Worley for acting as the agent of the said corporation for selling certain lands in the county of Colusa, state of California," etc. An answer to said opposition was in due time filed by the corporation, in which it denied that it was indebted to said Worley in any sum or that it was a creditor of said Worley. Upon the issues thus framed, the contest was tried, and a judgment rendered and entered disallowing the prayer of the petitioner. Thereafter the corporation moved for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the corporation a new trial. In this connection, it may be suggested that the claim of the respondent that a "motion for a new trial cannot be made in a proceeding of this kind," and that therefore the "appeal from the order" denying the same is abortive, cannot, even if tenable, avail anything here, since there is also an appeal from the judgment on a bill of exceptions, on which appeal many of the important alleged errors of law occurring at the trial of the contest may be reviewed. But, as the judgment here must be against appellant, we shall treat the appeal from the order, so far as we may feel required to consider it, as having been properly taken.

Section 1228 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the essential averments of a petition for a voluntary dissolution of a corporation, and, among these, the fact that "all claims and demands against the corporation have been satisfied and discharged" must be alleged. Obviously, the facts thus required to be stated in the petition must be proved, otherwise the court would be without the power or jurisdiction to decree a dissolution. And the burden of proving all the facts required to be set forth in the petition is, of course, on the corporation.

It appears from the evidence that in the year 1907 Worley was employed by the corporation to sell certain lands owned by said corporation and situated in Colusa county. These lands consisted of two large ranches, which were subdivided into small tracts by the corporation and thus placed on the market for sale. Worley sold a large number of said tracts of land, and for the services thus rendered the corporation agreed that he should receive, in addition to a salary of $100 per month, commissions at the rate of 2½ per cent. on the total amounts realized on all such sales. The terms upon which these sales were made consisted of the payment of a certain amount of the purchase price in cash on the execution of the contract of sale and the balance in installments. Worley's commissions were to be paid as the purchasers paid in these installments to the corporation. The agreement thus entered into between the parties was not originally reduced to writing.

It is first contended by the appellant that the alleged claim of Worley did not constitute a valid demand against the corporation for the alleged reason that it is based upon and grows out of an unwritten or oral agreement which, to be valid, is required by the statute of frauds to be committed to writing. It is further insisted that the court, by permitting the contestant to "amend" his opposition after all the testimony had been received, committed a fatal error, in that the alleged amendment involved the statement of an entirely new and substantive cause of opposition, different and distinct from that alleged in the original opposition. The first point was urged before the trial court on objections to the proof of the alleged contract and on a motion for a nonsuit presented at the close of the case for the contestant.

1. Section 1973, subd. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides that "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" is invalid, "unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged," etc.

The evidence discloses that the original agreement between the corporation and Worley was oral, or unwritten, and, manifestly, if this were all the testimony received showing or tending to prove such agreement, it would be insufficient to establish a valid contract between the parties, and, necessarily, failure to disclose such a claim or demand against the corporation as would justify the court in denying it the right to be dissolved would follow. But, after certain sales were made, the corporation, by a memorandum in writing, signed by it, expressed the terms and conditions of the contract, thus admitting the making of the oral agreement, and, we think, this writing is sufficient to relieve the transaction from the operation of the statute. This memorandum consisted of a letter addressed to Worley, dated "March 4, 1908," and, as stated, signed by the corporation in its corporate name. This letter, in part, reads as follows: "E.

& O. E. following sales of the Redington & Hornlein ranches have been made on varied and divers terms with which you are familiar, and we have agreed to pay you a commission of 2½ per cent. on same due and payable when the terms and conditions of the various contracts have been complied with, viz." Then follows a list of the names of purchasers of the lands, together with the several and respective amounts which they were obligated to pay to the corporation by reason of said sales. The letter concludes with a request that Worley "check this up, and if any errors exist report them to us."

The foregoing letter clearly defines the terms of the oral agreement previously entered into between the parties. It is definite and certain, and leaves no ground for conjecture as to its meaning or the intention of the parties, or the terms and conditions upon which Worley's employment rested. And we think it is clearly sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the statute, notwithstanding the fact that it was not written until after the execution of the terms of the agreement on Worley's part.

There appears to have been in the early cases an apparent diversity of views among the courts concerning the nature and effect of the statute of frauds, some of the decisions appearing to treat such statutes, which, like ours, declare without qualification that the contracts to which they relate are invalid unless put in writing in some form, not as promulgating mere rules of evidence, but as going to the very vitality of the contracts themselves. We have not had our attention directed by counsel to any California cases which have passed directly upon this precise question. Of course, it will be admitted that contracts which are required to be in writing by the statute are in themselves perfectly valid; that is to say, there could be nothing, abstractly speaking, urged against their validity if the statute did not compel them to be in writing. However, should we feel required to view the statute as it reads in this state as affecting such contracts themselves, or, in other words, as constituting the writing as an essential element of the contracts themselves, we can even then perceive no sound or just reason in principle why, if originally fatally defective in the respect referred to, they could not be made valid by a subsequent writing, sufficiently clear and definite to disclose the terms and conditions of the agreement, somewhat in analogy to the principle which sustains a transaction in which an agent has performed some act in excess of his authority as such and in which the principal has subsequently ratified such act.

But the statute of frauds, in its original conception, was, as the purpose expressed in its title or preamble clearly implies (that is, to prevent frauds and perjuries), undoubtedly intended to establish mere rules of evidence for the preservation, in the highest and most unquestionable form, of the evidence of the terms of contracts relating to subjects involving the gravest concern to contracting parties. In other words, the original object of the statute was unquestionably to lay down in express terms certain rules by which, only, certain contracts, in themselves perfectly legal and valid, could be proved. The provisions of the statute, in other words, affected the remedy; that is, in effect deprived the party seeking to enforce a contract coming within their purview of his right of action if such contract were not in writing. And, we think, no more can be said of the purpose and effect of our statute, although it declares, as seen, without qualification, that the contracts with which it deals are invalid unless reduced to writing in some form. Its evident purpose, like that of the English statute (29 Car. II, c. 3), is to require contracting parties to commit to writing and thus put in enduring and unquestionable form, as evidence thereof, the terms of their agreements upon subjects to which the contracts affected by the statute relate. This is the view of statutes of frauds, phrased as ours is, expressed by courts of other jurisdictions, and in our opinion it is the correct view.

In Bird v. Munroe, 66 Me. 337, 22 Am. Rep. 571, a verbal contract had been made by the defendant with the plaintiffs for the purchase of a quantity of ice, to be delivered by immediate shipment to the defendant. The latter prevented the plaintiffs from performing the contract on their part "according to the preparations made by them for the purpose." On a date subsequently to the making of the oral agreement, the parties put said agreement into writing. In an action for a breach of said contract, the question presented was, stating it in the language of the opinion, "whether, in view of the statute of frauds, the writing in this case shall be considered as constituting the contract itself, or at any rate any substantial portion of it, or whether it may be regarded as merely the necessary legal evidence by means of which the prior unwritten contract may be proved. In other words, is the writing the contract, or only evidence of it? We incline to the latter view." The court then proceeds to sustain its conclusion by reasoning which we regard as conclusive. Among other things, the court says: "A distinction is attempted to be set up between the meaning to be given to Rev. St. c. 111, § 4, where it is provided that no unwritten contract for the sale of goods 'shall be valid,' and that to be given to the several preceding sections where it is provided that upon certain other kinds of unwritten contracts 'no action shall be maintained'; the position taken being that in the former case the contract is void, and in the other cases only voidable perhaps, or not enforceable by suit at law. But the distinction is without any essential difference, and is now so regarded by authors generally and in most of the decided cases. All the sections referred to rest upon precisely the same policy. Exactly the same object is aimed at in all." See Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325; Browne on St. of Frauds, §§ 115, 136; Benjamin on Sales, § 114; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige, 526.

But it is contended that the subscription of the mere corporate name of the corporation to the letter is not of itself sufficient to disclose the authenticity of said writing. In other words, the claim is that, in order to show that the letter was written and addressed to Worley by authority of the corporation itself, there must not only have been subscribed to the letter the corporate name and signature of the corporation, but, in addition, it must have been made to appear from the letter itself that the document was the result of the corporate act of the corporation, and to that end, and in order to bind the corporation, should have contained "the signature and official station of the official authorized to execute the same."

In answer to this contention it is first to be observed that counsel for appellant made no objection to the admission of the letter in evidence on the ground that the same was not, nor appeared not to have been, authorized by the corporation itself. Moreover, it appears that Mr. Garrette, a member and president of the corporation, wrote and mailed the letter to Worley, and it was expressly admitted by counsel for the appellant, during the hearing of the contest, that Garrette was authorized to represent the corporation in the transaction; that, to use counsel's own language, "whenever Garrette spoke, it was the corporation." And, in this connection, it may be added that Garrette admitted that the terms of the oral contract were expressed and embraced in said letter.

2. There is no merit in the point that the amended objections state a new, distinct, and different cause of opposition from that set up in the original. The latter alleged that the corporation was indebted to Worley in a sum exceeding $300 "for commissions due to the said Worley," etc. The evidence disclosed that the commissions to which Worley would be entitled would become due and payable only when the installments on the sums for which the tracts of land were sold by him were paid to the corporation. The contestant was allowed to amend his opposition so that it would conform to this proof, and it was, therefore, alleged, in addition to the allegations of the original, that the commissions would become due and payable when payments for the lands were made to the corporation by the purchasers.

The gist of an opposition to the dissolution of a corporation lies in the fact that there exists against such corporation a valid claim or demand, and, therefore, it is manifest that the form or character of such claim or demand is immaterial. Here the original opposition charged that the contestant has an unconditional, vested claim against the corporation. The evidence, admitted without objection, except in so far as it affected the question of the statute of frauds, disclosed a contingent claim and liability; that is, that the corporation's indebtedness to Worley was contingent upon the payment of the unpaid balances to become due on the purchase prices of the tracts of land sold by Worley. If such a liability constitutes a valid claim against the corporation, within the meaning of section 1228 of the Code of Civil Procedure, then the amended objections do not, obviously, state a new or different opposition from that set forth in the original. The amendment, in fact, does not, so far as the essential gist of the objections is concerned, go any further than the original opposition; the allegations as to the nature of the claim, with regard to the time at which it would become a vested and a present enforceable right, being, as declared, unnecessary and immaterial, and therefore surplusage.

That the liability existing in favor of Worley against the corporation constitutes a claim or demand which will interrupt the voluntary dissolution of a corporation under the provisions of section 1228 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we can perceive no sound reason for doubting. The liability, although contingent, will crystallize into an unconditional, enforceable right if the purchasers discharge their obligations to the corporation. And it is no argument against this view to say that the corporation could thus, against its will, be perpetuated as such indefinitely; for the contracts between it and the purchasers of the lands sold by Worley fix definite and certain times at which all payments, including the final payments, shall be made, and therefore definitely fix the times at which such contracts may become functus officio, whether their terms are complied with or not. If the terms of the contracts are fully performed by the purchasers, Worley would be entitled to his commissions, and, if paid, there would thus, of course, cease to exist any claim or demand against the corporation, so far as Worley was concerned. If the purchasers fail to make their payments when due, the contracts would lapse, and the corporation's liability to Worley would thereupon cease.

But it is argued with apparent earnestness that creditors have no right to object to the voluntary dissolution of a corporation. Manifestly, this argument flies squarely in the face of the statute, and to sustain it the plain language and obvious purpose of the law must be arbitrarily ignored. The contention appears to be founded on the fact that section 400 of the Civil Code makes provision for the protection of the rights of creditors of corporations that have been dissolved. But there is nothing in this provision which in any wise conflicts with the right given a creditor by section 1231 of the Code of Civil Procedure to object to the application by a corporation to be dissolved, nor with the provisions of section 1228 of said Code requiring a corporation making such application to allege and prove, before the court is authorized to declare the dissolution, that all claims and demands against it have been satisfied and discharged. The remedy afforded creditors by section 400 of the Civil Code is only cumulative or in addition to that afforded by the proceedings authorized by section 1227 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. If a creditor should fail to object to the dissolution of a corporation, it would, nevertheless, as before stated, still be incumbent upon the corporation to prove the essential averments of the petition for a dissolution, among which is the averment that all claims and demands against it have been satisfied and discharged, and, on failure of such proof, the court would be as powerless to declare it dissolved as it would be if legal objections by some person had been made against its dissolution and sustained by the proofs. In other words, a private corporation can only be dissolved in the manner pointed out by the Legislature and by a compliance with the terms and conditions imposed by the statute. State I. & I. Co. v. San Francisco, 101 Cal. 135, 35 Pac. 549. And if dissolved by the court's judgment, still having creditors who had not objected to the dissolution in the proceeding for that purpose, section 400 of the Civil Code would still afford such creditors a remedy for the protection and judicial assertion of their claims against the corporation. As stated, the two remedies in no way conflict. The one is to preserve to the creditor the right to proceed directly against the corporation; the other authorizes him, after the corporation has been dissolved, to proceed, if necessary, against the directors or other persons appointed by the court as trustees of such corporation. Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 365 et seq., 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192; Crossman v. V. W. Co., 150 Cal. 580, 89 Pac. 335.

3. There are, as before stated, some other rulings of which complaint is made. To these we do not feel required to give extended attention. They relate to the exclusion and admission of certain testimony other than that bearing upon the question of the validity of the contract or whether said contract is within the statute of frauds, which question we have already disposed of. The claim of Worley against the corporation having been proved by competent evidence and, in fact, admitted, the rulings now referred to, conceding them to be erroneous, are manifestly harmless.

The purpose of the opposition was not to secure a judgment in favor of Worley for the amount of his claim. The purpose was, as we have shown, to show that "all claims and demands against the corporation" had not been "satisfied and discharged," and thus prevent a decree of the court declaring it dissolved. This was the only issue involved and, obviously, the only question that could be submitted for trial in this proceeding, aside from those other necessary facts which the first subdivision of section 1228 of the Code provides must be set out in the petition. Since the claim of Worley was not only properly proved, but admitted by its officers to exist against the corporation, such errors, if errors they be, as are involved in the rulings excluding an answer to the question whether Worley knew "at this time" he was a "creditor of the corporation," in striking out the testimony of Garrette relating to the details of the transactions between the corporation and Worley, refusing to permit Garrette to explain why he "gave Worley 2½ per cent. commission in addition to the $100 salary," and other alleged errors of a like nature, are immaterial. The oral testimony leading up to the execution of the written contract, or, speaking more accurately, leading up to the writing of the letter embracing the terms of the oral contract, was intended only as explanatory of the circumstances under which the contract was made and as introductory to the proof of the letter. Necessarily, the terms of the oral agreement had to be shown; but this testimony as to the terms and conditions of the agreement as originally made in no manner or degree changed or varied or differed from the terms and conditions of the contract as evidenced by the writing. The parol testimony, having agreed in all substantial particulars with the terms and conditions of the contract as disclosed by the letter, cannot be held to have been prejudicial.

Some of the findings are challenged on various grounds. The essential finding that a claim against the corporation has not been satisfied and discharged is of itself sufficient to support the judgment.

We have found no errors in the rulings of the court, either upon objections to evidence or the motion for a nonsuit, or anything with regard to the findings, which would justly warrant a reversal.

The order and judgment are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

14 Cal. App. 201

PEOPLE v. VAUGHN. (Cr. 130.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 10, 1910.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 131*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—INFORMATION—"MURDER."

An information alleging that accused on a specified date did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously and with malice aforethought assault S.. with intent then and there to kill and murder her, was not fatally defective for failure to allege that S. was a human being, the term "murder" being defined as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, under Pen. Code, § 950, subd. 2, providing that an information shall contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 204; Dec. Dig. § 131.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4632-4637; vol. 8, pp. 7726, 7727.]

2. JURY (§ 82*)—SUMMONING—PREJUDICE OF OFFICERS—SHERIFF.

Where accused on the day before a jury was summoned to try him stated that he had no objection to the sheriff serving summons on veniremen, and that he believed the sheriff would be fair in the matter, and thereafter, when he attempted to challenge the panel, stated that he believed the sheriff was an absolutely fair and square man, the court did not err in refusing defendant's offer to prove in support of the challenge that the sheriff summoned the special venire entirely from M. where the feeling and prejudice against defendant was strong, the time being too short to summon jurors from any other place, as the fact, if proved, would not be indicative of bias on the part of the officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 307; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 372*)—INTEREST—EVIDENCE.

Where a witness had testified that he had considerable interest in defendant's prosecution, and that the family to which he belonged had hired and were to pay counsel to assist in prosecuting accused, the court did not err in sustaining an objection to a question asked witness on cross-examination as to how much he paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1192-1199; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 464*)—EVIDENCE—INSANITY.

Where accused, in a prosecution for assault on S. with intent to murder, claimed that he was insane on the topic of his love for S., the court properly excluded a question asked of a witness as to whether accused with reference to that topic could reason and did reason with witness as a sane man concerning the same; such question not being in the form authorized by the Code to prove insanity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1056; Dec. Dig. § 464.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—CURING ERROR.

Where accused claimed he was insanely in love with the prosecutrix at the time he committed the alleged assault on her with intent to murder, he was not prejudiced by the exclusion of testimony as to whether witness observed anything peculiar and unnatural with reference to accused, the witness having afterwards testified that from what he noticed of defendant he believed he was irrational and insane, relating accused's conduct and statements forming the basis of his belief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145-3153; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 452*)—INSANITY—EVIDENCE.

Where accused in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder pleaded insanity, and the sheriff testified that he had had accused in his custody for three months, had seen him twice a day at least, and had heard conversations between him and others, had observed his actions and conduct during the entire period, he was properly permitted to testify as to his opinion concerning defendant's sanity, though he had no previous acquaintance with him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1054; Dec. Dig. § 452.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—APPEAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—DISCRETION.

Whether witnesses testifying to opinions as to the sanity of accused were intimate acquaintances so as to qualify them was for the determination of the trial court in the exercise of discretion, which could not be interfered with on appeal, in the absence of abuse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3062; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INSANITY—ABSTRACT STATEMENTS.

Where accused pleaded insanity, a provision of the charge calling the jury's attention to the fact that such defense was sometimes simulated and interposed because the facts rendered hopeless all others means of avoiding punishment was a mere abstract statement, and not prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3159; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS—INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN.

Where every principle of law necessary for the intelligent guidance of the jury was contained in the court's charge, the refusal of requests to charge was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

H. W. Vaughn was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Reynolds, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, and M. T. Brittan, for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder and sentenced to the penitentiary for a period of 14 years. The prosecutrix was very seriously injured by a gunshot wound, and there is no doubt it was inflicted without any justification by defendant, but his defense is based upon the claim of insanity.

The first point made by appellant for a reversal is that the demurrer to the information should have been sustained for the reason that it is not alleged therein that "the Celia Skehan, upon whom the alleged assault was committed, is a human being." The charging part of said information is as follows: "The said H. W. Vaughn on or about the second day of October, nineteen hundred and nine, at the county of Yuba, in the state of California, then and there being, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, and with malice aforethought, assault one Celia Skehan with intent then and there to kill and murder said Celia Skehan." It is difficult to treat seriously such an extremely technical objection. The Court of Appeals of New York in People v. Gilbert, 92 N E. 85, has recently considered a similar contention as follows: "The objection is purely technical, and technical objections are no longer regarded as serious unless they are so thoroughly supported by authority that they cannot well be disregarded, even under the latitude of the statute relating to the subject. The criminal law is fast outgrowing those technicalities which grew up when the punishment for crime was so severe as in many cases to shock the moral sense of lawyers, judges, and the public generally. When stealing a handkerchief worth one penny was punished by death, and there were nearly 200 different capital offenses, it was to the credit of humanity that technicalities should be invoked in order to prevent the cruelty of a strict and literal enforcement of the law. Those times have passed, for the criminal law is no longer harsh or inhumane, and it is fortunate for the safety of life and property that technicalities to a great extent have lost their hold."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Indeed, the information before us would seem to satisfy the requirement of the Code that it must contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Section 950, subd. 2, Pen. Code. The information is not required to be drawn in accordance with any antiquated and arbitrary notion of the rules of technical pleading, but a simple and sufficient test is prescribed which can leave no doubt as to the correctness of the court's ruling. We venture to assert that no person "of common understanding" would or could fail to know that the district attorney intended to charge the defendant with making the assault upon a human being. The name itself very clearly indicates that, but used in connection with the term "murder," there is no room whatever for controversy. "Murder" has a well-defined meaning, and that meaning is, "the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." The decisions also are entirely opposed to appellant's position. Some of them are cited in the Gilbert Case, supra. The cases invoked by appellant are not in point. It is true that in the case of People v. Lee Look, 137 Cal. 590, 70 Pac. 660, the Supreme Court has virtually held that a "person of common understanding" would be in doubt whether "Lee Wing" was a human being unless some qualifying expression were used, still it is said: "It will be noticed that in this information the thing killed, Lee Wing, is not averred to have been a human being; that the crime for which he is sought to be charged is not stated to be 'murder'; that there is no averment that he did 'kill and murder' Lee Wing; that the word 'murder' nowhere appears in the document, nor does the latter contain any other language which necessarily implied that the appellant killed a human being." Whereas, here, as we have seen, the term "murder" is used, which necessarily implies a human being.

There is no merit in the point that the court erred in overruling defendant's motion to be permitted to present evidence to show bias on the part of the officer who summoned the panel. The offer of the defendant was to prove that the sheriff summoned the special venire "entirely from the city of Marysville, where the feeling and prejudice against the defendant was strong." From this he proposed to contend that "there must have been prejudice and bias on the part of the officer." The conclusion would not be warranted from the circumstance relied upon. Besides, the defendant had stated the day before that he had no objection to the sheriff serving the summons, believing that he would be fair in the matter. When the purported challenge was made, he had not changed his mind as to the officer, for he stated: "I believe Mr. Voss is an absolutely fair and square man." It may be said, further, that it appears the time was too short for the jurors to be summoned from any point outside of the city of Marysville, and, upon an examination of said jurors, the required number was found who had no prejudice against the defendant. It is manifest, therefore, that appellant has no cause for complaint as to the challenge of the panel.

The witness Poole, brother-in-law of the prosecuting witness, was asked on cross-examination: "How much do you pay?"—referring to the employment by his family of counsel to assist in the prosecution of defendant. An objection was sustained to the question. The ruling was without prejudice as the witness had already admitted that he "certainly had considerable interest in the case," and had testified that he had not directly employed Mr. Brittan, but that the family had and the family was to pay for the services. The exact amount to be paid by the family or any member of it would add nothing to the testimony already given.

An objection of the prosecution was sustained to the following question asked of a certain witness: "Could he in reference to this particular topic (his love for Miss Skehan) reason and did he reason with you as a sane man in reference to this particular topic?" This is not the form of question as to sanity authorized by the Code and decisions, and we can see no error in the court's ruling. But the matter was entirely covered by the testimony of the witness who was allowed to state that she believed that the defendant was insane on the subject, that he acted in an irrational manner, and she gives at great length her reasons for the belief including the way in which he talked about the prosecuting witness. A similar suggestion is applicable to the ruling sustaining an objection of the prosecution to the following question asked of another witness: "Did you observe anything peculiar and unnatural in reference to this defendant?" The witness afterwards testified that from what he noticed of the defendant he believed him to be irrational and insane, and he proceeded to relate in elaborate detail the defendant's conduct and statements.

Mr. Lydon, the undersheriff of the county, was called as a witness in rebuttal, and after stating that the defendant had been in the custody of the witness since October 15, 1909—a period of three months—and that he had seen him twice a day at least and had heard conversations between him and other persons and had observed the actions and conduct of defendant during the entire period, he was asked this question by the district attorney: "I will ask you, Mr. Lydon, if you formed any opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the defendant?" Defendant's objection to the question was overruled. The situation is almost identical with that presented in the case of the witness Weise, set forth in People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 260, 46 Pac. 1074, where it is said: "The witness Weise, the jailer who received defendant at the county jail, on the day of his arrest, was permitted to testify that defendant appeared 'rational' at that time. The witness had had no previous acquaintance with the defendant, and it is contended that the evidence was incompetent. But under the rule declared in People v. Lavelle, 71 Cal. 352, 12 Pac. 226, and Holland v. Zollner, 102 Cal. 633, 36 Pac. 930, 37 Pac. 231, the evidence was unobjectionable. It is there held that the question of the mere manner or appearance of a person at a particular time does not fall within the rule which requires the witness to be an 'intimate acquaintance' in order to be competent to testify. Moreover, we think the opinion of the witness is to be regarded as having been formed more upon his subsequent acquaintance with and knowledge of defendant acquired during the months that the latter remained under his charge in the county jail than upon the mere appearance of defendant when first brought to the jail. The evidence shows that the witness had a very excellent opportunity, of which he availed himself, to acquire an intimate knowledge and form an intelligent judgment of defendant's manner and mental condition, and we think upon this ground, that the evidence was admissible." It was also held that the evidence was proper rebuttal to meet the testimony in behalf of defendant.

It is contended that the testimony of certain witnesses that in their opinion the defendant was sane was improperly admitted, for the reason that said witnesses were not "intimate acquaintances" within the rule permitting such testimony. It is well settled, however, that "the question as to whether one has been shown to be an intimate acquaintance, and therefore qualified to express an opinion as to the sanity of a person, is from its nature peculiarly one that is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and that the appellate court will not interpose unless an abuse of that discretion is clearly apparent." People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 598, 75 Pac. 179. In the case of none of said witnesses here can it be said that the evidence was insufficient to justify the ruling, nor that the court abused its discretion in any manner.

Appellant criticises a portion of the charge on insanity in which the jury's attention is directed to the fact that this defense is sometimes simulated and interposed because the facts render hopeless all other means of avoiding punishment. The admonition probably might well have been omitted, but a sufficient answer to appellant's contention is found in People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 236, 64 Pac. 481, as follows: "And, while we see no legal reason why the information therein contained should be given to the jury in the court's charge, yet upon an examination of these statements, we find them made purely and entirely in the abstract. They are not directed toward the defendant and his case, and, assuming the jury to be an intelligent body of men, the instruction could have done him no prejudice." In the later case of People v. Manoogian, supra, it is also said: "It has been given in several cases, and, while this court has frequently said that it would be better if this instruction were omitted altogether, it has also been said that it has been given so often in the past and approved by this court that it will not now be held prejudicially erroneous." In this connection it should be said that the court fully and accurately instructed the jury as to insanity and declared to them that "this defense must be considered and weighed fully, fairly and justly; and, when proved, it must recommend itself to the sense of humanity and justice of the jury."

There was no error committed in refusing any instruction proposed by the defendant. Every principle of law necessary for the intelligent guidance of the jury in reaching a correct conclusion from the facts was contained in the clear and elaborate charge of the court.

Indeed, the whole trial seems to have been conducted with the utmost care that no right of the defendant should be invaded, and we find nothing in the record to justify a reversal.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

14 Cal. App. 273

PEOPLE v. HERGES. (Cr. 260.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 342*)—MANSLAUGHTER — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

If the evidence justified a verdict of murder, accused cannot complain of a verdict of manslaughter as it would also be sufficient to sustain the latter verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 722; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 338*)—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—ACTION OF TRIAL COURT.

Any error in a murder case, in admitting evidence that decedent, shortly after the injury, stated in accused's presence that accused stabbed him without cause, and in refusing to permit accused to make a preliminary examination as to the circumstances under which such statement was made, was cured by the action of the court, after full cross-examination of such witness by accused, and before the introduction of accused's testimony, in striking out such evidence, and pointedly directing the jury to utterly disregard any evidence that had been admitted, and afterwards stricken out by order of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 345*)—CREDIBILITY—FORMER CONVICTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, permitting a witness to be impeached by showing that he has been convicted of a felony, and section 2065, requiring a witness to answer to the fact of his previous conviction for felony, evidence was admissible on the question of accused's credibility as a witness that he had previously been convicted of a felony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1126–1128; Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE—APPREHENSION OF DANGER.

Accused's apprehension of danger or death must have been such as any reasonable man would conceive to be imminent under the circumstances in order to justify the killing as in self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158–163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 300*) — INSTRUCTIONS — SELF-DEFENSE.

The court should instruct that, to justify the killing as in self-defense, accused must not only have believed himself to be in imminent peril at the time, but as a reasonable man he must have had sufficient grounds for such belief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614–632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

William Herges was convicted of manslaughter, and from the judgment of conviction, and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Robert Borland and John D. Willard, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and James F. Brennan, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged with the crime of murder, and also with having suffered a prior conviction of the crime of burglary. Upon his arraignment he admitted the charge of prior conviction to be true, and upon trial was found guilty of manslaughter. This is his appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first point presented in appellant's brief is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict of guilty of manslaughter. Upon this point appellant states his position as follows: "It is the contention of the appellant that the evidence presented cannot justify the verdict of manslaughter. That upon the evidence produced for the state the defendant should either have been convicted of murder or have been acquitted, and that the defenses of either self-defense or insanity, if believed by the jury, should have produced an acquittal. If not believed, the verdict should have been murder." In other words, appellant concedes that the evidence for the prosecution would have justified a verdict of guilty of murder. If so, it necessarily follows that the same evidence was not only sufficient, but more than sufficient, to support a verdict for manslaughter. People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 303, 47 Pac. 128.

The appellant also complains of the action of the court in permitting the introduction of evidence to the effect that decedent shortly after the injury stated in the presence of defendant that defendant stabbed him (decedent) without cause, and in refusing to defendant the right to conduct a preliminary examination as to the circumstances under which such statement was made, and the condition of defendant and the circumstances surrounding him when such statement was made. Subsequently, however, after full cross-examination of the witness by defendant, and before the introduction of any testimony for the defense, the court struck out the testimony objected to, and in pointed and explicit terms directed the jury to totally disregard it. The court again, in pointed and explicit terms, in its charge to the jury told them to "absolutely and completely and utterly" ignore and disregard any evidence that may have been admitted and afterwards by order of court stricken out. Under these circumstances any error, if any, committed by the court in admitting the evidence in question, or in ruling on defendant's application to be allowed to cross-examine the witness preliminary to his giving his testimony, was cured by the subsequent action of the court. People v. Hoy Yen, 34 Cal. 176; People v. Borda, 105 Cal. 636, 38 Pac. 1110; People v. Prather, 134 Cal. 436, 66 Pac. 589, 863.

Appellant in his brief makes the point that the court erred in allowing the district attorney to prove, upon cross-examination of defendant, who voluntarily became a witness for himself, that he had been convicted of a felony. This point, however, appellant very properly abandoned at the oral argument. People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 87 Pac. 1016; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2065.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The very common complaint is made that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury in referring to the fact of defendant's previous conviction for a felony. The record discloses that the references to defendant's previous conviction were made by the district attorney in connection with and as a part of his discussion of evidence that had been given on behalf of defendant as to his general reputation for peace and quietness. Several references of this kind were made without objection, but finally counsel for defendant did object, whereupon the court directed the district attorney to omit such references, and directed the jury to ignore what the district attorney had said with reference to defendant's conviction for felony "in so far as he might have attempted to make that bear on the question of this man's reputation for peace and quiet." The court thus sustained the contention of appellant, and by its instruction to the jury protected defendant from any injury that might otherwise have resulted from the course of the district attorney. The evidence in question was of course proper to be considered by the jury upon the question as to the credibility of defendant as a witness in the case. People v. Soeder, supra; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2065.

The only remaining point arises out of certain modifications that the court made to certain instructions given at the request of the defendant concerning the right of the defendant under the law of self-defense to act upon appearances, that is, apparent necessity. One of the modifications was to the effect simply that the apprehension of injury or death must be such as any reasonable man would conceive to be imminent under the circumstances. This certainly was not erroneous, and is clearly supported by People v. Glover, 141 Cal. 233, 74 Pac. 745.

The other modification was of similar import. As was said in People v. Glover, supra: "It was the duty of the court to so formulate the instructions as to obviate any danger of the law being misunderstood, and as clearly as possible inform the jury that, in order to justify the defendant under his plea of self-defense, it must appear not only that defendant actually believed himself in deadly peril, but that as a reasonable man he had sufficient grounds for his belief." This was the effect of the modifications complained of, and the court committed no error in so modifying the instruction. People v. Glover, supra.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 240

SOUTHERN PAC. MILLING CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES. (Civ. 855.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 13, 1910.)

1. Prohibition (§ 10*)—Jurisdiction of Superior Court—Amendment to Defective Petition.

The insolvency law confers jurisdiction upon the superior court to adjudicate one an insolvent when five or more resident creditors whose claims aggregate $500 or more petition the court therefor, and provides that the petition must be verified by at least three petitioning creditors, must set forth certain requisite facts, and that it may be amended and corrected to conform to the facts, and that such amendment shall relate back to, and as embraced in, the original petition, and that the filing of a petition by or against the debtor upon which or an amendment of which an order of adjudication of insolvency may be made shall be deemed to be the commencement of proceedings in insolvency, and authorizes an appeal from the order granting or refusing an adjudication of insolvency. Held that, while a petition in conformity with the statute is essential to confer jurisdiction upon the court, such jurisdiction may be conferred by amendments to a defective petition which by relation are taken as embraced in the original, the amendments, however, being confined to the facts stated in the petition, which presupposes that a petition signed by authority of the requisite number of creditors, properly verified has been filed, and hence, where such amendments are properly made, prohibition will not lie to restrain the proceedings on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37, 54, 55; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. Insolvency (§ 32*) — Petition — Officers Authorized to Affix Corporate Names.

The insolvency law being silent as to the character or class of officers authorized to affix the corporate name to the petition, where a corporation is petitioner for the adjudication of another as an insolvent, it may be signed or verified by any one of the corporation's officers or agents in its behalf.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insolvency, Cent. Dig. § 38; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

3. Prohibition (§ 10*)—Grounds—Insolvency Proceedings—Petition for Adjudication—Authority of Persons to Sign.

Assuming that any one other than the insolvent may question before adjudication the authority of persons to sign the petition for adjudication, or that such petition has been altered after the signatures were attached, such authority or the change in the petition are questions of fact for the superior court to determine, and its ruling thereon cannot be interfered with by prohibition on the ground that it is proceeding without jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. Prohibition (§ 10*)—Amendment to Petition—Questions of Law.

What amendments are permissible amendments of fact in such case in order to confer jurisdiction and the effect which should be given amendments to the petition remain questions of law cognizable on prohibition after the trial court has determined the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

5. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—GROUNDS—ADEQUATE REMEDY BY APPEAL.

The statute providing an adequate remedy by appeal if a proper party to the proceedings is prejudiced by error of the trial court in connection with the judgment of adjudication, prohibition will not lie, as one not a proper party would not be interested in the proceedings, and hence not entitled to prohibition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Prohibition by the Southern Pacific Milling Company against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles. Writ denied.

Grant Jackson and E. W. Squier, for petitioner. E. S. Williams, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner represents: That heretofore, on March 24, 1910, a petition purporting to be signed by four California corporations, together with an individual, all claiming to be creditors of a contracting company each in an amount exceeding $500 on account of debts contracted within this state, and alleging acts of insolvency as defined by the insolvent laws of this state, was verified by each person so signing in behalf of the respective corporations to the effect that the person so signing was an officer or agent of the petitioning corporation, and that the facts stated therein were true. This petition so verified was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county, bearing number 73,780. That in said action and proceeding the contracting company appeared and filed its demurrer, which being sustained, leave was given to amend. That an amended petition was filed sufficient in form and substance, to which the contracting company duly filed its answer. That when the original petition was filed a bond as required by the statute was also filed, and subsequently when the amended petition was filed it was accompanied by another bond. That, when the amended petition was filed, a second order to appear and show cause was issued. It is not made to appear that the issues presented by the answer of the contracting company have ever been tried. Petitioner herein, pending the hearing upon the issues presented by the answer of the alleged insolvent, asserting that as an attaching creditor it had acquired a lien upon the property of the alleged insolvent within 30 days preceding the filing of the original petition, but more than 30 days preceding the filing of the amended petition, by leave of court moved to dismiss the original petition and proceedings connected therewith upon the grounds that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, because of defects in the petition and bonds, and that the corporate names to the same were signed without authority of the corporations affected thereby. Upon the hearing of said motion, petitioner herein and the moving party tendered proof not only of want of authority, but of interlineations and corrections in the petition for adjudication made therein after the signing and before the filing thereof. The court below refused to admit such evidence and denied the motion to dismiss. Petitioner now comes, and by this proceeding seeks to prohibit the superior court from making any order of adjudication of insolvency based upon or connected with the original cause filed in 73,891. The insolvency law confers jurisdiction upon the superior court to adjudicate one an insolvent when five or more resident creditors whose claims aggregate $500 or more petition the court therefor. This petition must be verified by at least three petitioning creditors, and must set forth certain requisite facts. The petition may be amended and corrected so that the same shall conform to the facts, and such amendments relate back to, and as embraced in, the original petition, and the filing of a petition by or against the debtor upon which, or an amendment of which, an order of adjudication of insolvency may be made, shall be deemed to be the commencement of proceedings in insolvency. An appeal is authorized from the order granting or refusing an adjudication of insolvency. While it is true that a petition in conformity with the statute is essential in conferring jurisdiction upon the superior court in cases of this character, yet, under the statute as now existing, such jurisdiction may be conferred by amendments to a defective petition which by relation are taken as embraced in the original, such amendments, however, being confined to the facts stated in the petition, which presupposes, of course, that a petition signed by authority of the requisite number of creditors properly verified has been filed.

The insolvent law is silent as to the character or class of officers authorized to affix the corporate name. When so silent, the same may be signed or verified by any one of its officers or agents in its behalf. Old Settlers' Investment Co. v. White, 110 Pac. 922. Reading the original petition and its verification together, we find that four of the corporate signatures were affixed by officers or agents of such corporations. As to the signature of the fifth creditor, an individual, no question is raised. Assuming for the purpose of this decision, without so deciding, that any one other than the insolvent may question, before adjudication, the authority of the parties to sign the petition for adjudication, or that such petition has been altered or changed after the signatures thereto were attached, the matter of such authority or the change in the petition still remain questions of fact for the superior court to hear and determine. Upon their face the petition and verification were sufficient in form and substance. What amendments are comprehended within the term amendment of facts, and the effect which should be given amendments to the petition, remains a question of law after the trial court has determined the facts. In the event that a proper party to the proceedings is prejudiced by error of the trial court in connection with the judgment of adjudication an adequate remedy is provided by an appeal. Prohibition will not lie when such adequate remedy exists. Cross v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. App. 342, 83 Pac. 816, and cases cited. If, upon the other hand, petitioner is not a proper party who may so appeal, it must follow that he is not interested in the proceeding, and cannot be heard in an application to arrest the order of court in a case to which he is a stranger.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Viewing the case in any light, we are satisfied that the writ should be denied, and it is so ordered.

---

14 Cal. App. 280

PEOPLE v. AH HIM et al. (Cr. 280.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. FISH (§ 15*) — CRIMINAL PROSECUTION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for using Chinese shrimp or bag nets for the purpose of catching fish, evidence held to justify a finding that defendant used a net for the purpose of catching fish as well as shrimps.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fish, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 674*) — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—RULINGS—EXCLUSION.

Where, in a prosecution for using Chinese shrimp nets to catch fish, it appeared that, when accused was asked by his counsel as to where he was fishing on the day of the alleged offense, the court stated that it did not intend to prevent any traverse of the people's testimony as to where the alleged act was committed, and afterwards overruled an objection to a similar question with the statement that the evidence was in traverse of the state's testimony, and the court would allow the defense to cover the point, the court did not sustain the objection to the first question asked, though it was not answered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 674.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for using Chinese shrimp or bag nets to catch fish, in violation of statute, samples of the fish caught by accused on the day alleged and taken from his boat by the officers were properly admitted in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 872–877; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Ah Him and others were convicted of catching fish in violation of statute, and, from judgments of conviction and orders denying motions for new trials, they appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. R. Twamley, for appellants. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Fred L. Berry, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HALL, J. The defendants were convicted of using Chinese shrimp or bag nets for the purpose of catching fish in the waters of the state of California in violation of section 636 of the Penal Code. They have appealed to this court from the several judgments and orders denying their motions for new trials.

The principal point urged for a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, in this, that it shows that they were fishing for shrimp and not for fish.

They were certainly using Chinese shrimp or bag nets, and the evidence clearly shows that upon the day upon which the charge is laid they in fact caught in their bag nets both shrimps and fish. In fact, the evidence shows that they caught and kept more fish than shrimps. The fish were all food fish of different varieties, and for the greater part very small. The fish as well as the shrimps (about four tons) were taken from their nets, placed in their boat, and were being taken by defendants to the shore when they were overhauled by the officers. One of the officers on the day in question visited the camp of defendants at Hunter's Point and found there freshly caught fish as well as shrimps in process of drying. From these facts the jury were justified in believing that defendants used the nets for the purpose of catching fish as well as shrimps. If they were using Chinese shrimp nets for the purpose of catching fish, they were guilty under the statute, though they were using the same nets for catching shrimps also. It was under the evidence peculiarly the province of the jury to determine the purpose with which defendants used the nets. The evidence is sufficient to support the verdict.

Appellants also contend that the court erred in sustaining an objection to the question asked by defendant's counsel of one of the defendants as follows: "Would you just state to the jury how far from Hunter's Point you were fishing on the 8th day of April of this year?" But an examination of the record discloses that the court did not sustain the objection. The court did make some observations as to the effect of section 781 of the Penal Code, but also stated that the court did not intend to prevent any traverse of the testimony for the people as to where the alleged act was committed. The question was, however, not answered, but that the court never ruled or intended to rule that such question should not be answered is made perfectly clear by its ruling on a similar question later put to the same witness, "How far from the Alameda county line were you fishing on the 8th day of April of this year?" The district attorney objected to the question, but the court overruled the objection, and in doing so stated that the evidence was in traverse of the testimony of the prosecution, and that the court would allow the defense to cover the point.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The only other point relied on is that the court allowed samples of fish taken from defendants' boat by the officers on the day in question to be introduced as evidence. These were a part of the fish caught by defendants in the shrimp nets, and their introduction was clearly proper.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

14 Cal. App. 256

BUDD v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 884.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 19, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1094*)—Findings of Court—Conclusiveness—Rulings of Intermediate Court.

The ruling of the superior court, based on the conflicting affidavits of the parties on a motion to dismiss an appeal from the magistrate's court, is not reviewable on appeal so far as the facts are concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4322; Dec. Dig. § 1094.*]

2. Undertakings (§ 1*)—Surety—Justification—Waiver.

The justification of sureties on undertakings may be waived by the failure of the excepting party to appear at the time set therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Undertakings, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. Prohibition (§ 20*)—Petition.

Plaintiff in a justice's court, having unsuccessfully moved to dismiss the appeal to the superior court for want of due justification of the surety on the appeal bond, applied to the District Court of Appeal for a writ of prohibition. His petition stated that on a specified date the surety appeared before the justice to qualify on the undertaking on appeal seven days after service of plaintiff's notice of exception. In his brief it was stated that the justification of the surety occurred, according to the record, on the same specified date, seven days after the acceptance of service by the attorney for the defendant. Held, that these statements warranted the assumption that the justification on the date mentioned was regular and on due notice, and, if made in time, was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 69; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

4. Justices of the Peace (§ 159*)—Sureties on Appeal Bond—Filing of Notice of Objection—Necessity for.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 978a, providing that the respondent in an appeal from a magistrate may except to the sufficiency of the sureties on the appeal bond within five days after the filing of the bond, and that the appeal shall be of no avail if the sureties do not justify within five days thereafter, the exception is not complete till filed, so where a surety justified seven days after notice of exception, but within five days from the filing thereof with the justice, it was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 555; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

5. Justices of the Peace (§ 164*)—Appeal—Return—Time to Make.

Since by Code Civ. Proc. § 978a, the justification of a surety on a bond on appeal from a justice's court must be before the justice, section 977, requiring the justice to transmit all papers to the superior court within five days after the perfecting of the appeal, should be construed to require the justice to hold the papers for five days more, if necessary to allow justification of sureties on an appeal bond, where the surety is excepted to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 620; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

Petition by Harold Budd against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for a writ of prohibition. Writ denied.

Willis S. Mitchell, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. By this proceeding it is sought to have a writ issued prohibiting the superior court from taking further action in a certain cause entitled Harold Budd, Plaintiff, v. M. F. Schmitt, Defendant, other than to dismiss the appeal taken by the defendant to said superior court from a judgment entered in the justice's court of Los Angeles township.

Petitioner was awarded a judgment against Schmitt in the justice's court in April, 1910. Schmitt in due time gave notice of appeal and filed the necessary undertaking which was furnished by a surety company. On May 16, 1910, petitioner served on the attorneys for Schmitt a notice, excepting to the sufficiency of the surety company as surety on the undertaking on appeal. This notice of the exception was not filed with the justice until May 18, 1910. On May 17th, however, counsel for Schmitt gave notice to the attorney for Budd that the surety would justify on May 18, 1910, at 9:30 o'clock a. m. before the justice. At the time the last-mentioned notice was served, Budd's counsel announced that he would not accept service thereof and would not be present in court on the following day. When the case reached the superior court, a motion was made to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the surety on the undertaking on appeal had not justified within five days after service of the notice of exception to its sufficiency. At the hearing on this motion affidavits were submitted and the court made an order denying the motion. There was a conflict of evidence on the point as to whether or not the surety on the undertaking on appeal had appeared in the justice's court to justify on May 18th; but it appears reasonably certain from the affidavits that Budd made no appearance on that day in the justice's court for the purpose of examining the surety. It was for the judge of the superior court to determine, on the hearing of the motion to dismiss the appeal, whether there had been a justification by the surety, or, if not, whether such justification had been waived. In so far as that determination depended upon a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the conflicting evidence presented by the affidavits, the finding of the court cannot, of course, be reviewed. Bank of Escondido v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 47, 39 Pac. 211; Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8. The justification of sureties on undertakings may be waived by the failure of the party excepting to appear at the time set for the justification. From the opinion in the case of Bank of Escondido v. Superior Court, supra, we quote: "The justification, then, is a right accorded to the adverse party which he may either waive expressly, or be debarred from asserting under well-settled rules of estoppel. * * * But while the waiver may be express, as in Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 53, it may also arise through laches. The rule here is thus laid down: 'In case of nonappearance on the part of the exceptant, the party giving the undertaking may either rest on the default as a waiver of the exception, or he may produce his sureties and take a formal approval.' 1 Abbott's New Practice, 485." Therefore, if the superior court found from the evidence before it that there had been a failure of Budd to appear at the time fixed for justification, and that the surety did appear, the order denying the motion to dismiss the appeal was properly made.

But in addition to the justification noticed to be had on May 18, 1910, it seems that there was an appearance on May 23d, by the surety before the justice for the purpose of justifying. Just how it came about, and upon what form of notice this second appearance by the surety was made is left, by the record and proof submitted here, to conjecture. A justification on May 23d would have been seven days after service of the notice of exception to the sufficiency of the surety, but within five days after that notice had been filed with the justice. Petitioner seems to admit that there was a complete justification on the 23d day of May, for in his petition he alleges "that thereafter, to wit, on the 23d day of May, 1910, said sureties appeared before Hon. R. A. Ling, justice of the peace, to qualify on said undertaking on appeal, and seven days after the service of the notice by plaintiff of his objection and exception to the sufficiency of the surety on the said undertaking on appeal." In petitioner's brief on the same subject he further states: "The justification of the sureties occurred, according to the record, on May 23, 1910, or seven days after the acceptance of service by the attorneys for the defendant." These statements of the petitioner and his counsel warrant the assumption that the justification made on May 23d was regular, and had under proper notice, and if made in time that it was sufficient.

The question then presented is one with which the decisions of our own state have not directly dealt. In all of our statutes referring to the taking of exception to sufficiency of sureties on undertakings on appeal, it is nowhere declared how that exception shall be taken. Section 978a, Code Civ. Proc., contains the provision as to exceptions taken to undertakings on appeal from justices' courts. It reads: "The adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking and unless they or other sureties justify before the justice or (police) judge within five days thereafter, upon notice to the adverse party, * * * the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given." Construing the several provisions of the Code relating to justices' courts and the practice therein together, we are of the opinion that a party excepting to the sufficiency of sureties on an undertaking on appeal must file his notice of exception with the justice, and that no such exception will be deemed to be complete until such notice is filed. It will be observed that under the provisions of section 977, Code Civ. Proc., the justice or (police) judge is required within five days after the perfecting of an appeal, to transmit all papers to the superior court, including the undertaking on appeal. When these papers have once been properly filed in the superior court, the justice has no power to recall them for any purpose; neither would the superior court possess authority in such a case to cause the papers to be returned to the justice. Where justification of sureties on the undertaking on appeal is had, it must be had before the justice, for section 978a so requires. An exception to the sufficiency of the sureties might, perchance, be taken on the fifth day after the appeal had been perfected. The adverse party then would have five days within which to cause his sureties to justify. It would be the justice's duty to send the papers to the superior court on the sixth day, unless the notice excepting to the sufficiency of the sureties had been filed with him. Where such a notice is filed, the section should be construed as requiring the justice to hold the papers for a further period of five days to allow justification to be made.

In Idaho the statute relating to the taking of exceptions to sureties on undertakings on appeal is practically identical with our statute. The Supreme Court of that state, in the case of Holcomb v. Reed, 5 Idaho, 60, 46 Pac. 1019, used the following expression: "Under the provisions of section 4842, Rev. St., the adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal. Said section does not in terms require notice of the filing of such exception to be served on appellant or his attorney. But professional courtesy and the better practice require such notice to be served."

Our conclusion is that a notice of exception to the sufficiency of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal from a justice's court, to be effective at all, must be filed with the justice; and that the adverse party is allowed five days after the filing of such notice of exception within which to submit his sureties before the justice for the purpose of having them justify. In this case the justification of the surety, if incomplete on May 18, 1910, was within time when made on May 23d.

The writ is denied.

14 Cal. App. 278

PEOPLE v. ONG GIT. (Cr. 266.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 21, 1910.)

LARCENY (§ 65*)—GRAND LARCENY—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for grand larceny, evidence held insufficient to support a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 160; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Ong Git was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Reversed.

Robert Ferral, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Fred L. Berry, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment finding him guilty of grand larceny and sentencing him to a term of four years in the state prison.

His claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict must be sustained.

The evidence shows that about 10 o'clock on the night of February 15, 1910, at Waverly place in the city and county of San Francisco, some one grabbed from the head of Lee Shin Gin, a Chinese woman, three ornaments which she then had in her hair, of the value of about $80. The thief immediately ran off with the ornaments. She did not pretend to identify the defendant, did not see his face, but said that the size, dress, and general appearance of the thief were about the same as defendant; that the thief was quite tall. At the time the crime was committed Gin Shee, the sister-in-law of the woman, who was robbed, was with her. She did not see the thief's face, and could not identify defendant as the thief. She testified that the person who grabbed the ornaments had on dark clothes and a dark hat, but she could not say how they compared with the clothes of defendant; that the figure of the thief was about medium. The witness Dolan testified that he was on Dupont street at the time, and hearing some one scream he looked and saw a Chinaman turn the corner from Sacramento street into Dupont street, run across Dupont street, turning down Commercial street, where he disappeared from the sight of the witness; that he could not identify the defendant as the man he saw running for the reason that the man was dressed and looked like the ordinary Chinaman; that some two or three minutes after seeing the Chinaman run into Commercial street he saw a police officer, and informed such officer that the Chinaman had run down Commercial street. Larkin, the police officer, testified that Dolan informed him of seeing the Chinaman run, and after some two or three minutes he went down Commercial street, about 10 or half past 10 o'clock p. m., saw a Chinaman standing over an iron trapdoor in front of No. 710 Commercial street; and that he then and there went up to the Chinaman and arrested him, the same being the defendant. The witness, Brady, a police officer, testified that he went on duty near midnight of the evening of the robbery; that a little after midnight he examined the trapdoor at 710 Commercial street, and found the stolen ornaments under the door.

We thus have nothing but the facts that the thief ran down Commercial street; that defendant was arrested two or three minutes afterwards in front of 710 Commercial street; and that the ornaments were found some two hours afterwards under the trapdoor where defendant was standing when arrested. The stolen property was not found upon defendant; he was not seen hiding it or touching it. No one identified him as the thief. He made no admission or statement. The facts that he was standing near the trapdoor when arrested, and that the property was found some two hours afterwards under the trapdoor, are circumstances and might very well be considered as material circumstances if supported by other facts tending to identify the defendant and connecting him with the commission of the crime. But the evidence is entirely consistent with defendant's innocence. Some one else may have placed the property there after defendant was arrested. Defendant may have walked there and stopped after the real thief had passed on. It may have been placed there after his arrest in order to create suspicion against him by the real thief who took it. In fact, it hardly seems that a person of ordinary intelligence would have, after having committed a robbery, and after having run two blocks, hid the property under a trapdoor and then stood over the door until the police officer came up and arrested him. It seems that no person of ordinary intelligence could say from the evidence in this case that he is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty.

The evidence as matter of law is not sufficient to support the verdict, and the judgment is reversed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

14 Cal. App. 250

PEOPLE ex rel. MERRILL v. NELLIS et al., Supervisors. (Civ. 886.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 120*)—PURCHASES—BIDS.

The supervisors of a county advertised for bids for the furnishing of the hall of records, the call requiring bidders to furnish their own plans after consultation with the officials to use the furniture, to submit samples, and to indemnify against infringement of patents. The accepted bid was many thousand dollars above that rejected for the same articles. Held, that the board being entitled to purchase furnishings for public buildings, not part of the structure, in the open market, the call for bids, obviously showing on its face an intent so to purchase, did not impose on the board the same obligations as where the purchase was under sealed bids.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 191; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

2. COUNTIES (§ 196*)—COUNTY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—PURCHASES—FRAUD—RELIEF.

Where the acceptance by a county board of supervisors of the higher of two bids for the furnishings of a building is tainted with fraud or favoritism, relief by injunction against use of public money may be had, but, in the absence of such fraud, the discretion of the board in making the purchase will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

3. PROHIBITION (§ 6*)—ACTS OF PUBLIC OFFICERS—DISCRETION.

The act of a public board in the exercise of its discretion given it by law is not reviewable on a petition for a writ of prohibition, in the absence of a showing that it has been abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 31-33; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

Action by the People of the state of California, on the relation of Leonard Merrill, against C. J. Nellis and others. On petition for a writ of prohibition. Writ denied.

Elon G. Galusha, for petitioner. The District Attorney and J. W. McKinley, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an application to this court for an original writ of prohibition restrainng the supervisors of Los Angeles county from entering into a certain contract for the purchase of furnishings for the hall of records. Respondent demurs to the petition.

It is averred that the supervisors advertised for bids; that the same were received; that one bidder offered to supply the needed furnishings for $150,000, while another bid therefor $247,700; that the goods so to be furnished under such respective bids were in quality, texture, and workmanship the same. It is further averred that the notice given soliciting such bids, and the specifications in said notice referred to and made part thereof, were uncertain in their terms, and provided no data upon which intelligent bids could be made; that it was required of the bidders that they furnish their own plans, and in addition give bonds indemnifying the county against all damages for infringement of patents caused by suit or otherwise, all of which it is averred increased the cost of material and furnishings; that when said bids were received the board awarded the contract to the highest bidder.

It is not contended by respondents, nor can it well be, that the advertisement for bids and the plans and specifications made part thereof are such as are contemplated by law when purchases are sought to be made under sealed bids. An examination of such advertisement and specifications, and the character of requirements thereunder, would indicate that the expressed intention to purchase by bid was but a pretense. The language and provisions of the advertisement and plans indicate as the real intention upon the part of the board to purchase in the open market, and in lieu of personal examination by the board at the respective places of business the dealer was required to present samples of materials and workmanship, with prices, after the officials were consulted who were expected to use the furnishings, and these officials were expected to indicate the quantity and arrangement of movable furniture as well as of counters, desks, filing cases, etc. We are not therefore confronted with a question as to the duty of the board after having elected to proceed in a particular way, which election it is claimed precludes them from making purchases in a different way. That the board of supervisors may in their discretion go into the open market and purchase furnishings for a public building where such furnishings form no part of the structure is not disputed. Their authority so to do is determined in Sarver v. County of Los Angeles, 156 Cal. 188, 103 Pac. 917; Riverside v. Yawman-Erbe Mfg. Co., 3 Cal. App. 691, 86 Pac. 900.

The alleged disparity between the bids submitted, if unexplained, were fraud, or favoritism amounting thereto, charged, might be urged in equity as a reason why an injunction would lie to prevent public officers from wasting the funds under their charge. Fraud is not averred, but, on the contrary, counsel for petitioner disclaims any intent to charge the same. In the absence of fraud even a court of equity would not interfere with the discretion given by the statute to the board of supervisors in relation to such purchases. The great difference in the price between the offers of the dealers may be occasioned on account of perfectly legitimate reasons, and such as would warrant the payment of the higher price. Where jurisdiction and authority is given a public board to exercise its discretion, and no facts appear showing an abuse thereof, it is not within the province of courts to review such discretion in a proceeding of this character.

Writ denied.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

158 Cal. 537

O'DOWD v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 5,495.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 28, 1910.)

1. Elections (§ 280*)—Contests—Citation.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1119, relating to election contests, provides that the citation for the person whose right to the office is contested must be served by the sheriff at least five days before the time specified. Section 1121 provides that the court must meet to determine such contested election, and may continue the trial for any time not exceeding 20 days for good cause shown, etc. Held, that service within the five days prior to the hearing is not a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court over the party, and hence the failure of the sheriff to make service did not, where the party appeared specially and moved for the quashing of the citation and the dismissal of the proceedings, preclude the court from continuing the hearing and ordering the issue of another citation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

2. Prohibition (§ 28*) — Matters Reviewable.

The appellate court may not review, under a writ of prohibition, any action of the trial court taken subsequent to the application for the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

In Bank. Petition by Thomas P. O'Dowd for writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and the Honorable F. J. Murasky, Judge. Application denied.

John P. Allen, Marshall B. Woodworth, John J. Gallagher, and Edward Lande, for petitioner. Edwin F. McMurray, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition.

On December 6, 1909, Fred L. Hilmer and others who had been candidates for the office of supervisor of said city and county at a municipal election held November 2, 1909, instituted a contest, contesting the election of petitioner and the other 17 candidates declared elected, on the ground that they did not receive the highest number of votes cast. Thereafter on December 23, 1909, as required by law, the presiding judge of the superior court of said city and county ordered a special session of department 2 of said court to be held on January 3, 1910, for the purpose of hearing and determining said contest. On December 27, 1909, the county clerk of said city and county, as directed by law, issued a citation to the petitioner and the other contestees named in said election contest to be and appear in the said superior court at the time and place named in the order for holding said special session of said court. This citation was delivered to the sheriff of said city and county for service upon petitioner and the others, but the sheriff did not serve said citation upon petitioner either personally or by leaving a copy at the house where he last resided (Code Civ. Proc. § 1119), but left a copy of the citation at the premises adjoining petitioner's place of business on the 28th day of December, 1909. On the 3d day of January, 1910—the day set for the hearing—when the matter of the contest was called in the superior court, the petitioner appearing specially for that purpose, moved to quash the said citation and the attempted service thereof, and for an order dismissing the proceedings against him on the ground that as he had not been served with any citation prior to the day fixed for hearing, as required by law, the court acquired no jurisdiction and thereafter could obtain no jurisdiction to proceed in the matter of the contest as against him; that service of the citation before the day fixed for the hearing was a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court to proceed against him and failure of such service ousted the court of jurisdiction to entertain the contest as far as he was concerned. The court denied the motion and held that it had jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner to proceed with the contest upon his appearance in court, notwithstanding such appearance was specially made.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

After such ruling by the superior court petitioner applied to the District Court of Appeal for a writ prohibiting said court from proceeding further in the matter against petitioner, which writ was granted, said court holding that by the failure of service of the citation upon petitioner prior to the day set for the hearing of the contest, the court lost jurisdiction to proceed to try said contest as far as it involved the right and title of petitioner to said office.

After such decision a further hearing on the matter was ordered before this court.

The provisions relating to election contests are embraced in sections 1111 to 1127 inclusive of the Code of Civil Procedure. They provide that any elector may file a statement contesting the right to an office of any person declared elected within 30 days after the result of an election is declared by the canvassing board (section 1115); that the county clerk within five days after the end of the time for filing such statements must notify the superior court of all statements filed, and that thereupon the superior court shall order a special session of court to be held, not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of such order, for the hearing of said contest, and shall continue in special session until the matter is disposed of. Section 1118.

As to the issuance of a citation to any contestee named in the statement and its service, it is provided that the clerk shall thereupon (on the making of the order of court for a special session) issue a citation for the person whose right to the office is contested, to appear at the time and place specified in the order, which citation must be delivered to the sheriff and served either upon the party in person, or, if he cannot be found, by leaving a copy thereof at the house where he last resided, at least five days before the time so specified. Section 1119.

It is further provided that "the court must meet at the time and place designated, to determine such contested election, and shall have all the powers necessary to the determination thereof. It may adjourn from day to day until such trial is ended and may also continue the trial before its commencement, for any time not exceeding twenty days, for good cause shown shown by either party upon affidavit, at the costs of the party applying for such continuance." Section 1121.

It must be conceded, of course, that neither personal service nor constructive service upon the petitioner was had, and the court had therefore acquired no jurisdiction over his person at the time fixed for the hearing of the contest. It is further plain that the view of the trial court that the personal appearance of the respondent in court, although made specially for the purpose of questioning the jurisdiction, nevertheless was sufficient to confer jurisdiction over him, is not tenable. In this respect the trial court, as disclosed by the answer of respondent, was of the opinion that as the citation required to be issued and served simply directed the petitioner "to appear at the time and place specified in the order," and no default could be taken against him for failure to do so (Keller v. Chapman, 34 Cal. 635), that as no pleading on the part of the person cited was provided for and in the pending contest the only thing to be done was to count the ballots "in the presence of the parties" as directed by section 1118, the presence of the petitioner in court on the day set for the hearing, no matter for what purpose he appeared, was a sufficient appearance to give the court jurisdiction to proceed with the contest against him. We cannot agree with this reasoning. Petitioner could only be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by service of a citation in the manner required by law or by a voluntary general appearance in the proceeding. He had never been served with the citation and his appearance in court on the day set for the hearing of the contest was special and solely for the purpose of questioning the jurisdiction of the court, and he had a right to limit his appearance to that purpose. So that if the provisions of the Code are to be construed to the effect that service upon the petitioner, at least five days before the day fixed for the hearing of the contest, was a jurisdictional limitation on the right of the court to entertain the contest, as far as petitioner is concerned, the view of the District Court of Appeal would be correct and the writ of prohibition was properly issued by it. We are of the opinion, however, that a reasonable construction of the provisions relative to contests of election require the conclusion that mere failure of the sheriff to serve the citation on the party whose office is contested in due form or at all before the day fixed for the hearing did not affect the jurisdiction of the court to further entertain the contest against the petitioner.

It is true that an election contest is purely a statutory creation, and its provisions contemplate a speedy adjustment of the question as to who is legally entitled to an office, but the speedy determination which the Legislature had in view is not to dominate the construction of these provisions so as to defeat altogether the right to have a contested election settled on its merits unless such construction is imperative. A determination on the merits is what the statute mainly has in view. The proceedings are not of an ordinary adversary character such as is maintained between individuals asserting personal rights or interests. The statute does not confer the right of contest upon the assumption that the personal rights of contending individuals to the office is of particular public moment. The right is given to an elector solely (section 1111, Code Civ. Proc.), and involves the right of the people to have the fact as to who had been duly elected by them judicially declared. As said in Minor v. Kidder, 43 Cal. 236: "It is the wholesome purpose of the statute to invite inquiry into the conduct of popular elections. Its aim is to secure that fair expression of the popular will in the selection of public officers, without which we can scarcely hope to maintain the integrity of the political system under which we live. With this view it has provided the means of contesting the claims of persons asserting themselves to have been chosen to office by the people. * * * When such a statement is presented by an elector to the tribunal whose duty it is to investigate its merits, it should not be received in a spirit of captiousness, nor put aside upon mere technical objections designed to defeat the very search after truth which the statute intended to invite. * * * The public interests imperatively require that the ultimate determination of the contest should in every instance, if possible, reach the very right of the case." Also, Sweeny v. Adams, 141 Cal. 562, 75 Pac. 182.

As the obvious purpose of the statute is to have these contests determined on their merits, no construction should be given to any of its provisions which will defeat that end, unless their language imperatively commands it. The construction which petitioner seeks to have given to section 1119 is that the jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner can only be obtained by service of the citation within the time fixed before the day of hearing; that this is the exclusive method by which jurisdiction over the person of petitioner could be obtained; that if such service is not made before the time fixed for the hearing the court is ousted of jurisdiction and is without power thereafter to obtain jurisdiction over petitioner so as to proceed with the pending contest and can only, if there is enough time to do so, call another special session and set another day for hearing under which a new citation may be issued and served. We do not think that there is anything in the statutory provisions governing election contests which requires such a construction, but that, as far as section 1119 in question is concerned, its provisions, instead of being mandatory and a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court, are simply directory, and that under the provisions of section 1121, giving the court power to adjourn the trial before its commencement for good cause shown, the court had power, when it appeared that there had been a failure to serve the citation within the five days required without any fault on the part of the elector inaugurating the contest, to continue the hearing for a period not further than 20 days, and order another citation to issue for service on petitioner.

Several citations are made by petitioner in support of his claim that, under the statute, service on petitioner before the hearing was essential to and a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court to proceed with a hearing of the contest. Carlson v. Burt, 111 Cal. 129, 43 Pac. 583; Freshour v. Howard, 142 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 1101; McCrary on Elections (4th Ed.) § 427; Batman v. Megowan, 58 Ky. 533; Castello v. St. Louis Circuit Court, 28 Mo. 259; Bowen v. Hixon, 45 Mo. 340; Seeley v. Killoran, 53 Minn. 290, 55 N. W. 132. But all these cases involve the question of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the contest itself, and not jurisdiction of the person against whom the contest was directed. Under the statutes of our sister states, whose decisions are referred to, an election contest was not inaugurated by filing a petition or statement and then giving notice, but it was provided that when a contest was contemplated, the party contemplating it should, within a given time, serve notice on the contestee of his intention to contest, or his intention to appeal from the findings of an election commissioner to the courts. The proposed contestants in those cases failed to serve their notice of intention within the time prescribed, and, of course, the court never acquired any jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It was held that the requirement as to time was peremptory and essential in order to vest jurisdiction in the courts to entertain the contest. In those cases the service of the notice of intention to contest within a given time was a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court. It went directly to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the controversy. A similar view was taken by our court (Carlson v. Burt, supra), where the statement was filed after the 40 days within which it was required it should be filed. And in principle this was what was held in Freshour v. Howard, supra. Under our statute, however, the superior court in the election proceeding here under consideration had acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the contest, as the statement of contest was filed within the time, and as the cases immediately referred to involved the question of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter only and not of the person, they are not in point as to the latter proposition.

There is, however, on the other hand, authority to the effect that a provision for the service of a citation by a sheriff, a given number of days before the hearing, is not peremptory but simply directory, and the court has power, where good cause is shown for the failure to make service before the hearing, to continue such hearing so as to permit service to be made within a further given time.

A statute of Indiana (Burns' Ann. St 1908, § 7012) provided that after a contest filed, the auditor should issue notice which must be delivered to the sheriff, who shall serve it five days before the hearing. This provision is similar to that of section 1119 of our Code. In construing this provision of the Indiana statute, the Supreme Court of that state, in Hadley v. Gutridge, 58 Ind. 302, says: "It is very clear to our minds that the eighteenth section, in so far as it prescribes either the time within which, or the mode in which, the service shall be made, is purely directory to the sheriff of the time and manner in which he shall discharge his duties in such cases. It was never intended by this section, as we construe it, that the right of any one to a public office to which he was eligible and had been lawfully elected should be made dependent in any wise upon the good faith, diligence or intelligence of the sheriff of the county, it might be, of a personal or political opponent. The statute points out to the sheriff the time and the manner in which service may be made; but, in our opinion, it will not do to say, in the absence of a positive provision to that effect, that service after the time, or in some other recognized mode, would not be sufficient service."

In Napier v. Cornett (Ky.) 68 S. W. 1076, after the contest was filed the clerk issued a summons which was void because it directed the contestee to answer at a time different from that required by law. The summons was quashed and a new summons was issued by the trial court. The Supreme Court held that the motion of the contestee to dismiss the contest in the trial court on the ground that the court had lost jurisdiction because the last summons was issued after the time for filing the contest had expired, was properly denied, saying: "The court overruled the motion to dismiss the petition and we think properly. The plaintiff was not in fault as to the issuance of the summons. All that was necessary for him to do was to file his petition and ask that summons be issued thereon; and if the summons was in fact invalid the misfeasance of the clerk did not avail to defeat the right which the plaintiff had secured by doing all that was required of him."

There is nothing in our code provisions which expressly declares that a court shall not be vested with jurisdiction to entertain an election contest unless the citation required to be issued shall be served before the day fixed for the hearing; that such service is a jurisdictional limitation on the court.

The matter is not to be tested by the rule which applies to the issuance and service of a summons or other process which is, in a large measure, under the control of the party to a civil action. A summons as process to acquire jurisdiction of a party in an ordinary civil action is within the control of the plaintiff; he may have it issued at any time within a year and have it served by any person he may select and at any time as long as it is served within three years. It is not required to be served by the sheriff. There is no provision of law whereby any relief can be granted for failure to have the summons issued within the year or served within the time limited. The citation provided for in section 1119, both as to its issuance and service, is governed by entirely different provisions from those that apply to a summons. Its service, like the service of summons, is to give the court jurisdiction of the person, but the party inaugurating the contest has no control over it as has the party at whose instance the summons is issued. This lack of control over the citation, of course, would make no difference as far as the want of jurisdiction of the court over the person to be served is concerned if no statutory provision existed which could be construed as authorizing the court to provide for a service, where it had not been had within the time limit prescribed by the law. But we think this want of control over the process by the contesting elector, and the possible failure of the officer specially charged by law to make it, was within the mind of the Legislature when it vested the court with the general power given in section 1121. Under the special election proceeding provided for, when the elector has filed his contest he has done all that the law permits him to do, as far as bringing the contestee into court is concerned. The issuance of the citation and its service are committed by law to the public officers over whose action in respect to either the contestant had nothing to say. This was doubtless in order to procure a speedy determination of the contest by taking the control of the matter of the citation out of the hands of the elector. But in view of the provisions of section 1121 it was not intended, or at least there is no room for construing the section as to service as contemplating, that service within the five days prior to the day fixed for the hearing was a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the court over the party upon whom the sheriff had failed to make proper service. On the contrary, we think that the provision of section 1119 as to service was simply, as held in Hadley v. Gutridge, supra, directory to the sheriff as to the time within which and the method whereby he should make the service; that failure on his part in either of these particulars did not oust the court of jurisdiction to further provide for such service, but only precluded the court from proceeding with the hearing against a contestee until service was made upon him by order of the court and by virtue of the power vested in it to do so under section 1121.

Under section 1121 the court trying the contest is given all the "powers necessary" to a complete determination of the questions presented in the contest with the additional power to continue the hearing thereof before its commencement for good cause shown by either party and for any time not exceeding 20 days. This is a general power, and within it, we think, that where it appears on the day set for the hearing that the service of the citation has been ineffectual to give the court jurisdiction to proceed with it against all the parties required to be served because the sheriff has failed to make proper service upon one of them, the court is vested with power on a proper showing to order a continuance of a hearing and direct the issuance and service of an alias citation to be made upon the one who has not been served, such service to be made within the time designated in section 1119 prior to the adjourned hearing, and within the 20 days to which it is provided such adjournment may be made.

We are the more constrained to this view because there is nothing in any of the provisions pertaining to election contests which declares that service within five days prior to the date fixed for hearing is a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court, and, because further, such construction tends to effect the purpose of the law that these cases, particularly on account of the public interest involved, should be tried upon their merits. Under this view no delay is occasioned except for some period within the 20 days to which the court is expressly empowered to adjourn before proceeding with the hearing, and the conclusion reached is what must have been the fair purpose of the Legislature, namely, to empower the court under section 1121, when an elector has done all that the law required him to do, to protect him from having his contest dismissed without any neglect or fault on his part.

It was stated on the argument that the court on the day fixed for the hearing of the contest made no order of continuance nor did it direct the issuance of an alias citation, or take any other measures for the service of a further citation on petitioner. Likewise it is claimed that when the writ of prohibition was ordered issued out of the District Court of Appeal and before the bringing of the matter to this court for further hearing, the superior court before which the contest was pending dismissed such proceeding as to petitioner.

We have nothing to do with these matters, assuming that they occurred. There is nothing in the election contest provision which requires the court, where the sheriff has failed to make service before the day fixed for the hearing, to order an alias summons to issue for service on that date. Nor can we review under this writ any action of the trial court taken subsequent to the application for it.

Within the view we have expressed, as it appears that when the petition for this writ was applied for the superior court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the contest, and jurisdiction, notwithstanding the failure of service of the citation upon the petition by sheriff, to order an alias citation to be issued and served, this application for a writ is necessarily denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 249

UNITED STATES PROTECTIVE ASS'N v. BOARD OF POLICE COM'RS et al.

(Civ. 745.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 13, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1910.)

MANDAMUS (§ 87*)—PURPOSES OF RELIEF—EXERCISE OF OFFICIAL DUTY.

The writ of mandate issuing only where it is the duty of an inferior board by reason of its office to do some act, it will not issue to compel a board of police commissioners to issue permits to certain persons to carry weapons, where the statute under which the right is claimed makes the issuance of such permit discretionary with the commissioners, and nothing else appears to show that it was their duty to issue the permit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 189–194; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco.

Application by the United States Protective Association for a writ of mandate against the Board of Police Commissioners and others. From a judgment denying the writ, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Schilling, for appellant. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Jesse H. Steinhart, Asst. City Atty., for respondents

COOPER, J. This being an application for a writ of mandate to compel the board of police commissioners to issue permits to certain persons described in the petition to carry weapons, and the statute to which our attention is called making it entirely discretionary with the board of police commissioners, and there being nothing to show that it was the duty of such board of police commissioners to issue such permit, and the writ of mandate being a prerogative writ, which issues only in cases where it is made the duty of any inferior tribunal, board, or person, by reason of their office, to do some act, and there being no such duty imposed upon this board, the judgment is affirmed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

---

14 Cal. App. 285

GONDOUIN v. GONDOUIN. (Civ. 740.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 26, 1910.)

1. MARRIAGE (§ 58*)—ANNULMENT—PREGNANCY AT TIME OF MARRIAGE.

A man who marries a woman believing her to be virtuous may sue to annul the marriage on finding that she was pregnant by another man at the time of the marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 119; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. MARRIAGE (§ 58*)—ANNULMENT—GROUNDS.

A man who has been having illicit intercourse with a woman prior to his marriage with her cannot have the marriage annulled on the ground that it was brought about by the woman falsely representing that she was pregnant by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 122; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action to annul the marriage by A. L. Gondouin against Gertrude Gondouin. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Ferrari, for appellant. Marc Anthony, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. Action to annul a marriage on the ground of fraud. The fraud alleged and relied upon is that defendant falsely stated to plaintiff that she was pregnant by him, and that plaintiff, believing and relying upon such false representation, was induced to and did marry the defendant.

The facts appearing of record, and upon which we must presume the judgment is based, are substantially as follows: Plaintiff met defendant, who was then a young woman, in the year 1904 at the home of a mutual friend. The result of the meeting was that plaintiff became very devoted to defendant, and so marked in his attentions that he spent several evenings of each week in her company and at her home. He took her for walks and to the theater on many occasions. During a period of time while he was absent in Portland, Or., he wrote to her as often as three times a week. Finally in February, 1906, under promise of marriage, plaintiff succeeded in having sexual intercourse with the defendant. This sexual intercourse continued from time to time as occasion and opportunity offered until August, 1906, when defendant went to Oakland and stayed all night with plaintiff in a room in a public hotel. As the result of the night with plaintiff defendant became ill, and on the following evening plaintiff went to see her at her home in San Francisco, and it was then that defendant first informed the plaintiff that she had been to consult a physician, and that the physician thought that she was pregnant. Defendant further told plaintiff that she believed the doctor and that she was pregnant. Plaintiff again told defendant that he would marry her, and after having intercourse with her left, promising to send her some pills or medicine to procure a miscarriage. He continued to have sexual intercourse with her two or three times a week, but seems to have made no further effort to find out as to whether or not she was pregnant, or to have her examined by a physician. In October, 1906, defendant again told the plaintiff that she was pregnant. About the 19th of the same month plaintiff procured a marriage license, which he showed to defendant, telling her that he was going to marry her, and again had sexual intercourse with her. Finally on November 22, 1906, plaintiff took defendant to a Catholic church—as both parties were Catholics—where the marriage ceremony was performed by the priest in charge. The parties did not openly assume the relations of husband and wife after the marriage for the reason that the plaintiff requested that the marriage be kept secret for a time. Plaintiff, however, continued to visit the defendant and to have sexual intercourse with her at every meeting as had been his habit before the marriage. This continued until the early part of January, 1907, when he ceased his visits, and commenced this suit to annul the marriage.

Plaintiff's contention is that having done all these things under promise of marriage, having continued in his immoral conduct with the defendant until finally told by her that she was pregnant he married her because of such statement, and that he can now come into a court of justice and have a decree of court freeing him from the marriage vows.

We cannot for a moment sanction such claim. It would be a blot upon a court of justice if in the face of plaintiff's conduct it would lend its aid to free him from his marriage, even if it was finally brought about as the result of defendant's statement that she was pregnant. Whether she was in such condition or not was at most a matter of conjecture; and plaintiff might well believe that by reason of his own immoral conduct he had brought about such condition. The fact that he waited for a long time before getting the marriage license, and then delayed the marriage for more than a month before having the ceremony performed, shows that he did not act hastily. He may have concluded in the meantime that the pills he had furnished defendant had had their effect. He did not discover his wrongs until the early part of January, 1907. By his marriage to defendant plaintiff took her for better or for worse. He assumed all liabilities as to her condition, and, if he believed she was pregnant, he believed it not only from her statements, but from his knowledge of his own guilty conduct.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Where a man believes a woman to be virtuous, and where he has had no improper relations with her himself, and after marriage to her under such circumstances he discovers that at the time of the marriage she was pregnant by a stranger, the court will uphold an action to annul the marriage, and this for the reason that one of the very objects and considerations of marriage is children. The husband has the right to have no children except his own, born under his roof, by the wife whom he has promised to love and cherish. To compel him to live with a wife after she had brought forth a bastard, begotten before marriage by a stranger, and then to care for and support such bastard, would shock the moral sense of every right-minded person. But, while such is the law, it is equally well settled that a man who has been having illicit intercourse with the woman prior to the marriage cannot have the marriage annulled on the ground that it was brought about by the woman falsely representing that she was pregnant. 2 Nelson on Divorce and Separation, § 610; Bishop on Marriage, Divorce and Separation, § 503; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 30 Pa. 417; Todd v. Todd, 149 Pa. 60, 24 Atl. 128, 17 L. R. A. 320; Fairchild v. Fairchild, 43 N. J. Eq. 473, 11 Atl. 426; Tait v. Tait, 3 Misc. Rep. 218, 23 N. Y. Supp. 597; Franke v. Franke (Cal.) 31 Pac. 571, 18 L. R. A. 375.

Counsel for appellant relies upon the case of Di Lorenzo v. Di Lorenzo, 174 N. Y. 467, 67 N. E. 63, 63 L. R. A. 92, 95 Am. St. Rep. 609. It is not necessary for us to sanction or disapprove the doctrine laid down in that case, but it is sufficient to say that the facts are very different from the case at bar. In that case the plaintiff, after having had sexual intercourse with the defendant, was absent from the state for a period of time after such intercourse. Upon his return the defendant stated to him that the result of such intercourse was that she had become pregnant, and given birth to a male child of which he was the father, at the same time exhibiting the child to him, and stating to him that the child was the result of such intercourse; and he, believing her, and believing the child to be his, married her. The statement made by the woman was not only false as to the child being his, but the fact was that she had never given birth to a child, and it was the child of another woman that she had exhibited to him. It is at once apparent that this is quite different from a statement as to a condition or belief that the defendant was pregnant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

14 Cal. App. 309

SNOWDEN v. DERRICK et al. (Civ. 772.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 30, 1910.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 341*)—Default of Vendor—Acts of Purchaser.

A purchaser in a contract for sale of real estate, where there is no valid objection to the title, cannot, in an action by him to recover the price paid, put the vendor in default without alleging that he is ready, willing, and able to pay the amount agreed on, and that he has offered to pay the price and has demanded a deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 1011; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

2. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 341*)—Default of Vendor—Acts of Purchaser.

Where a contract for sale of real estate provided for the return of the deposit made by the purchaser as part payment of the price if the title proved defective and could not be perfected within a reasonable time, and defects in the title, on objection thereto by the purchaser, were not removed within a reasonable time, the purchaser, suing for the deposit, need not allege that he was ready, willing, and able to pay the price, and had offered to do so, and had demanded a deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 1011; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

3. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 138*)—Title of Vendor—Rights of Purchaser.

A purchaser in a written contract for sale of real estate, which stipulates for a good title subject to an outstanding lease, but without excepting easements on the land in favor of a third person, may insist on a good title freed from the easements, though he had knowledge of their existence at the time of making the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 261; Dec. Dig. § 138;* Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 276.]

4. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 144*)—Tender of Performance by Vendor—Defects in Title.

A vendor offering in writing to convey a good title, while expressly admitting an incumbrance thereon, consisting of a judgment lien, and demanding payment of the price according to the contract, does not thereby obviate the defect in the title, nor place the purchaser refusing to pay the price in default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 271, 272; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

5. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 129*)—Title of Vendor.

A purchaser in a contract for sale of real estate which provides for a good title may demand a title free from litigation, palpable defects, or grave doubts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 238–244; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by F. E. Snowden against George H. Derrick and another. From a judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Langan & Mendenhall, for appellants. W. B. Rinehart, for respondent.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

COOPER, P. J. This appeal is from the judgment given in favor of plaintiff and against defendants on the pleadings.

The action was brought to recover $1,500 paid by plaintiff to defendants as a deposit and as part payment for the purchase price of real estate. It is alleged in the complaint that on the 16th day of February, 1907, an agreement or writing was entered into, by the terms of which the defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiff a tract of land containing 125 acres therein described, for the sum of $62,500, of which sum $1,500 was to be and was paid at the time when the contract was signed, and the balance was thereafter to be paid in certain installments as therein provided. The contract provided: "In the event that the title to the said lands and premises prove defective and cannot be perfected within a reasonable time, we agree to return and pay back to the said F. E. Snowden on demand said payment of $1,500 this day paid to us."

The complaint further alleges that the plaintiff had the title to said property examined, and found the title defective and imperfect in certain particulars as follows:

"(1) Two certain rights of way evidenced by instruments in writing duly acknowledged and recorded respectively in Liber 572 of Deeds, p. 250, and Liber 597 of Deeds, p. 176, in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county, to the county of Alameda for sewerage and other purposes, which said rights of way are and were in the nature of perpetual easements granted to the said county of Alameda by former owners and holders of the fee-simple title to said land, covering a strip of land twenty-two (22) feet in width along the entire western boundary line thereof, and lying next and adjacent to the land of J. P. Marlin and Rene de Tocqueville.

"(2) The right of Arthur C. Shiman to disaffirm or rescind within a reasonable time the conveyance of 31½ acres of the western portion of said premises by reason of his not being of age at the time of the execution of a certain deed from himself to William J. Shiman, covering said 31½ acres of said premises, and recorded in Liber 1015 of Deeds at page 333 in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county.

"(3) A judgment of the superior court of the county of Alameda, state of California, duly given, made, rendered and entered on the 31st day of January, 1907, in favor of Anna J. Gilson against the said defendant, George H. Derrick, for the sum of thirty-one hundred ninety-five and $^{76}/_{100}$ dollars ($3,195.76) and costs of suit, being case number 23,275 in said superior court, and the said judgment being of record in volume 59 of Judgments, p. 302, remaining unsatisfied."

That on the 18th day of April, 1907, plaintiff informed defendants in writing of the said defects, but that defendants did not remove or cause the said defects to be removed within a reasonable time or at all, and that a reasonable time had elapsed before the 13th day of March, 1908, the day the complaint was filed.

The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. The facts stated in the complaint show that plaintiff had done all that was required of him, and by his objections to the title had placed upon the defendants the burden of removing or correcting said objections. By the express terms of the agreement the $1,500 was to be returned to plaintiff if the title should prove defective, and the defects could not be cured within a reasonable time. It is alleged that said defects had not been cured, and that a reasonable time had elapsed.

It is not like the case of an ordinary contract to convey where there is no valid objection to the title. In such case, the contract being mutual, the vendee cannot put the vendor in default without alleging that he is ready and willing and able to pay the amount agreed to be paid, and that he offered to pay the purchase price and demanded a deed. Here the plaintiff demanded and requested that the defendants' title be cured. Defendants did not cure it, or offer to convey to plaintiff a good title. Plaintiff was not required to again go to the defendants and say in effect: "Although I have pointed out certain defects in your title, and although you have not corrected them and you have had a reasonable time to do so, I now offer to pay the balance of the purchase money upon your giving me a good title." If the title was defective, and the defendants could not and did not obviate the defects within a reasonable time, the plaintiff was entitled to the return of the $1,500 as provided in the contract. The complaint shows such a state of facts, and clearly put the burden upon the defendants to show a legal reason why the plaintiff is not entitled to the return of his deposit.

The amended answer of defendants attempted to do this, and, as judgment was given upon the pleadings, we must examine the answer in order to determine the question of its sufficiency, or as to whether or not it states facts which show that plaintiff is not entitled to a return of his deposit.

As to the first defect, the answer admits that the two easements therein described existed as pointed out, but alleges that the plaintiff, when he paid the $1,500 and took the contract, knew of the existence of said easements, and accepted the said contract and paid the deposit with full knowledge of the said easements, and that the contract refers to said easements in such way as to now preclude the plaintiff from claiming that they are an incumbrance on the title. As to the knowledge of plaintiff, or as to matters that must necessarily rest in parol, we cannot hold that such evidence would be admissible to vary the terms of the contract. The written agreement was that defendants would give a good title to the property, and the only exception is that the property is to be taken subject to an outstanding lease to one Coelho. There is at the end of the contract the clause: "Howell and Derrick have privilege to make two 6" sewer connections to sewer." This clause of itself does not show that the county of Alameda was the owner of any rights of way 22 feet in width for sewerage and for other purposes. This is perfectly consistent with the idea that there was no perpetual easement outstanding in a third party for sewers, and is consistent with the theory that the sewer was the property of the owners of the land. In any event, no easements or rights of way are excepted by the terms of the writing, and we deem it the best policy to hold parties to the terms of their agreements as expressed therein. To allow parol evidence as to easements or other defects, for the purpose of showing that the vendee took the contract with notice of them, would be a very dangerous rule. It would make the question as to whether or not the title tendered was good and sufficient depend upon the oral testimony that the parties might be able to procure. It was said in discussing a similar question in Koshland v. Spring, 116 Cal. 689, 48 Pac. 58: "Appellants further maintain that, even allowing the dedication of all the streets laid out on the map, yet respondents had notice of the fact and contracted to buy subject to that easement. This is asserted on the evidence that in the course of the negotiation Koshland, one of the purchasers, was shown copies of the map, knew that a townsite had been laid out on the tract by the Decoto Land Company, and that 'there was a piece of land called Decoto—it was the town of Decoto that was to be sold.' Since defendants were in express terms obligated to make good title as a condition of the sale, we do not concede that actual knowledge by the purchasers of dedication to public use of the extensive street surface exhibited on the map—the tract being mainly or largely agricultural and to be sold as acreage—could be deemed, while the contract remained executory, to imply a waiver of substantial fulfillment of the condition for title."

Defendants admit the defect pointed out in the third specification, and that the judgment therein described is still a lien upon the property, but seek to obviate it by urging "that on or about the 23d day of April, 1907, the defendants in good faith offered the plaintiff in writing to convey to the plaintiff all said real property free of all incumbrances, and demanded payment of the remainder of the purchase price according to the terms of said contract. And the plaintiff then refused to accept said offer, and refused and still does refuse to pay the balance of the purchase price of said premises or any part thereof, according to the terms of the said contract or otherwise; that on the 23d day of April, 1907, when said offer was made, the defendants were, ever since have been, and now are able, willing and anxious to comply with said offer, although on the 23d day of April, 1907, when said offer was made, said judgment had not been paid nor satisfied of record." There is no allegation or statement that said judgment has ever been satisfied or the land relieved from the lien thereof. It does not appear in what manner the defendants could place plaintiff in default by offering in writing to convey a good title free from all incumbrances when they expressly admit the defects pointed out.

The offer was nothing more than the agreement they made in the first place. If they had in fact perfected the title, paid off the judgment, and relieved the property of the easements within a reasonable time, and then gave the plaintiff notice thereof, the question would be quite different; but such is not the case. The defects still existed. The plaintiff had the right, as has been said by the Supreme Court, to a title free from litigation, palpable defects, or grave doubts. It does not appear that he has been able to get such title, or that any such title is now tendered him, or was tendered him at the time the answer was filed and the issues made up.

We conclude that the court was correct in granting judgment in favor of plaintiff upon the pleadings, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

14 Cal. App. 307

CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE v. LEALE et al. (Civ. 843.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 28, 1910.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 123*) — COMMENCEMENT OF ACTIONS—FILING OF DEFECTIVE COMPLAINT—EFFECT.

The filing of a complaint defective only in that it is neither signed by plaintiff nor his attorney tolls the running of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 539; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 271*) — COMPLAINT—AMENDMENT.

A complaint not signed by plaintiff or his attorney, as required by law, is not void, but the omission may be cured by amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 819; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

3. COURTS (§ 91*)—CONTROLLING DECISIONS.

A decision of the Supreme Court not reversed or modified must be followed by the Court of Appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 325, 326; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the Canadian Bank of Commerce against W. G. Leale and another.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Leon Samuels, for appellants. Olney, Pringle & Mannon, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against defendants, and comes to this court upon a bill of exceptions.

The action was brought to recover the sum of $6,000 and interest, as due and unpaid on a promissory note executed by defendants to plaintiff. The original complaint was filed on March 9, 1908, which it is conceded was the last day upon which an action could have been brought upon the note without being subject to the bar of the statute of limitations. The original complaint was neither subscribed by plaintiff nor by its attorney when filed, but subsequently, to wit, on March 26, 1908, after service of summons, but before any appearance by defendants, upon permission granted by the court, upon the ex parte application of plaintiff, the complaint on file was subscribed by plaintiff's attorneys, and on the same day an amended complaint in due form and properly signed was filed.

The only defense relied on by defendants is that of the statute of limitations, which was raised both by demurrer and by answer to the amended complaint. The only claim made by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that the filing of a complaint, defective only in that it is neither signed by plaintiff nor by his attorney, is not sufficient to toll the running of the statute of limitations—that an action so commenced is, in law, not commenced at all.

In support of this contention appellants cite Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 570, but we think this case is against the contention of appellants. The court in Dixey v. Pollock was called upon to determine the relative rights of three attaching creditors, Dixey, Adams, and John Pollock. The first attachment was levied in the case of R. H. Adams v. D. H. Pollock, but the complaint in the suit of R. H. Adams was not signed until after the levy in the Dixey suit. It was contended that the unsigned complaint in the R. H. Adams suit was void, and therefore not sufficient to support an attachment. The court held that such unsigned complaint was not void, and was sufficient to support the attachment in favor of R. H. Adams, and, although such complaint was not signed until after the levy of the Dixey attachment, the court gave the Adams attachment precedence over the Dixey attachment. The court did not hold the attachment void in Pollock v. Pollock because the complaint was not signed, but because the suit itself was instituted by a person having no authority so to do. The court said: "The suit must be considered as having been instituted by an entire stranger to John Pollock and wholly without authority, and therefore void." The court directed that the proceeds derived from the sale of the attached property be first applied to the execution in the case of Adams, and then to the debt of Dixey. John Pollock was remitted to a new action. The law, then as now, required that a complaint be signed either by plaintiff or by his attorney, but the case just considered clearly holds that a complaint not so signed is not void but is sufficient as instituting an action, and may be amended.

Appellants correctly observe that the case of Dixey v. Pollock, supra, has never been reversed or modified. It must therefore be followed by this court. While there is some authority in other jurisdictions to the effect that an unsigned pleading is a nullity (Schuyler v. Yates, 11 Wend. [N. Y.] 186; Gould v. Gage, 118 Pa. 559, 12 Atl. 476; Browder v. Gaston, 30 Ala. 677), the weight of authority is to the effect that the omission of the signature to a pleading is but an irregularity that does not affect the jurisdiction of the court, and may be cured by amendment. Meyer v. Delaware R. R. Co., 100 U. S. 457, 25 L. Ed. 593; Harris v. Osenback, 13 Ind. 445; Railway Co. v. Peck, 99 Ind. 68; Sims v. Dame, 113 Ind. 127, 15 N. E. 217; Crawford v. Feder, 34 Fla. 397, 16 South. 287; Cochran v. Thomas, 131 Mo. 258, 33 S. W. 6; Weir v. Slocum, 3 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 397; Ehle v. Huller, 10 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 287; Harrison v. Wright, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 736; Gillis v. Atl. Coast Line Co., 127 Ga. 678, 56 S. E. 1003; McIntyre v. Smyth, 108 Va. 736, 62 S. E. 930; Holton v. Guinn (C. C.) 65 Fed. 451. See, also, Smith v. Dorn, 96 Cal. 73, 30 Pac. 1024.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 289

BARRETT-HICKS CO. v. GLAS et al.

(Civ. 743.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 26, 1910. Rehearing Denied Oct 11, 1910. Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1212*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—MANDATE AND PROCEEDINGS IN LOWER COURT—ADOPTION OF FINDINGS ON FORMER TRIAL.

On a second trial, after judgment of reversal by the Court of Appeal, which, though in reality involving but two questions of fact, was in general language, and did not limit the second trial to the issues of fact upon which it solely rested, where defendants by the theory upon which they presented their case at the second trial, in effect, approved the former proceedings and findings not disturbed by the judgment of reversal, the court could adopt such of the proceedings of the former trial not disturbed by the judgment of reversal as were necessary to support such judgment, and as to which no new proceedings were had at the second trial.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4713; Dec. Dig. § 1212.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 100*)—BUILDING CONTRACTOR'S BOND—DISCHARGE OF SURETY —CHANGE IN PLANS.

A surety on a building contractor's bond for the construction of a one-story building was discharged by changes in the plans involving the addition of another story where he did not consent thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 162-165; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ENFORCEMENT —PLEADING — VARIANCE BETWEEN PLEADING AND PROOF.

In proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien, there was no fatal variance between allegations of the complaint, setting forth in substance the statements in the recorded notice of lien, that claimant was to receive for materials furnished a reasonable market value thereof, and evidence that the price was definitely fixed at 5½ cents a pound which amounted to $89.10 for the amount furnished, where the evidence also showed, and the court found, that the materials furnished were of the reasonable market value of $89.10.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 142*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—NOTICE OF LIEN—SUFFICIENCY.

The statement in the notice of lien as to the price of the material being substantially true, the notice of lien was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 142*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—NOTICE OF LIEN—OFFICE.

The office of the statute in requiring the conditions and terms of the contract for materials to be set forth correctly in the notice of mechanic's lien is to inform the owner as to the extent and nature of a lienor's claim so as to facilitate investigation as to its merits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

6. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 157*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—NOTICE OF LIEN—SUFFICIENCY.

The test as to the sufficiency of a notice of mechanic's lien as to recital of the terms and conditions of the contract is whether the notice does or does not so far depart from the terms and conditions of the contract as to render it misleading to the injury of the owner, and, if there is a substantial agreement between the contract and notice so that there could not arise in the mind of the owner any misapprehension as to the extent and nature of the lienor's claim, any technical variance will be immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 268-274; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

7. PAYMENT (§ 65*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where plaintiff has proved the existence of a debt sued on, at least within the period of statutory limitations, the burden of proving payment is on defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 162-175, 196-202; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

8. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 114*)—PERSONS ENTITLED—SURETY ON CONTRACTOR'S BOND.

That one who furnished materials for the construction of a building, who was also a surety on the contractor's bond, took from such contractor an assignment of all money due and to grow due on the contractor's contract merely as indemnity against his loss as a surety and to insure proper application of the money would not render such surety liable under the building contract to the owner or laborers, mechanics, and materialmen, nor preclude him from obtaining a lien for materials furnished by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

9. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 94*)—PERSONS ENTITLED—FURNISHING OF MATERIAL.

That a subcontractor furnishing materials and labor in the construction of a building did not personally bestow labor or services on the building would not preclude him from obtaining a mechanic's lien therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

10. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 291*) — ENFORCEMENT—FORECLOSURE—DECREE—PAYMENT OF UNMATURED NOTE.

On foreclosure of mechanics' liens, some of which are paramount to a mortgage and others subject thereto, it was error to decree a sale of the property in fee, and payment out of the proceeds of the unmatured mortgage note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 604; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 877*)—RIGHT OF REVIEW.

The mortgagors, defendants in the mechanics' lien proceedings, on their appeal could complain of part of the decree ordering payment of the mortgage, though the mortgagee did not appeal, since the mortgagors might be injured by such decree in effect foreclosing a mortgage before the debt was due which might result in a deficiency judgment being entered against them, after a forced sale bringing less than the actual value of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3566; Dec. Dig. § 877.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Barrett-Hicks Company against Frank Glas, Jr., and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment modified, and judgment and order affirmed.

W. H. Larew, for appellants. L. L. Cory, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action for the foreclosure of certain liens upon the building of the defendants, and this appeal is prosecuted from the judgment rendered and entered against said defendants and from the order denying them a new trial.

Various phases of this litigation have been before this and the Supreme Court on two previous appeals. See Burnett et al. v. Frank Glas, Jr., et al., 154 Cal. 249, 97 Pac. 423, and, also, Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Frank Glas, Jr., et al., 9 Cal. App. 491, 99 Pac. 856.

Counsel for respondent here in his brief presents an accurate and well-stated summary of the history of this litigation and of the facts thereof, and we shall therefore adopt counsel's statement as our own:

The decision of the District Court of Appeal, affecting the parties to this appeal, is that of Barrett-Hicks Co., Appellants, v. Frank Glas,

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Jr., et al., Respondents, 9 Cal. App. 491, 99 Pac. 856. The decision of this court, deciding the issues in the case as to all parties, is J. H. Burnett, et al., Respondents, v. Frank Glas, Jr., et al., Appellants, 154 Cal. 249, 97 Pac. 423.

"On November 9, 1903, the appellants in this case, Frank Glas, Jr., and W. H. Glas, entered into a contract with W. J. Sircy for the construction of a one-story and basement brick store building for the sum of $7,320. The building was to be erected according to certain plans, drawings, and specifications which were found to be a material part of the contract, but which were never recorded in the recorder's office. The contractor gave a bond upon the contract with M. R. Madary, one of the assignors of this respondent, and C. J. Craycroft, as sureties, the sureties guaranteeing the performance of the contract and the delivery of the building free of liens. Work was commenced under the contract and upon the completion of the building a large number of liens were filed, including one on behalf of M. R. Madary. Suits were brought upon these respective liens. Prior to the trial, the suits to foreclose the liens were consolidated with the action brought by J. H. Burnett. The appeal decided by this court was one taken from the judgment rendered in the consolidated action. The appeal in the case decided by the District Court of Appeal was taken by this respondent to review certain portions of the judgment materially affecting its rights.

"In the case of Burnett v. Glas, supra, the judgment was affirmed, it being held by this court, among other things, as follows:

"(a) That the contract was void, in that the plans, drawings, and specifications had not been filed in the recorder's office; and also, because 25 per cent. of the contract price was not made payable at least 35 days after the final completion of the contract.

"(b) That certain liens were paramount and certain liens subsequent to the mortgage upon said property in favor of the Commercial Bank of Madera, and that the lower court was justified in rendering its decree that the entire property be sold, notwithstanding the indebtedness secured by the mortgage was not due, and that the proceeds be applied in payment of the respective liens in accordance with their priority.

"(c) That certain allowances for attorney's fees and interest were erroneous. The judgment was modified by striking out these allowances, and in all other respects affirmed.

"The record on appeal, decided by the Third District Court of Appeal, shows that this respondent had brought suit for the foreclosure of three separate liens, one in its own favor, one in favor of M. R. Madary assigned to it, and one in favor of J. A. Sircy. The lower court rendered judgment in favor of this respondent upon the assigned lien of J. A. Sircy, and rendered judgment against the respondent upon its personal claim, and the assigned claim of M. R. Madary. The lower court based its decision and awarded judgment in favor of the owners and against Barrett-Hicks Company on its personal claim on the finding that the building materials were not furnished to W. J. Sircy by the respondent, but to M. R. Madary; and based its decision and rendered judgment against the respondent upon the assigned claim of M. R. Madary upon the ground that M. R. Madary was a surety, and as such was not entitled to enforce any lien against the property. The Appellate Court found both of these contentions to be unsound; that under the evidence the decision of the lower court was wrong; that the finding of the court that this respondent furnished the materials at the special instance of M. R. Madary was not true, and not supported by the evidence; and that, as to M. R. Madary's claim, the evidence showed that he, as such surety, had been released from all obligation upon his bond for the reasons set forth in its opinion, and therefore was entitled to enforce a claim of lien against the property.

"The principles of law involving the rights of the respective parties having thus been adjudicated and determined, the issues presented in the action of this respondent against the appellants upon the personal claim of the respondent and the assigned claim of M. R. Madary came on regularly for trial, the result being that the judgment appealed from in this case was entered in favor of the plaintiff, the lower court awarding judgment in favor of Barrett-Hicks Company upon its personal claim, and also upon the assigned claim."

The findings and decree made and entered in the former trial affecting all other questions of fact but those involving the claim of the plaintiff and that of Madary, assigned to plaintiff, were not challenged on the former appeal, and therefore not disturbed by the decision reversing the judgment therein.

At the second or last trial, culminating in the judgment from which one of the appeals here is taken, counsel on both sides and the court tried the case upon the theory that there were only two questions of fact to be tried and determined, viz., the question as to the validity of the personal claim and lien of the plaintiff and the question whether the claim assigned to it by Madary was valid. Upon this theory, the court therefore adopted the unattacked and undisturbed portions of the findings and judgment made and entered in the former trial as parts of the findings and judgment made and entered as the result of the last trial. The record here discloses no attempt on the part of the defendants to introduce any proof looking to the impeachment of any of the essential ultimate facts as to which findings were made at the former trial other than those involving the claims of the plaintiff here. But it is now objected in a general way that the court had no legal authority to adopt this course; that all the former findings and judgment were vacated and set aside, and became functus officio by the judgment of reversal entered by this court.

The court pursued the proper course under the circumstances. It is true that the judgment of reversal, though in reality involving, as seen, but two questions of fact, was in general language, and in no way limited the second trial to the issues of fact upon which the judgment solely rested; and, had counsel for appellants chosen that course, all the material issues of fact tendered by the pleadings could have been gone into on the retrial. But, as stated, he, by the theory upon which he presented his case at the second trial, in effect approved the former proceedings and findings not disturbed by the decision of this court, and they therefore remained, so far as pertinent to the questions retried, a part of the record of the case, and would have been such whether they had been expressly adopted by the court or not. Duff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 6, 35 Pac. 437; Chandler v. People's Savings Bank, 73 Cal. 320, 11 Pac. 791, 14 Pac. 864, 2 Am. St. Rep. 812.

On the first appeal of this case the principal contention of the appellant therein (the respondent here) was, as seen, that the evidence failed to support the findings of the court against the claims here in dispute. The decision by the trial court against the personal claim of Barrett-Hicks Company was based upon the ground that the evidence disclosed that the materials furnished by it for the building of defendants were not so furnished "at the special instance and request of said defendants, * * * through their agent, W. J. Sircy, but that said materials aforesaid were furnished at the special instance and request of M. R. Madary, and were charged on the books of said plaintiff to said M. R. Madary, and the allegation in plaintiff's complaint in that regard is untrue, as is likewise the statement in its said notice and claim of lien that said materials were furnished to W. J. Sircy, the contractor," etc. The finding of the trial court against the claim of lien of Madary, assigned to plaintiff, was founded upon the undisputed fact that said Madary was one of the sureties on the bond of the contractor to indemnify the owner. The bond, as is usual in such instruments executed in such cases, provided that the sureties would answer as such for the full performance by Sircy, the contractor, of all the terms and conditions of the contract to be by him performed, "and jointly and severally guarantee * * * the delivery of said building free from all liens that may be filed against the said contractor in the above contract, not exceeding the sum of two thousand dollars."

This court, on the former appeal, reviewing the evidence from which the foregoing findings were educed, held that they were not thus supported, and, referring to the plaintiff's personal claim, declared that the proofs, without contradiction, showed that Sircy himself bought the materials and that Madary's part in the transaction was that of a mere guarantor. As to the defense against the assigned claim, this court held, and its ruling thereon was unquestionably correct, that the evidence disclosed that, while Madary was a surety on the bond guaranteeing the full performance by Sircy of all terms and conditions of his original contract with the defendants, he was absolved or released from all liability thereon by reason af a subsequent contract between Sircy and defendants executed before the completion of the contract guaranteed by the bond, by which a second story was to be added to the building, which, under the first contract, was to be but one story in height. The theory of the defendants at the first trial and on the former appeal was that the added story came within the clause of the original contract providing that "should the owners or the architect, at any time, during the progress of the work, request any alteration to or omission from this contract or the plans or specifications or either of them, they shall be at liberty to do so, and the same shall in no way affect or make void this contract; but the amount thereof shall be added to, or deducted from, the amount of the contract price aforesaid, as the case may be, by a fair and reasonable valuation. And this contract shall be held to be completed when the work is completed in accordance with the original plans, as amended by such changes, whatever the nature or extent thereof." Answering this contention, the court said: "It is well-settled law that a surety may stand upon the strict letter of his bond, and that where the principal has, without the consent of the surety, materially violated the terms of the agreement for the performance of which the surety stands sponsor, the latter is exonerated. * * * It would be unreasonable to hold that the effect of the bond was to guarantee the work done in the construction of a two-story building; for, if we should take that view, it would follow that the owners might have converted the plans into a six-story building, and increased the cost four or five fold. The change to a two-story building was not decided upon until the one-story building was well towards completion, and the memorandum was not signed until December 24, 1903." See Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas et al., 9 Cal. App. 491, 99 Pac. 862—a petition for rehearing in Supreme Court having been denied.

We have carefully examined the record before us, and we find that substantially the same evidence was brought out at the second trial with regard to the claims in controversy as was adduced at the first trial, and, while we do not believe, as counsel for respondent contends, that the doctrine of "the law of the case" is applicable or may be invoked as to this point, there can be no ground for doubting that the evidence is abundantly sufficient to support the finding as to each of the claims involved in this appeal. We perceive no necessity for presenting here the evidence or even the substance thereof. As stated, there is no material difference between the evidence received at the first trial pertaining to these claims and that produced at the last trial.

But some other points are urged by appellants against the findings of the court. Some of these may be stated as they are presented in his brief by counsel for respondent, as follows:

"(1) There is a variance between the allegations and the proof, in that the allegations of the first cause of action of the complaint and the statements of the lien specify a contract different from that supported by the evidence.

"(2) That the respondent introduced no proof of nonpayment of the amount claimed to be due in the first cause of action.

"(3) That M. R. Madary stands in the shoes of W. J. Sircy, and therefore cannot assert or claim a lien.

"(4) That, as Mr. Madary personally bestowed no labor or services, he therefore is not entitled to a lien either personally, or as a subcontractor.

"(5) That there is a variance between the claim of lien of the respondent and its complaint, and the evidence produced, in that the fact that Mr. Madary guaranteed the account was an essential part of the terms, time given and conditions of the contract."

1. We are unable to discover a fatal or any material variance between the allegations of the complaint, setting forth in substance the statements in the recorded notice of lien, and the evidence disclosing the nature of the contract between the contractor and plaintiff for the materials furnished. The specific contention is that, while the allegation is that the respondent was to receive for said materials (corrugated iron) the reasonable market value of the materials so furnished, the evidence shows that such corrugated iron was sold and furnished for a definite or stipulated price expressly agreed upon by the parties. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff "agreed to furnish certain corrugated iron for said building from time to time as demanded, and was to be paid therefor the reasonable market value thereof from time to time," etc. Barrett, president of plaintiff corporation, testified, in part, as follows: "This iron was to be used on the awning. He (Sircy) told me how many sheets he would require. The price was 5½ cents a pound. I figured it up at $89.10. * * * The reasonable market value of the iron was $89.10." Sircy testified that plaintiff "furnished the iron to me, shipped it to me, the iron was used in the construction of the Glas building. The price was $89.10. They were to ship it to me. They did so. They gave me a price on the material. That was a reasonable market price." The court found that the materials furnished by plaintiff were of the reasonable market value of $89.10, and this finding corresponds with the allegation of the complaint and the statement in the lien.

Conceding that the evidence shows that the price charged for the corrugated iron was definitely fixed and expressly agreed upon at the time it was sold to the contractor, it nevertheless further appears from the evidence that said price or sum constituted the market value of the materials at the time of the sale. "The statement in the notice of lien was therefore substantially true, which was all that was required to give it validity." Star Mill & Lumber Co. v. Porter, 4 Cal. App. 474, 88 Pac. 499; Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 107, 37 Pac. 195. The object of the statute in requiring the conditions and terms of the contract to be set forth correctly in the notice of lien is to "inform the owner as to the extent and nature of a lienor's claim, to facilitate investigation as to its merits." Wagner v. Hansen, supra. And the test as to the sufficiency of the notice with respect to the terms and conditions of the contract is whether such notice so far departs from the terms and conditions of the contract as to render it misleading to the injury of the owner. If it does, the variance is fatal. If, however, there is a substantial agreement between the contract and notice of lien, so that there could not arise in the mind of the owner any misapprehension as to the extent and nature of the lienor's claim, then any technical variance which might appear would be immaterial.

In Star Mill & Lumber Co. v. Porter, supra, it is said: "The notice is, indeed, incorrect in stating as one of the terms of the contract that the claim was based upon a quantum meruit, instead of upon a special promise to pay a fixed amount; and this doubtless as a matter of pleading would constitute at common law a material variance, though hardly under existing practice. Code Civ. Proc. § 469. But, as we have already said, the technical doctrine of variance has no application to a notice of lien, where all that is required is that the statement of the terms of the contract shall be substantially true. There are, indeed, many cases cited by the appellant, and other cases, which might be conceived to hold a contrary doctrine [citing a number of cases]. But these, or most of them are distinguished from the present case, in that it did not appear that the fixed price stated was the market price. In the absence of this fact, the statement would be substantially false and might mislead the owner to his prejudice. But, where the fact appears, no injury can result to the owner; nor can the misstatement be regarded as material." It seems to us plain that the point we are considering here comes clearly within the principle laid down in the foregoing case.

2. It was not incumbent on the plaintiff to prove nonpayment, but the burden of proving payment rested on the defendant. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127. It is there said: "It is not necessary to determine whether the evidence was sufficient to warrant the finding of nonpayment—if proof of nonpayment by plaintiff had been necessary. Where the plaintiff has proved the existence of a debt sued on—at least, within the period of statutory limitation—the burden of proving payment is on the defendant. That this is the rule at common law no one can doubt; and we have no statutory law changing it." See, also, Greenleaf on Evidence; 1 Cowen & Hill's Notes to Phillips on Evidence, side page 810; Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 281; Lisman v. Early, 15 Cal. 199; Caulfield v. Saunders, 17 Cal. 569; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 412, 76 Am. Dec. 492.

3. The contention that Madary "stands in the shoes" of Sircy, the contractor, and is therefore equally liable with Sircy for the proper performance of the terms of the contract, and consequently entitled to no lien for his claim, arises out of the circumstance of the assignment by Sircy to Madary of all moneys, which would become due under said contract. The evidence shows that one of the considerations moving Madary to become one of the sureties on Sircy's bond was an agreement on the part of the latter that he would "assign and transfer to Madary all the money that was to grow due on the contract." "That," testified Madary, "was a consideration of my going on the bond. * * * The object of the assignment was to prevent the contractor doing as he pleased with his own money. Sircy was indebted to me at the time he made these various assignments." There was no evidence that Sircy assigned the entire contract to Madary, nor any showing that Madary was to reap any of the fruits of the contract, except in so far as he might furnish labor and materials to Sircy to be used in executing the terms of said contract. The court found that Sircy was in the erection and construction of the building representative and contractor of the defendants, Frank Glas, Jr., et al.; that Sircy was not at any time the agent of Madary in any respect in the erection of said building; that the assignment of all moneys due and to grow due on said contract to Madary by Sircy "was so made that M. R. Madary, as bondsman of W. J. Sircy, could see to a proper application of all sums of money received, and that the same was applied in payment of labor performed and materials furnished for said building"; that said Sircy was not, in the construction of said building, acting under the supervision or control of Madary, or subject to his supervision. These findings are well supported by the evidence, and the conclusion of law following therefrom, that Madary thus in no manner or degree became responsible or liable under the terms of the contract, is sound and unimpeachable.

In Stone v. Owens, 105 Cal. 292, 38 Pac. 726, a contract with the state for the construction of a sea wall and wharf on the water front of the city of San Francisco was, in consideration of money advanced and to be advanced to the contractors, assigned by the latter to one Wood, with authority to demand and receive all warrants and moneys due or to become due under said contract. The question presented was: Did Wood become a party to the contract for the completion of the sea wall and wharf by the assignment of the contract to him as collateral security for money loaned? The Supreme Court, answering this question negatively, says: "As it appears that the contracts were delivered to Wood at the time they were assigned, and also appears on the face of the written assignments, as well as by extrinsic evidence that the assignments were intended to operate as collateral security for the payment of debts, the legal effect of the assignments and the power of attorney to receive the warrants, and the money to become due under those contracts, was merely a pledge of those contracts creating a lien thereon subject to which the title to, and the general property in, the pledge remained in the pledgor (Civ Code, § 2888; Haber v. Brown, 101 Cal. 452, 35 Pac. 1035, and cases there cited); and such pledge and lien implied no obligation of the pledgee to perform, or to pay for, the work which the pledged contracts required to be performed by the pledgors—the Owens brothers. And surely no such obligation is expressly imposed by those assignments." See Lisenby v. Newton, 120 Cal. 571, 52 Pac. 813, 65 Am. St. Rep. 203, and Canale v. Copello, 137 Cal. 22, 69 Pac. 698. The case at bar, as to the point under present review, is no different from the case from which the foregoing excerpt is made. Madary merely accepted the assignment as indemnity against loss as a surety, and therefore to insure the proper application of the moneys due and to become due on the contract, and thus in no sense assumed any liability to the owners or the laborers, mechanics, and materialmen.

4. There is no merit in the contention that, because Madary personally bestowed no labor or services on the building, he is not entitled to a lien for the labor furnished the contractor in putting on the roof for which he claims a lien. Madary was a subcontractor in the matter of putting on the roof, and not only furnished the material for that purpose, but delegated the work of putting on the roof to one of the regular employés in his planing mill, or, as he called his employé, "our roofing man." It is claimed that the case of Miltimore v. Nofziger Bros. Lumber Co., 150 Cal. 790, 90 Pac. 114, is an authority for the proposition that a subcontractor, though furnishing labor as well as material, cannot claim a lien for labor unless such labor was personally performed by him. We do not so read that decision. As we understand the language of the opinion, it merely holds that the constitutional provision (section 15, art. 20) with reference to the rank of each lien, where different liens are asserted against any property, places mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers in the same class, and their equality being thus established by said constitutional provision, which is self-executing, "the provision of the Code that persons performing manual labor shall be first paid out of the proceeds of the property, and, in effect, that the materialmen shall have no lien, except upon such balance of the proceeds as may remain after the laborers are fully paid, clearly impairs, and in many cases will destroy, the right of materialmen given by the Constitution," and "to that extent the statute is void." In other words, the only proposition dealt with in that case was the question of priority or the rank among different lienors. It may be suggested that it would, indeed, be a singular principle that would sustain a provision of law to the effect that a subcontractor, who has agreed with the contractor to furnish certain materials for the structure and to put the same in place, would not (himself perhaps without the skill to do the work in person) be entitled to a lien for the labor so performed because he had not himself personally performed it.

5. It is insisted that there is a material difference between the lien filed by respondent and as alleged in the complaint and the proved contract out of which the lienor's claim grew, and that such variance is fatal. The contention here is that the fact that Madary guaranteed the payment of respondent's claim was one of the terms or conditions between the respondent and the contractor. As counsel for respondent well says, the transaction between Madary and respondent by which the former guaranteed payment by Sircy involved a separate and distinct arrangement between the respondent and Madary, and with which the contractor had nothing to do. The guaranty had reference only to the means adopted by the plaintiff to secure for itself indemnity against loss in the transaction by which it agreed with Sircy to furnish him certain materials.

6. But we are of the opinion that the court, under the circumstances of this particular case, exceeded its authority by directing in its decree the payment, out of the proceeds of the sale of the premises, of the unmatured note secured by the mortgage on said premises executed by the defendants, Glas, to the Commercial Bank of Madera. That the appellants have a right to complain of this part of the decree we have no doubt, notwithstanding the fact that the bank has not appealed from the judgment, and therefore urges no complaint against it. The only other liens than that of the mortgage involved in this case are subject to the mortgage, the latter lien having attached to the premises prior to the time at which the right to the said other liens accrued. In Burnett et al. v. Glas et al., supra, there were liens paramount to the mortgage and others subject thereto, and the court, while holding that, under such circumstances, it was necessary to sell the whole property and pay the note secured by the mortgage from the proceeds of the sale, in order to protect the rights of all the lienors, although said note was then not due, said, through Mr. Justice Angellotti, that "if all the mechanics' liens had been paramount to the mortgage, or if all had been subject thereto, the case would have been very different and appellants might well have insisted that no provision be made in the decree for the payment of the mortgage. In the first case, the mortgagee would have to redeem from the lien sale to preserve its claim, and in the second case the property would be sold subject to the mortgage." This declaration may perhaps be correctly said to be obiter, but there can be no doubt that it involves a statement of the true rule in both the supposititious cases. The rights of the appellants as mortgagors would therefore be very much prejudiced by a decree which in effect would foreclose their mortgage before the debt to secure which said mortgage was given is due, and which might possibly result in a deficiency judgment being entered up against them before the debt is due, much to their injury. For illustration, it might happen, as it often does in such cases, that the property sold, as it would be, at a forced sale, would not bring its actual value. The payment of the mortgage debt under the circumstances appearing in the case of Burnett v. Glas was a matter indispensably necessary in order to preserve the rights of all lien claimants—those whose liens were superior to as well as those whose liens were subject to the mortgage. Here, all the liens being subsequent and subject to the mortgage, there is no just reason for the payment of the note secured thereby before it is due.

But counsel for the respondent takes the position, which was also approved and adopted by the court, that, inasmuch as no attack was made on the former appeal on any other portions of the findings and decree following the first trial than those involving the claims here in controversy, the judgment of reversal as to these later claims in no manner affected or disturbed the said other portions of the findings and decree, and that they were therefore affirmed, and that they now stand immune from attack here. We have already shown by the authorities that the court below was authorized to adopt such of the proceedings of the former trial as were not disturbed by the former decision of this court and as are necessary to support the judgment here and as to which no new proceedings were had at the second trial. But it appears from the record on a former appeal, as seen, that there were certain liens which were paramount to the mortgage and certain other liens the right to which accrued after the mortgage lien attached and were subject thereto. And it is admitted by counsel for respondent that, after the filing of the decision of the Supreme Court in Burnett et al. v. Glas et al., all the liens which were paramount to the mortgage were paid and satisfied, thus eliminating them as a further bone of contention in this litigation. Upon the first trial of the present action, therefore, all the liens involved were subsequent and subject to the mortgage. The court, however, in the first trial of this case adopted nearly all the findings and decree filed and entered in the case of Burnett et al. v. Glas et al. And it has done likewise in the present action, and has added a finding with regard to the effect of the judgment in that case on the mortgage lien, that said "judgment has now become final." This conclusion, so far as the decision in the Burnett Case is concerned, is doubtless sound; but in the present action the mortgage lien of the bank was made an issue by the complaint. It is alleged in the complaint that it is still a subsisting lien on the premises of the appellants, and that it is paramount to the other liens concerned here, and, all other liens heretofore litigated and adjudicated having been eliminated as issues in the present action, it must follow, as we have declared, that the decree of the court here directing the premises to be sold and from the proceeds of such sale the note secured by the mortgage be paid, thus virtually foreclosing the mortgage before the debt it was given to secure is due, is erroneous to that extent. But we see no necessity for a reversal of the judgment for this reason. The court found that said bank "holds a mortgage upon all the premises described in said complaint, which mortgage is superior to and prior to any claim of lien against said building and premises of the plaintiff herein," and upon this finding and consistently therewith, and in accordance with the suggestion of the Supreme Court in Burnett et al. v. Glas et al., the judgment may and should be so modified as that the direction therein shall be that the premises shall be sold, subject to the mortgage lien subsisting thereon in favor of the Commercial Bank of Madera, to satisfy the claims of the respondent.

7. The point that Madary is entitled to no lien for the reason that he is a surety on the contractor's bond may be disposed of against the contention of the appellant on the authority of Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas et al., supra. The facts in this case upon said point are precisely the same as those in the cited case, which, as seen, involved the appeal from the judgment entered after the first trial of the present case.

8. Counsel's statement that the court refused to receive evidence offered by the defendants in support of their alleged offset to Madary's claim is not borne out by the record. We have not succeeded in discovering in the record any evidence of any effort on the part of the defendants to establish or prove the set-off alleged in their answer, or any ruling of the court on any such proposition. We have, with much care, examined all the important points urged by appellants, and have found no reason for disturbing the judgment and order, except in so far as that the former should be modified in the respect hereinbefore suggested and pointed out.

The court below is hereby directed to modify the judgment so that it will, for the purpose of satisfying the liens of the respondent herein, direct the sale of the premises involved in this action, subject to the mortgage lien of the Commercial Bank of Madera, and as so modified the judgment as well as the order will be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

158 Cal. 548

GOULD v. MOSS, Judge. (L. A. 2,767.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 11, 1910.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 190*)—PROCEEDINGS—COSTS—POWER TO AWARD.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1095, provides that, if a judgment be given for the petitioner in mandamus, he may recover his costs. Held, that this applies to original proceedings, whether in the superior court, the Supreme Court, or in the District Court of Appeals, and that the Supreme Court has power to award costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 438; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 190*)—PROCEEDINGS—COSTS—NECESSITY OF JUDGMENT.

Although the Supreme Court has power to award costs in mandamus proceedings, costs do not necessarily follow the judgment, and, unless specially awarded, cannot be recovered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 438; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

3. MOTIONS (§ 16*)—REQUISITES—STATEMENT OF GROUNDS.

Where the grounds of a motion to strike out a memorandum of costs in a mandamus proceeding that court had no jurisdiction to allow costs, etc., the motion will be dismissed, though, if it had been based on the ground that no costs were adjudged, it would have been sustained. but the memorandum will be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Department 1. Mandamus by Will D. Gould against Leon F. Moss. Motions by defendant to strike memorandum of costs and to retax the costs. Dismissed.

James H. Blanchard and Will D. Gould, for petitioner. Murphey & Poplin, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This was an original proceeding in mandamus begun in the Supreme Court to compel the defendant to certify a statement of the case on motion for a new trial in the matter of a petition of Mary Woodman Kilborn to revoke the probate of the will of Julia Ann Kilborn, deceased. An alternative writ was issued. The defendant appeared and answered, as also did the said Mary Woodman Kilborn, and upon the hearing final judgment was rendered by this court on September 6, 1910, in presence of petitioner, directing the defendant to certify said statement as soon as it should be correctly engrossed. On October 5, 1910, the plaintiff filed in this court a memorandum of costs, claiming the sum of $91.70 for the several items, including the printing of the plaintiff's petition and points and authorities, clerk's fees on filing the petition, and cash paid for telegrams and for a certified copy of the judgment of this court. The defendant now moves this court to strike out this memorandum of costs, and also to retax the costs. The grounds of the motion to strike out are that this court has no jurisdiction to allow costs in such proceedings, and that, if jurisdiction exists, the memorandum was not filed within the time allowed by law.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is provided in section 1095 of the Code of Civil Procedure that, if judgment be given for the applicant in a proceeding in mandamus, he may recover such damages as he may be found to have sustained, together with costs. This provision applies to original proceedings of that character, whether begun in the superior court, in the Supreme Court, or in a District Court of Appeal. The point that this court is without power to award costs in such cases is without merit.

We need not consider the question whether or not the memorandum was filed too late. There was no warrant for filing it at all. While, as above stated, the court may give judgment for costs in mandamus proceedings, yet, if the judgment does not include costs, the filing of a memorandum of costs by the prevailing party will avail him nothing. The judgment of the court in bank in this case does not award costs to the plaintiff. Whether correct in this respect or not, it has become final. Even if we had the power to revise or correct it, we are not asked to do so. The plaintiff is assuming that the judgment, as given, carries costs. In this he is mistaken. If the motion to strike out had been based on the ground that no costs are adjudged, it would have been granted. As it is, the motions cannot be granted but the memorandum of costs will be disregarded.

The motions are dismissed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 330

GIBSON v. BERRYMAN. (Civ. 762.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 7, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 2, 1910.)

1. New Trial (§ 123*)—Notice—Waiver.

Notice of intention to move for a new trial may be waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 279; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. New Trial (§ 123*)—Notice—Waiver.

When both parties by stipulation waived notice of intention to move for a new trial, the court had jurisdiction to order a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 279; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by A. Gibson against F. M. Berryman. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals Affirmed.

W. C. Cavitt, for appellant. Earll H Webb (Andrew Thorne, of counsel), for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against plaintiff, taken in accordance with sections 953a, 953b, and 953c, Code of Civil Procedure. The action was brought to obtain a decree enjoining defendant from enforcing a judgment for $900, obtained by defendant herein against plaintiff herein in an action of unlawful detainer. An appeal was taken to this court by the plaintiff herein from the judgment in the action of Berryman v. Gibson, and the judgment was affirmed. 7 Cal. App. 679, 95 Pac. 671. By this action it is sought to enjoin the enforcement of such judgment, upon the grounds, first, that the court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment; and second, that said judgment was obtained through fraud and collusion between Berryman and the respective attorneys of the plaintiff and defendant in the action of Berryman v. Gibson.

As to the want of jurisdiction, it appears that the action of Berryman v. Gibson was tried, and resulted in the court making and signing findings of fact and conclusions of law. By the findings of fact it appeared that Berryman was entitled to a judgment for $900, being treble the amount of rent due and unpaid. The court, however, directed judgment for $80, and the judgment was entered in favor of Berryman for such amount. In due time the plaintiff in that action moved to vacate said judgment, and to amend the conclusions of law so that the same might conform to the findings of facts. After hearing and argument by the attorneys for both parties, the court granted the motion to vacate the judgment and to amend the conclusions of law, and ordered that the cause be set down for a new trial. Subsequently on the next day an order was filed, signed by the judge of the court, amending the conclusions of law to the effect that plaintiff (therein) was entitled to judgment for $300 for rent, and that the same be trebled, and ordered judgment entered accordingly. On this condition of the record the attorneys on the 18th day of February, 1907, signed a stipulation to the effect that a new trial might be granted, and that an order granting such new trial might be entered. This stipulation was filed March 1, 1907, and thereupon the court entered an order upon such stipulation, granting a new trial.

No notice of intention to move for a new trial had been given by either party, and the time for giving such notice had expired. The cause came on for a new trial, and, both parties appearing, it was partly tried, and after various continuances, some regular and some irregular, it was called for trial on a certain date, and plaintiff (therein) appeared; but, defendant (therein) not appearing, judgment was ordered for plaintiff. There is evidence sufficient that the attorney for defendant (therein) had notice that the trial was set for the date upon which it was concluded. In fact, he appeared in court a few minutes after judgment was ordered against his client (plaintiff herein). The contention of appellant is that, without any notice of intention to move for a new trial, the court had no jurisdiction to make the order granting the new trial, notwithstanding the stipulation of the attorneys, and that, for that reason, the judgment which was subsequently rendered and affirmed on appeal (7 Cal. App. 679, 95 Pac. 671) was and is void.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is manifest that, when the stipulation was entered into and when the order was entered, the record was in such shape that plaintiff in that action was entitled to a judgment against defendant therein for $900. By the stipulation and order Gibson obtained the advantage of a new trial. It is well established that notice of intention to move for a new trial may be waived. Williams v. Gregory, 9 Cal. 76; Gray v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 220; Hobbs v. Duff, 43 Cal. 485; Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 151; Schieffery v. Tapia, 68 Cal. 185, 8 Pac. 878; Hibernia S. & L. Society v. Moore, 68 Cal. 156, 8 Pac. 824. If the new trial had not been granted on the stipulation, Berryman would have been entitled, on the findings of fact and the conclusions of law as they then stood, to a judgment against Gibson for $900. Gibson took advantage of the order which was entered with the consent of his attorney, and should not now be heard to complain. Meerholz v. Sessions, 9 Cal. 277; Brotherton v. Hart, 11 Cal. 405; Erlanger v. S. P. R. R. Co., 109 Cal. 395, 42 Pac. 31. Both parties, by the stipulation, waived notice of intention to move for a new trial, and the court upon said stipulation had jurisdiction to make the order.

We have carefully read all the evidence in the record, and find nothing to support the contention that any fraud was practiced upon appellant or the court. Appellant's attorney in the case of Berryman v. Gibson seems to have acted in entire good faith with his client, and there is nothing to show any act of collusion or fraud upon the part of Berryman or his attorney. The findings of the court upon the question of fraud are fully supported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 315

McQUAIDE v. ENTERPRISE BREWING CO. (Civ. 785.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 3, 1910.)

1. Corporations (§ 409*) — Lease — Acceptance—Execution—Authority of Officers.

Where the terms of a proposed lease were discussed at a meeting of corporate directors, and they agreed to take the lease, there was sufficient authority in the president and secretary to execute it, though no formal written resolution authorizing it was adopted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1620–1622; Dec. Dig. § 409.*]

2. Corporations (§ 426*)—Lease—Execution by Officers—Ratification.

After the execution of a lease to a brewery corporation by its president and secretary, the landlord erected a building on the land according to plans approved by the corporate officers, and in pursuance of the terms of the lease. On completion of the building, the corporation took possession, and for 15 months paid the rent by corporate checks which were duly entered in its books. It also sublet the premises to sundry tenants, collected rent from them for its own benefit, and on their default on the rent took legal proceedings in its own name to eject them. It also sold its beer to one of the tenants, who ran a saloon on part of the premises. Held that, irrespective of the authority given the officers to execute the lease, there was a ratification of it by the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1702–1704, 1713, 1714; Dec. Dig. § 426.*]

3. Corporations (§ 487*)—Ultra Vires Contract—Liability.

Where a corporation has received the benefits of an executed contract, it cannot escape liability thereon on the ground of its being ultra vires, where the contract was not malum in se or malum prohibitum.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1893; Dec. Dig. § 487.*]

4. Corporations (§ 435*)—Restrictions as to Holding Real Property—Lease—Subletting.

Civ. Code, § 360, providing that a corporation cannot hold any more real property than may be reasonably necessary for the transaction of its business, is not contravened by the act of a corporation, whose purpose is to manufacture and sell beer, in leasing a building and subletting it for purposes of a saloon, since one of the objects of the corporation was to find a market for its beer and increase its sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1763, 1766; Dec. Dig. § 435.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Emma L. McQuaide against the Enterprise Brewing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. S. Melsted and Richard O'Connor, for appellant. R. F. Mogan and Leon Samuels, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover of defendant corporation the sum of $500 for rent of the premises described in the complaint for the month ending November 30, 1908. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and findings filed, in which judgment was ordered for the plaintiff in the amount claimed.

The first contention of appellant is that the defendant corporation never leased the premises from the plaintiff, and hence is not liable for rent of said premises. This was one of the issues made by the pleadings, and the court found in favor of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant did execute the lease, and that it thereafter entered into possession of the premises and has ever since remained in such possession, and "that the signatures of the president and secretary of said corporation to said lease were not without authorization on the part of said corporation defendant, and are not ultra vires or null or void, but, on the contrary, each of said signatures was affixed to said lease with the authorization of said corporation defendant."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We have carefully examined the evidence, and find that it supports the findings in this regard. The evidence shows without conflict: That the lease was in writing, signed in the corporate name and under the corporate seal of defendant, by its president and secretary, with their several official designations attached. That the land was vacant when the lease was made, and that plaintiff erected a building thereon at a cost of $27,000, according to the plans and specifications submitted to and approved by defendant's officers, in pursuance of the stipulations contained in the lease. That the rent was to begin when the building was completed, and when it was so completed the keys were delivered to defendant's president, and the defendant thereafter paid the monthly rent for 15 months by checks signed with the name of the corporation, which payments were entered in the corporation's books in the regular course of business. That after defendant went into possession of said premises it sublet the premises in its own name by different leases to different tenants, part of them being sublet for the purposes of a saloon, and a part for a workingman's hotel, and it collected the rents from the subtenants for its benefit. The rents so collected were placed to the credit of the subtenants in the regular course of the corporation's business. That it sold beer manufactured by it to its subtenant who occupied the saloon and the hotel. That when some of its subtenants defaulted in the payment of their rent it brought suit in its corporate name to eject said tenants and to obtain judgment of restitution of the premises against such subtenants. That upon the completion of the building it placed in said hotel and saloon some $1,600 worth of furniture and fixtures. Remensberger, the defendant's president, testified as follows: "I read the lease. I guess Mr. Windeler read it—I don't know for sure—and the terms of the lease were mentioned at the time of the meeting of the board of directors. Q. And it was stated at the meeting of the board of directors that this was to be a lease to the Enterprise Brewing Company, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir. Q. And thereupon did the board of directors then assembled agree to take that lease? A. Yes, sir. Q. Subseqeuntly to that meeting, and pursuant to the wishes of the members of the board then assembled, wherein they stated that they wanted to take that lease, did you and and Mr. Windeler sign that lease? A. Yes, sir. Q. After the lease in this action had been signed by the Enterprise Brewing Company, by yourself as president and Mr. Windeler as secretary, did the matter of this lease at any time thereafter come up for consideration by the board of directors of the Enterprise Brewing Company? A. No. * * * I believe there were two or three meetings of the board of directors to consider the matter of this lease."

It is not necessary to further discuss the contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence. Honesty and fair dealing require that the defendant be held to the terms of the lease. Under the circumstances as disclosed by this record, it was not necessary to show a formal resolution in writing signed by the board of directors authorizing the lease. It was authorized by the board of directors; it was afterwards ratified by them. The president of the corporation virtually so states. No director of the defendant has taken the stand and denied it.

It is next claimed that the defendant had no power to enter into the lease, and that it is ultra vires. The doctrine of ultra vires when invoked by a stockholder of a corporation, or in quo warranto proceedings by the state, particularly as to executory contracts and in violation of its charter or entirely outside the scope and purpose of its creation, is looked upon quite differently than it is when relied upon by a corporation as a shield to escape its just liabilities under an executed contract. In such case the rights of the party with whom the corporation has made the contract, and the consequences to him, are to be carefully weighed before the court will hold the contract void. In such cases the courts simply consider the facts as to the circumstances of the contract; as to whether or not the corporation has received benefits under it; as to whether or not the doctrine of estoppel in pais may be invoked. In other words, it is the policy of the law and the endeavor of the courts to hold corporations as well as natural persons to their contracts and make them liable for the obligations they have incurred. Such defense introduced against a contract which has been executed wholly or in part by the corporation is looked upon with disfavor, and particularly of late years when corporations have multiplied until they control and operate all kinds of business, and in many cases to the exclusion of individuals. The rule is based upon the strongest principles of justice and public policy that a contract should be enforced against a corporation when it has received the consideration or the benefits of the contract. As to contracts of corporations that are malum in se or malum prohibitum, they will not be enforced; but as to contracts not thus objectionable justice and public policy, as before stated, require that the doctrine of ultra vires should be limited in its scope and application.

Appellant invokes section 360 of the Civil

Code, which provides: "No corporation shall acquire or hold any more real property than may be reasonably necessary for the transaction of its business or the construction of its works, except as otherwise specially provided." It is claimed that the words "acquire or hold" apply to a lease of real estate. If this be so, the court found "that said leased property at all times in said complaint mentioned was and now is reasonably necessary for the transaction of the business of said corporation defendant." There is evidence sufficient to support this finding. One of the purposes of the defendant corporation, as set forth in its articles, is "to manufacture and sell beer." One of the objects of defendant in procuring the lease was to sublet the saloon to one of its old customers who had been in the habit of buying beer from them and who would buy beer and sell it at the saloon. It was one of its objects to find a market for its beer and increase its sale. With this purpose in view, it purchased the bar fixtures and furnished the bar with such fixtures and furniture. It procured the place where the beer was to be sold, bought the furniture and bar glasses to be used in selling it, leased the property, and sublet it to the party who was to sell it. It would not have been in violation of law for the defendant to have purchased a lot and erected a building so as to have a place in which to dispose of its wares. If so, it was not in violation of law for it to lease such place and sublet it to others. Such transaction was germane to the purposes of the corporation defendant and not foreign to it. Winterfield v. Cream City Brewing Co., 96 Wis. 239, 71 N. W. 101; National Brewing Co. v. Ahlgren, 63 Ill. App. 475; Standard Brewery v. Kelly, 66 Ill. App. 267; Koehler & Co. v. Reinheimer, 26 App. Div. 1, 49 N. Y. Supp. 755; Glass v. Heim Brewing Co., 47 Mo. App. 639.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

(158 Cal. 550)

Ex parte WILLIAMS. (Cr. 1,644.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1910.)

Municipal Corporations (§ 594*)—Police Power—Ordinances—Picketing.

A municipal ordinance declaring that "picketing," for the purpose of intimidating and threatening the employés of a private industrial concern, is a misdemeanor, is a valid exercise of municipal power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1316–1318; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

Application by J. J. Williams for a writ of habeas corpus directed against the Police Court of the City of Los Angeles. Writ denied.

Austin Lewis, R. M. Royce, and Geo. F. Snyder, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus which has been denied by the court.

The prisoner was arrested upon a complaint accusing him of violating a penal ordinance of the city of Los Angeles. The ordinance is quite comprehensive in its enumeration of the acts which it declares to be misdemeanors, and the prisoner was charged in the information with two distinct offenses, as defined by the ordinance: First, with "loitering" on a public street in front of the Fulton Engine Works, for the purpose of inducing and influencing persons to refrain from doing and performing services and labor at said works; second, with "picketing" in front of said works, for the purpose of intimidating, threatening, and coercing such persons.

It is argued in support of the petition that the ordinance is invalid. As to the provision concerning "picketing," for the purpose of intimidation, threatening, etc., I have no doubt that it is a valid exercise of the powers of the local Legislature. As to the provisions relating to "loitering," I have very serious doubts. They are so vaguely comprehensive that a person stopping on the street anywhere in the vicinity of a place of business for the purpose of dissuading an employé from continuing in his employment might be convicted of a misdemeanor.

I therefore concur in the order denying the writ, only upon the ground that the charge of picketing for the purpose of intimidation, etc., gives the police court jurisdiction to try the charge.

---

14 Cal. App. 323

ASTON v. ASTON. (Civ. 835.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 5, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 874*)—Appeal from Order Denying New Trial—Questions Reviewable.

The overruling of a demurrer is not reviewable on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3478; Dec. Dig. § 874.*]

2. Divorce (§ 286*)—Appeal—Scope of Review—Order Denying New Trial.

The action of the court in awarding all the community property to a wife obtaining a divorce cannot be questioned on appeal from an order denying a new trial, but only on appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

3. Divorce (§ 249*)—Dispossession of Community Property—Power of Court.

Where a divorce is granted to a wife for the husband's adultery, the court may in its discretion give all the community property to her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 701–705, 707, 709, 710, 712; Dec. Dig. § 249.*]

4. Divorce (§ 129*)—Grounds—Evidence.

Adultery justifying a divorce may be established by circumstantial evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 411–441; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

5. Divorce (§ 129*)—Grounds—Evidence.

Evidence held to show a husband's adultery justifying the granting of a divorce to the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 411–441; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

6. DIVORCE (§ 179*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—REVIEW.

Where, in a suit by a wife for divorce on the ground of adultery, the court admitted in evidence an instrument signed by the husband's paramour, reciting that the husband had consented to the paramour's sale of her real estate, on condition that evidence connecting the husband with the instrument would be offered, and a subsequent instrument signed by the husband and his paramour, and referring to the former instrument, was introduced to connect the husband with the prior instrument, the husband, failing to object to the sufficiency of the evidence to connect him with the prior instrument, could not urge on appeal that the court erred in admitting the prior instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 565; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

7. DIVORCE (§ 115*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit by a wife for divorce on the ground of adultery, instruments signed by the husband and his paramour, indicating that the paramour held herself out as his wife and that he held her out as his wife, were admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 371-378; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Action for divorce by Philip Aston against Honora Aston, who filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From an order denying a new trial after judgment for defendant on the cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. McGuire and Z. N. Goldsby, for appellant. Cassin & Lucas, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action to obtain a decree of divorce from his wife, Honora Aston. Defendant, however, obtained a decree of divorce from plaintiff upon the grounds of desertion and adultery, pleaded in her amended and supplemental cross-complaint. By the decree defendant was awarded all the community property. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and from the order denying his motion he appealed to this court. There is no appeal from the judgment.

Appellant urges that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the amended and supplemental cross-complaint. But the action of the court in overruling a demurrer is not open to review upon an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Moore v. Douglas, 132 Cal. 400, 64 Pac. 705; Morse v. Wilson, 138 Cal. 559, 71 Pac. 801.

Appellant also urges that the court erred in awarding all the community property to respondent. This is also an attack upon the judgment that may only be raised by an appeal from the judgment. But the divorce in this case was granted both for desertion and adultery committed by appellant. By reason of the divorce being granted for adultery, the court had the power in its discretion to give all the community property to the innocent party. Miller v. Miller, 33 Cal. 353.

Appellant contends that the finding that appellant committed adultery with a woman named Perez, at a house numbered 709 Fifth street in the city of Oakland, is not sustained by the evidence. Appellant left the home of plaintiff and defendant at Santa Cruz in 1891. The evidence tends to show that in 1905 appellant was living with a woman at 709 Fifth street in the city of Oakland. That this woman, with appellant's knowledge and apparent consent, referred to him as her husband, used his name, and he likewise referred to her as his wife and designated her as Mrs. R. A. Aston. This is particularly evidenced by a writing, signed by this woman, as follows: "My husband, Philip H. Aston, having consented to the sale of my real estate in Alvarado, Alameda Co., Cal., as per contract with E. D. Wilbur, dated at Oakland, Cal., October 16th, 1905, I hereby confirm the same, this 21st day of October, 1905. (Signed) Mrs. R. A. Aston." And in connection therewith a writing signed by appellant as follows: "I hereby consent to the above, and agree to any disposition that my wife (Mrs. R. A. Aston) cares to make of her separate property. (Signed) P. H. Aston." The children of this woman addressed the appellant as "Papa." The evidence tends to show that this woman's real name was Perez. Upon the day of the above transaction appellant and the Perez woman were found apparently living in the same house, and clearly represented themselves as husband and wife.

Adultery may be established by circumstantial evidence (Evans v. Evans, 41 Cal. 103), and that is the usual way in which it is proven. The evidence supports the inference that appellant and the woman Perez (alias Mrs. R. A. Aston) were living together in adultery, and the finding as to the adultery of the appellant is supported by the evidence.

Appellant also contends that the court erred in admitting in evidence the writing referred to in the above document as the "contract with E. D. Wilbur, dated at Oakland, Cal., October 16th, 1905," and some correspondence between "Mrs. R. A. Aston" and Wilbur, occurring intermediate October 16, 1905 and October 21, 1905. None of these writings were signed in the presence of appellant, and they were objected to when offered. Upon objection being made to the offer of the first of these writings, dated October 16, 1905, and signed "Mrs. R. A. Aston," the court asked the attorney for defendant if he proposed "to follow this up with other proof that will connect it," to which he replied that he did, and thereupon the court overruled the objection. While the same question and answer were not put and made when the other writings were offered, we think it is apparent that the court and counsel understood that they were offered and received under the same conditions. Finally, defendant did put in evidence the instrument dated October 21, 1905, signed by both appellant and "Mrs. R. A. Aston," and referring to the first writing objected to and received in evidence. It is perfectly clear from the record that this last writing was the evidence that defendant relied on as connecting the others with appellant. There was a certain connection shown. The last document, which was clearly admissible against appellant, referred to the first, and all the preceding writings were in connection with and leading up to the final transaction of October 21st. The purpose of all the evidence in question was to show that the woman, with appellant's knowledge, held herself out as the wife of appellant, and that he held her out as such wife, and held himself out as her husband. The last document clearly shows this. If appellant did not think the connection sufficiently shown by the last document, we think fairness to the trial court and opposing counsel required that he should have moved to strike out the evidence admitted over his objection.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We find no error requiring a reversal of the order denying the motion for a new trial, and the order is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 326

CLARK v. BELL. (Civ. 803.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 6, 1910.)

1. Payment (§ 55*) — Plea of Payment — Counterclaim.

Plaintiff sued on an assigned claim of an indebtedness for work and materials in the sum of $1,864.01, less $1,342.69 paid plaintiff's assignor before assignment. Defendant pleaded further payment, before the assignment, to plaintiff's assignor for materials furnished the assignor and used in the work under the assignor's authority to the amount of $396.50, and demanded credit for such sum. Held that, the plea with reference to such additional sum was properly pleaded in the answer as a defense in the nature of a plea of payment, made at the instance of plaintiff's assignor, and not as a counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 142; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 171*)—Findings—Issues—Objection—Estoppel.

Where parties have proceeded to trial on a pleading without objection to its sufficiency to raise a particular issue, and evidence has been received as to the fact and the issue found upon, the party whose duty it was to object will not be heard on appeal to say that the finding is not within the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053–1069, 1161–1165; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by William H. Clark against W. M. Bell. Judgment for plaintiff for less than the relief demanded, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Schweitzer & Hutton, for appellant. E. V. Chavez and A. J. Mitchell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was upon an assigned claim growing out of a contract between plaintiff's assignor and defendant, whereby the court finds that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff's assignor, on account of the performance of certain work and the furnishing of certain materials, the sum of $1,864.01; that defendant had paid plaintiff's assignor before the assignment the sum of $1,342.69; that, in addition, defendant had paid before the assignment for certain materials furnished plaintiff's assignor in the work, and which under the contract he was given authority to pay, the further sum of $396.50, which would, under the findings, leave a balance due plaintiff of $124.82. During the progress of the trial leave was given defendant to amend his answer upon payment of $13 costs. The latter amount the court by stipulation incorporated in the judgment, and gave plaintiff a judgment for $137.82. Plaintiff appeals upon the ground that the credit of $396.50 was improperly allowed, because it was in the nature of a counterclaim and no averments appear with reference to payment before the assignment.

The averments with reference to the payment of $396.50 were not in the nature of a counterclaim, but were matters of defense as a plea of payment made at the instance of plaintiff's assignor. It is averred that under the contract between the parties the right to pay this sum was accorded defendant. No demurrer was filed to the answer or amended answer and the same were treated by the parties as presenting proper issues. The court finds as a fact that the payment of the $396.50 was before the assignment. "It is well settled that where the parties have proceeded to trial upon a pleading, without objection to its sufficiency to raise a particular issue, and evidence has been received as to the fact and the issue found upon, the party whose duty it was to object will not be heard in this court to say that the finding is not within the issues." Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 297, 47 Pac. 63.

An evident misprint appears in the conclusions of law, whereby a seeming disparity between the findings and such conclusions exists as to the amount of the contract price; but it in no manner affects the judgment as rendered and needs no correction or attention.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

14 Cal. App. 338

KEIFER v. MYERS. (Civ. 826.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 7, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 5, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 5, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1097*)—SUBSEQUENT APPEAL—LAW OF THE CASE.

A decision of the court on appeal construing agreements between the parties and determining their legal effect, is the law of the case on a subsequent appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4358; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 397*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING WRITTEN AGREEMENTS.

The right to prove by parol the facts establishing a contract different from that expressed in a writing evidencing the contract is confined to those cases where an equity is sought to be shown superior to the writing, which equity a court of chancery will enforce by annulling or reforming the instrument or limiting its operation, or enjoining its use, and under this rule instruments purporting to grant absolute rights may be shown to have been intended to possess some limited character, but the right to defeat an expressed equity by destructive parol proof is not within the rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1756–1765; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 400*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

In the absence of fraud or mistake justifying reformation, a written agreement of pledge cannot be shown by parol to be an agreement of absolute sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

4. PLEDGES (§ 44*)—TENDER—EFFECT AS DISCHARGE.

A tender of the amount due under a pledge is, by Civ. Code, § 1504, a performance of the obligation at the date of tender, and hence fixes the amount which may be required of the pledgor as a condition of redemption, so that no voluntary payments thereafter made by the pledgee can be added to such amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. H. Keifer against R. H. Myers. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank G. Finlayson, W. R. Hervey, and R. H. Myers, for appellant. Lynn Helm and E. S. Williams, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This was an equitable action wherein plaintiff sought a decree adjudging him the owner of certain shares of the capital stock of a laundry company. The issue presented was as to the character of the transfer to defendant of such shares. The trial court found the transaction to be a pledge of the shares, and not an absolute sale, and plaintiff was decreed appropriate relief.

The principal question involved herein was before this court upon a former appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. Keifer v. Myers, 5 Cal. App. 668, 91 Pac. 163. Upon that appeal, as upon this, the written agreements entered into between the parties with reference to the transfer and indorsement of the certificates of stock were before this court, and in the first appeal this court construed such agreements and determined that upon their face the same were clearly intended to be and were agreements relating to a pledge. That construction of the agreements and the legal effect which should be given the same has become the law of the case. We cannot, therefore, upon this appeal, consider appellant's contention that the same should be construed or held otherwise.

There remains, however, another question presented by the record, and that is as to the action of the trial court in sustaining an objection to evidence offered by defendant of conversations between the parties leading up to and culminating in the execution of the agreements as indicating the effect which the parties intended should be given thereto; the question propounded being: "State all the facts leading up to and attending the making of the contract between yourself and Mr. Keifer relating to the transfer to you of 198 shares of stock of the Sanitary Laundry Company owned by Mr. Keifer; what was said and done by each of you?" Appellant insists that the equitable rule long established, and as followed by our Supreme Court in Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 125, and numerous other cases, is applicable to a case of the character here presented. The Pierce Case, as in all cases which have come under our observation, wherein the right to prove by parol facts tending to establish a contract different from that expressed by the language of the instrument, is confined to those cases where an equity is sought to be shown superior to the terms of the instrument, which equity a court of chancery will enforce by annulling or reforming the instrument, or limiting its operation, or enjoining its use. Under this rule, deeds may be shown to be mortgages and other instruments purporting to grant absolute rights may be shown to have been intended to possess some limited character. But the right to defeat an expressed equity by destructive parol proof is not comprehended within the rule. In our opinion, the written agreement of pledge cannot be shown by parol to be an agreement of absolute sale, no more than a mortgage, which is but a lien, may by parol be shown to have been intended as a grant of the property described. That in cases of the nature here presented evidence is not admissible dehors the instrument to establish a character different from that expressed by the language employed. Whatever rights exist in cases analogous to the one under consideration, if the instrument through fraud or mistake does not express the real agreement, must be worked out through a reformation of the contract under appropriate pleadings and subject to the rules and sufficiency of the evidence in actions of that character. Gardner v. Cal. Guarantee Co., 137 Cal. 71, 69 Pac. 844. We think the court did not err in its fixation of the amount requisite to redemption from the pledge. A tender of the amount due under a pledge has the effect of performance of all incidents of the obligation at the date of the tender. Section 1504, Civ. Code. The refusal of defendant to accept the tender based upon a disavowal of a pledge and a claim of absolute ownership renders subsequent payments by the pledgee as voluntary in their character. "No man can be a debtor for money paid unless it was at his request." Curtis v. Parks, 55 Cal. 106; Huddleston v. Washington, 136 Cal. 519, 69 Pac. 146.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We have examined the other specifications of error, all of which relate to rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, and those specifications not covered by the principles hereinbefore declared are not of a character which would warrant a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 321

Ex parte BOHANNON. (Civ. 295.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 5, 1910.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 206*)—GRANTS OF SPECIAL IMMUNITIES—REGULATION OF PRACTICE OF MEDICINE—EXEMPTIONS FROM GENERAL LAW.

In St. 1907, c. 212, Gen. Laws 1910, p. 609, Act 2163, "for the regulation of the practice of medicine," etc., the proviso "that nothing herein shall be held to apply or to regulate any kind of treatment by prayer," even if prayer can be regarded as practicing medicine and as a privilege or immunity, extends such privilege to all, and is not an exemption from the general law, which would make the whole act unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 625–648; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

Petition by J. L. Bohannon for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

Gibson & Woolner, H. A. Stout, and Burton J. Wyman, for petitioner.

COOPER, P. J. Petitioner desires to have a writ of habeas corpus to obtain his release from imprisonment under a judgment rendered in a court of competent jurisdiction, convicting him of unlawfully practicing medicine without having a license or a valid unrevoked certificate authorizing him to practice medicine, contrary to the provisions of the law in such case made and provided. The act under which the petitioner was convicted is entitled "An act for the regulation of the practice of medicine and surgery, osteopathy, or other system or means of treating the sick or afflicted in the state of California; for the appointment of a Board of Medical Examiners in the matter of said regulation." St. 1907, p. 252; Gen. Laws, 1910, p. 609, Act 2163. The act concludes with the following exception or proviso: "Provided that nothing herein shall be held to apply or to regulate any kind of treatment by prayer." It is claimed that the latter exemption makes the whole act unconstitutional and void, and that it gives to a certain class of persons, to wit, those who treat physical ills by prayer, privileges and immunities which "under like conditions are not granted to all citizens."

We do not so construe the section. If prayer can be regarded as practicing medicine and as an immunity, the act allows every person, man, woman or child, such immunity and the right to pray for the sick and afflicted, and that is the only way that disease can be treated by prayer. Whether such treatment avails anything or not is not for us to say; but the privilege of practicing such treatment or such supplication is granted and allowed to all. A prayer is only a reverent petition to some divinity or object of worship. It has been said, "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." Those who believe in the teachings of holy writ attach great importance to the efficacy of prayer. Many examples of it are given in the New Testament. For instance, where Peter's wife's mother lay sick of a fever we are told that the Savior "touched her hand and the fever left her, and she arose and ministered unto them." The proviso or exception was evidently put into the act to prevent any interference with the right of any one to pray for the sick and afflicted.

Writ denied.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 334

PEOPLE v. MOCK YICK GAR. (Cr. 273.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 7, 1910.)

1. MARRIAGE (§ 50*) — PRESUMPTION FROM REPUTATION—STATUTES.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 30, that a man and woman are living together as husband and wife is prima facie sufficient to show a lawful contract of marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 79–89; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

Defendant was charged with placing his wife in a house of prostitution contrary to Pen. Code, § 266g, and in his defense testified, as did another witness, to the effect that he had previously married in China a woman with whom he had lived as husband and wife, and who was still living, and from whom he had never been divorced, and this testimony was not contradicted. Held, that the evidence was not improbable in itself, and could not be disregarded by the jury, and as it was sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to the existence of a prior marriage which would preclude a conviction, a verdict of conviction should be reversed as contrary to the evidence.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Mock Yick Gar was convicted upon the charge of placing his wife in a house of prostitution, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Carroll Cook, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Fred L. Berry, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged with placing his wife in a house of prostitution. He was convicted, and has appealed to this court from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The evidence shows without conflict that defendant was married to the prosecutrix, a Japanese woman, at Redwood City on the 18th day of April, 1907. The ceremony was performed by a justice of the peace. On or about May 1, 1909, defendant placed the said woman, who had been a prostitute before the marriage, in a house of prostitution in the city and county of San Francisco, and there lived with her for a considerable time. Defendant mainly relied on the defense that he was never lawfully married to the Japanese woman, for the reason that at the time of the marriage ceremony between them he had a wife living in China to whom he had been married, and from whom he had never been divorced. In support of this defense the uncle of defendant testified that he was present with defendant in China when a marriage ceremony was performed between defendant and a Chinese woman, that he afterwards visited defendant at his home, and that defendant and the Chinese woman lived together as husband and wife. Defendant also testified that he went through the Chinese marriage ceremony with a Chinese woman in China in 1897, and they afterwards lived together as husband and wife, and as a result a child was born to them, and that the woman is still living; that he had never been divorced from her, and since his return to the United States had sent her support all the time, and ever since the ceremony was performed had treated her as his lawful wife. No attempt was made to contradict the evidence given by defendant and his uncle, and the testimony of each showed that the marriage ceremony with the Chinese woman was performed before the ceremony with the Japanese woman took place.

The section of the Penal Code (266g) under which the information is drawn is directed against a person placing his wife in a house of prostitution. Unless the Japanese woman was the wife of defendant he was not guilty of the offense charged. She was not his wife, notwithstanding the marriage ceremony with her, if defendant, at the time of such ceremony, had a wife living from whom he had never been divorced. The uncontradicted testimony of defendant and his uncle proved such to be the case. While the details of the ceremony with the Chinese woman were not given, it was shown that after such ceremony the Chinese woman and defendant lived together as husband and wife. This was prima facie evidence of a marriage. A man and woman deporting themselves as husband and wife are presumed to have entered into a lawful contract of marriage. Section 1963, subd. 30, Code Civ. Proc. Unless the jury had the right to entirely disregard the uncontradicted evidence of defendant and his uncle, defendant should have been acquitted.

While the jurors are the judges of the value of evidence addressed to them, their power is not an arbitrary one, but must be exercised with legal discretion and in subordination to the rules of evidence. Section 2061, Code Civ. Proc. There are cases where, because of the improbability of the testimony given, the court or jury may disregard it and give it no effect (County of Sonoma v. Stofen, 125 Cal. 32, 57 Pac. 681; Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 639; People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833). But we have been cited to no case where it has been held that uncontradicted testimony, that is in no respect improbable in itself, may be utterly rejected. The testimony given by defendant and his uncle concerning the prior marriage was in no way improbable. The defendant, after living in this country for a considerable time, returned to China for a time. This was proven by witnesses for the people. According to the uncontradicted testimony of of the defense, while in China on this visit he was married to a Chinese woman, and he and she subsequently lived together as husband and wife, and a child was born to them. That defendant should have been married on his visit to China is not improbable. It must be remembered that defendant was not required to prove his innocence. It was quite sufficient if there was any reasonable doubt of his guilt. His guilt depended upon the fact that he was not already married when he married the Japanese woman. The law does not require that such prior marriage be proved by a preponderance of evidence. It is sufficient if the evidence raises a reasonable doubt as to the existence of such prior marriage. People v. Roberts,

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

122 Cal. 377, 55 Pac. 137; People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 Pac. 1067.

The evidence of the prior marriage, being uncontradicted and in no respect improbable in itself, there was no conflict in the evidence upon this point. Certainly no unbiased and reasonable man can say that there was no reasonable doubt as to the existence of the prior marriage. The existence of a reasonable doubt as to the prior marriage required that the defendant be acquitted of the charge for which he was tried. The jury, in disregard of the uncontradicted and in no way improbable testimony, found the defendant guilty as charged. It must be held that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and for that reason the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

I concur: KERRIGAN, J.

COOPER, C. J. I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice HALL in this case, and desire to add that the testimony of the prosecutrix (a Japanese woman) is such that it is extremely doubtful in my mind if it would support the verdict. She had been a prostitute, living in a house of prostitution, for some time before she claimed to have married defendant. She afterwards, apparently with the knowledge and consent of defendant, returned to her former mode of life. Evidently some trouble arose between the prosecutrix and defendant, either by reason of his appropriating or using money of her earnings, or otherwise. It appears from the record that she had the defendant arrested twice before the present charge—once for embezzlement, and failing in that, for bigamy, and finally, being unsuccessful in that, for the present crime of placing her in a house of prostitution. The statute provides (Pen. Code, § 266g): "Every man who, by force, intimidation, threats, persuasion, promises, or any other means, places or leaves * * * his wife in a house of prostitution * * * is guilty of a felony and punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than three nor more than ten years." It was evidently the purpose of the Legislature to punish the man who is so lost to all principles of decency as to force, intimidate, or persuade his wife to live in a house of prostitution, and for the purpose of protecting the innocent and virtuous wife. It could not have been intended for the punishment of a man who marries a prostitute and continues to live with her in a house of prostitution, which abode she voluntarily selected. In such case the man has not by his act caused his wife to enter and enlist in the army of prostitutes who ply their vocation. She was already there; and, while it is a low order of man who will live with such a woman, the statute does not make it a crime to do so.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

158 Cal. 389

ALL NIGHT AND DAY BANK v. SUPERIOR COURT, IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (S. F. 5,654.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 20, 1910. Rehearing Denied Oct. 19, 1910.) In Bank. The All Night and Day Bank against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, and another. On application for writ of mandate. Writ denied. Gavin McNab and R. P. Henshall, for petitioners. John D. Pope and W. G. Cooke, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. It is ordered that the petition of the All Night and Day Bank and Newton J. Skinner, president, and W. J. Connor, secretary, of the All Night and Day Bank, for the appointment of an officer, as receiver, with whom the shares of stock—mentioned in the petition herein—may be assigned, be and the same is hereby denied; and that the petition of the said parties for a supersedeas and restraining order be granted to the following extent only: It is ordered that within five (5) days from this date said All Night and Day Bank and Newton J. Skinner, president, and W. J. Connor, secretary, issue to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, as receiver, 1,155 shares of the capital stock of the All Night and Day Bank, being the same stock mentioned in their petition, and that the said receiver hold and vote and otherwise fully represent said stock, subject always to the orders and control of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, pending the appeal in the said action of Hugh Blue, Trustee, v. All Night and Day Bank et al., and that in all other respects execution of the judgment be stayed pending appeal.

158 Cal. 376

MOORE v. DONOVAN. (L. A. 2,292.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1910.) In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge. Action by Mary O'Connor Moore, administratrix of Patrick Moore, deceased, against Aggie Donovan. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed. C. P. Kaetzel (P. F. Dunne, of counsel), for appellant. Paul M. Gregg and W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It has been agreed by the parties to this appeal, by stipulation filed herein, that the appeal may be submitted upon the transcript on file in this case and upon the briefs on file in the case of Mary O'Connor Moore, Administratrix, etc., v. Mrs. George Trott (L. A. No. 2,103), which was decided by this court for reasons given in the opinion therein filed on October 8, 1909. 156 Cal. 353, 104 Pac. 578. The present case involves the question of the delivery of a deed which was given in escrow to Mr. Teitzen in the same inclosure, at the same time, and under the same circumstances as the deed under consideration in Moore v. Trott, supra. It was decided by the court below in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals from an order denying her motion for a new trial. Upon the authority of the decision in Moore v. Trott, and for like reasons, the order of the superior court denying a new trial is reversed.

14 Cal. App. 277

PEOPLE v. TESTA. (Cr. 275.) (Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 21, 1910.) Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge. Vincent Testa was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed. Louis Ferrari, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and James F. Brennan, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of rape. He was tried and convicted of the offense charged in the information. Thereafter he made a motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, which motions were denied. Defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment. The sole contention in the case is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury. We cannot agree with this contention. The nature of the evidence is such that we will refrain from stating it in detail. It is sufficient to say that the story told by the prosecutrix on the witness stand as to the circumstances of the commission of the offense is not at all improbable. Moreover, it was corroborated in several essential respects by other witnesses, and particularly by a letter written by the defendant while in jail to the parents of the prosecutrix. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

112 PACIFIC REPORTER

158 Cal. 593

In re KILBORN'S ESTATE.

GOULD v. KILBORN.

(L. A. 2,740.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1910.)

1. Wills (§ 282*)—Action to Annul Probate—Allegation as to Testator's Sanity—Sufficiency.

In a proceeding to set aside the probate of a will, the allegation in the petition that testator was not "of sound mind or memory, or in any respect capable of making a will," was a sufficient averment of the ultimate fact, and it was not necessary to aver the character of insanity in more detail.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 640; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

2. Wills (§ 221*) — Action to Annul Probate—Testamentary Capacity.

A testator's unsoundness of mind at the time of making a will is a sufficient ground to sustain an action to annul the probate of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 921*) — Trial by Jury Without Consent of Parties—Review.

Where it was contended on appeal that the trial judge erred in submitting the case to the jury of his own motion, the judge's error must be shown, so that, where the only showing concerning it in the record was the judge's recital in the decree, "A jury, having been demanded and ordered by the court, was impaneled and sworn and proceeded to try the issues," it will not be presumed that the jury was summoned other than at the wishes of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 921.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 213*)—Trial by Jury Without Consent of Parties—Necessity of Objecting in Trial Court.

Where no objection was made below to the submission of a case to the jury without consent of parties, it cannot be made on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

5. Wills (§ 400*)—Action to Set Aside Probate—Appeal—Who May Allege Error.

Where, in a proceeding to set aside the probate of a will, the judge did not submit to the jury certain issues because of the lack of evidence to sustain them, with the exception of those relating to undue influence, defendant could not complain of such ruling on appeal, as it was in his favor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

6. Wills (§ 399*)—Probate—Action to Set Aside—Appeal—Record—Contents.

In a proceeding to set aside the probate of a will, the ruling of the trial judge that certain issues should not be submitted to the jury because of the lack of evidence to sustain them will be sustained on appeal, in the absence of any showing that the recital as to the evidence was not true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Petition to revoke the probate of the will of Julia Ann Kilborn, brought by Mary Woodman Kilborn against Will D. Gould. Decree for petitioner, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Blanchard and Will D. Gould, for appellant. James G. Maguire, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order revoking the probate of an alleged will of Julia Ann Kilborn, deceased, and the letters testamentary thereon issued to Will D. Gould, who was named in the will as executor. Gould appeals as executor and also in his own right. The appellant relies solely on matters appearing on the face of the record; the evidence and proceedings on the trial not being presented.

The petition to revoke the probate alleged that at the time of the execution of the will the said Julia Ann Kilborn was not of sound mind, that it was not executed in the manner prescribed by law, and that it was procured by the fraud and undue influence of Will D. Gould and Mrs. O. F. Sawyer, one of the subscribing witnesses thereto. The cause was tried by a jury and a verdict returned to the effect that the execution of the will was obtained by the exercise of undue influence by Mr. Gould and Mrs. Sawyer, acting jointly.

The first point urged by the appellant is that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the petition to revoke. The demurrer is based in part upon the ground that the petition is uncertain in that it does not set forth any facts showing that the testator was not of sound and disposing mind and memory and not acting under duress or menace or fraud, or undue influence of any person whatever, at the time she made the will. The petition alleges that at the time the testator made and subscribed the will she was not "of sound mind or memory, or in any respect capable of making a will." This is a sufficient allegation of the ultimate fact. It is not necessary to aver more particularly the character of the insanity. Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 279. As to the allegations relating to undue influence, we need only say that it is not necessary to aver that the testator was not acting under undue influence, in order to revoke probate of the will. If it is relied on as ground for revocation, it is necessary to allege that the testator was acting under undue influence and was thereby caused to execute the will, stating the facts. The insertion of the word "not" in the demurrer may be a clerical error. It is not explained or excused by the appellant. We might disregard it if good reason appeared and a meritorious case was presented. But the case was tried on the merits on the issue of undue influence alone. The appellant was not under any misapprehension with regard to the facts to be offered against him, nor in any wise misled by the uncertainty in this respect. The pleading is not a model, but the facts are stated with considerable detail, though not with great skill, and we are disposed to treat the demurrer according to its literal meaning. Even if we treated it otherwise, the defect in the complaint, if any, is so insignificant that it should be deemed cured by the verdict.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

With respect to the contention that the petition does not "state facts sufficient to constitute a contest for revocation of said last will," it is sufficient to say that the averment that the testator was not of sound mind when she made the will, in connection with the other formal allegations, concerning which there is no question, is all that is necessary to answer this ground of demurrer. Estate of Gharky, supra.

Appellant further urges that the court below erred in ordering a trial by jury of its own motion. The only evidence in the record to show that it did so is the recital in the decree of revocation, as follows: "A jury, having been demanded and ordered by the court, was impaneled and sworn and proceeded to try the issues." The natural meaning of these words is that the court ordered a jury trial in compliance with the demand of one or the other of the parties. As error must be shown and is not presumed, we cannot presume that this language was intended to express other than its ordinary and obvious meaning. Furthermore, it does not appear that the appellant objected to a trial by jury, and he cannot avail himself here of an objection of that character not made in the court below.

The decree recites that the issues other than those relating to undue influence were not submitted to the jury because there was not sufficient evidence to justify such submission. This was the equivalent of a nonsuit as to these other issues. It was a ruling in favor of the appellant of which he cannot complain. In the absence of anything to show that the recital as to the evidence is not true, we must accept it as a fact.

The above are the only points urged by the appellant as ground for reversal. They are obviously without substantial merit.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

158 Cal. 596

HOFF et ux. v. LOS ANGELES-PACIFIC CO. (L. A. 2,567.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 19, 1910.)

1. TRIAL (§ 165*)—MOTION FOR NONSUIT—EVIDENCE.

A motion for nonsuit admits the truth of the plaintiff's evidence, and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—JURY QUESTION.

Negligence is a question of fact for the jury, though there be no conflict of evidence, if different conclusions can be therefrom rationally drawn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 277–306; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

3. STREET RAILROADS (§ 98*)—DUTY OF PERSON CROSSING TRACK—CARE REQUIRED.

While one about to cross a street railway track is not held to that high degree of care required in case of a steam railroad running through the country, he must exercise such care as is reasonable under all the circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 204–209; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTIONS.

One in great peril, where immediate action is necessary to avoid it, is not required to exercise that carefulness required of a prudent man under ordinary circumstances, and the reasonableness of his effort to escape injury after discovering the danger is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 333–336; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

5. STREET RAILROADS (§ 117*)—COLLISION WITH VEHICLE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

In an action for injuries in a collision between plaintiff's automobile and defendant street railway's car, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence held, under the evidence, for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 239–257; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Cory C. Hoff and wife against the Los Angeles-Pacific Company (a corporation). From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Gray, Barker & Bowen and Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for appellants. J. W. McKinley and Gurney E. Newlin (Roy V. Reppy, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Alta May Hoff, the wife of her coplaintiff, in a collision in the city of Los Angeles between an automobile in which she was riding and which was being operated by her husband, and two electric cars of defendant, coupled together and operated by defendant's servants. The collision occurred at the intersection of Sixteenth street, along which defendant operated a double-track electric street railway, with Western avenue, about 5 o'clock p. m. on August 23, 1908. Mr. Hoff was endeavoring to cross defendant's tracks at such intersection with his automobile, containing himself, his wife, and four other persons, when the machine was struck a little back of its center by defendant's cars, which were proceeding along Sixteenth street from the west, with the result that the machine was violently thrown quite a distance, and Mrs. Hoff severely injured.

The motion for a nonsuit was granted on the ground that the plaintiffs' evidence showed that Mr. Hoff was guilty of contributory negligence. It is conceded by defendant for the purposes of this appeal that such evidence showed negligence on the part of defendant's motorman, in that at the time of the collision defendant's cars were being propelled at a rate of speed in excess of that allowed by an ordinance of the city; such ordinance prohibiting a rate of speed in excess of eight miles per hour over any crossing in the district including the intersection of Sixteenth street and Western avenue, and that no bell was rung and no whistle blown as the cars approached this crossing.

Learned counsel for defendant freely concede the correctness of the rule stated as to the review of the action of trial courts in granting nonsuits in cases of this character in Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. R. Co., 3 Cal. App. 606, 609, 86 Pac. 738, 739, as follows: "The motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant. If there is any evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's action, the nonsuit should be denied, without passing upon the sufficiency of such evidence, and, where there is a conflict in the evidence, some of which tends to sustain the plaintiff's case, a motion for a nonsuit should not be granted. Nor is there any dispute as to the well-settled rule "that negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be rationally drawn from the evidence," and that, if but one conclusion can reasonably be reached from the evidence, it is a question of law for the court; but if one sensible and impartial man might decide that the plaintiff had exercised ordinary care, and another equally sensible and impartial man that he had not exercised such care, it must be left to the jury." Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 229, 53 Pac. 651. "It has often been said by this court that it is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown. As a general rule, it is a question of fact for the jury, an inference to be deduced from the circumstances of each particular case, and it is only where the deduction to be drawn is inevitably that of negligence that the court is authorized to withdraw the question from the jury. * * * If the conceded facts are such that reasonable minds might differ upon the question as to whether or not one was negligent, the question is one of fact for the jury." Seller v. Market Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 271, 72 Pac. 1006. In view of these well-established rules, we are of the opinion that the trial court erred in granting the motion for a nonsuit.

While it is true that one about to cross the track of a street railway is, as said in Kernan v. Market Street Ry. Co., 137 Cal. 326, 70 Pac. 81, "not held to that high degree of care which is required in the case of an ordinary steam railroad running through the country, on which heavy trains of cars are moved at a high rate of speed and cannot be quickly stopped or controlled" (see, also, Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 Pac. 908), he must, of course, exercise such care as is reasonable under all the conditions, rights, and circumstances (Scott v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 610, 93 Pac. 677), and, if he fails to do so with the result that his own negligence contributes to the accident in which he is injured, he cannot recover, in the absence of the application to the other party of the doctrine of what is called in our decisions the last clear chance doctrine. The care required has been declared to be "that degree of care which people of ordinarily prudent habits—people in general—could be reasonably expected to exercise under the circumstances of a given case" (Driscoll v. Cable Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 567, 32 Pac. 591, 592 [33 Am. St. Rep. 203]), "that degree of care and prudence and good sense which men who possess those qualities in an ordinary or average degree exercise" under similar conditions (Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 278, 55 Pac. 908). While undoubtedly in some cases the facts may be such as to leave no room for doubt in the mind of any reasonable person as to the negligence of a plaintiff, as in Bailey v. Market Street, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 320, 42 Pac. 914, where the plaintiff standing between two tracks waiting for a car stepped backward without looking upon one of the tracks in the face of an approaching car that was within a very few feet of her, the question of negligence is generally one upon which reasonable persons may well differ. We think that the evidence in this case construed most favorably to plaintiffs, as they are entitled to have it construed, presents such a case.

It is not seriously contended that the evidence compels the conclusion that Dr. Hoff's conduct after he first saw the approaching cars was such as to show contributory negligence on his part as matter of law. At that time he was from six to eight feet from the track upon which the cars were approaching, with the front of his machine nearly on the track, and traveling at a rate of speed of five or six miles an hour. As we must on this appeal, we are considering the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiffs. He then saw the cars approaching at a point apparently about 100 or 125 feet away. He almost immediately increased his speed in an endeavor to get over the track. It is not at all clear that this was not his only chance to escape a collision under the existing circumstances, for the evidence is such as to warrant the conclusion that he could not then have stopped his machine before it reached the railroad track. But it is to be remembered "that a person in great peril, where immediate action is necessary to avoid it, is not required to exercise all of that presence of mind and carefulness which are justly required of a careful and prudent man under ordinary circumstances," and that the reasonableness of his effort to escape injury after discovery of the danger is a question for the jury to be determined by them in view of all the circumstances. Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 514, 521, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85; Bilton v. Southern Pacific Co., 148 Cal. 443, 450, 83 Pac. 440. It is further to be borne in mind that the evidence is of such a nature that it may reasonably be concluded that Mr. Hoff was warranted in assuming that the cars were approaching at such a rate of speed that they would not cross Western avenue at a greater rate than eight miles an hour, the speed allowed by the ordinance (see Scott v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 93 Pac. 677), and that, if such had been the fact, it would have been entirely reasonable to assume that the crossing would be made in safety.

Learned counsel for defendant assumes that Mr. Hoff was in a position of peril at the time he discovered the approaching cars, and say that "his negligence consisted in getting into a position of peril through failure to use his sense of sight at the proper point in his approach towards the track." Mr. Hoff testified that he was traveling along Western avenue, between 12 and 15 miles an hour, that he saw the railroad track when he was about half a block away, that he at once looked and listened in both directions as far as he could see, that he heard or saw nothing to indicate the approach of a car, that he began to slow down when about 40 or 50 feet south of the track and decreased his speed until he was going only 5 or 6 miles an hour, that when about 35 feet from the track he looked to the west 150 feet or so and saw no car, that he then looked to the east to see if a car was approaching from that direction, that he then just looked at the track in front seeking a smooth place to go over and then to the west again when he saw the car as before stated, apparently some 100 or 125 feet away. The evidence does not compel the conclusion that he should have seen the car when he looked from a point about 35 feet from the tract. We are at a loss to understand how upon this evidence it can be held as a matter of law that Hoff was guilty of negligence. There is nothing to indicate that the situation at this crossing was such that it was negligent to approach it at a rate of speed of 6 miles an hour. Of course, it was incumbent upon Hoff in so approaching the crossing to use ordinary care to detect the approach of cars on either track, and this involved the exercise of the senses of both sight and hearing on his part to the extent that an ordinarily careful person, regardful of the safety of himself and his companions, would exercise those faculties. See Bailey v. Market St., etc., Co., supra; Scott v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., supra. But we cannot agree that the evidence compels the inference that he refrained from the exercise of such faculties when once he had arrived at a point 35 feet from the track. It must be borne in mind that traveling at 6 miles an hour not more than 4 seconds would elapse between the time he looked to the west 35 feet from the track and the time he again looked and saw the car. In the meantime he had looked to the east to see if there was danger from that point, as it was his clear duty to do, and in so doing was necessarily compelled to momentarily withdrew his eyes from the west, and he had also looked to the front to see that his proposed crossing place was all right, the rails being slightly elevated above the ground, and then immediately looked west again, all this in the short space of four seconds. The best we can say for defendant upon the evidence in this record is that the question whether Hoff was negligent in approaching this crossing is one upon which reasonable men might well differ. This being so, it was a question for the jury, and the trial court should not have granted the motion for a nonsuit. We find nothing in the cases cited by learned counsel for defendant that warrants a different conclusion.

In view of our conclusion upon the point discussed, it is unnecessary to consider any other point made for reversal.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

158 Cal. 603

In re LOS ANGELES TRUST CO. (L. A. 2,585.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1910.)

1. JUDGES (§ 39*)—DISQUALIFICATION—RIGHT TO ACT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, providing that no judge shall act in any proceeding where he is disqualified except to arrange the calendar or regulate the order of business, or transfer the proceeding to some other court, a judge who is disqualified to hear a petition under section 1276, by a corporation for leave to change its name, is not disqualified from making the order to show cause, required by section 1277, so as to fix the time for the hearing and direct the notice expressly required by law, since such act does not involve discretion, but relates solely to the arrangement of the calendar and regulation of the order of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 184; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

2. TIME (§ 9*)—COMPUTATION—WEEKS—PUBLICATION OF ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 12, 1277, providing that the time in which any act is to be done must be computed by excluding the first day and including the last, and declaring that an order to show cause why the application of a corporation for leave to change its name should not be granted must be published for four successive weeks, an order to show cause on August 24th, made on July 27th preceding, which was published in every publication of a newspaper published daily except Sundays from and including July 27th to and including August 23d following, was sufficiently published.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. §§ 11-32; Dec. Dig. § 9;* Notice, Cent. Dig. § 29.]

3. COURTS (§ 486*)—TRANSFER OF CAUSE—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, disqualifying a judge in enumerated cases, and requiring him to secure another judge, and when the superior court has more than one department the action shall be transferred to another department, a disqualified judge of a superior court of a county having more than one department, may transfer the proceeding to another department, notwithstanding section 398, relating to change to another county, which is applicable only when as provided in section 397, all the judges of the court are disqualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 486.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1046*)—HARMLESS ERROR—NOTICE OF TRIAL.

The failure of the court on petition by a corporation for leave to change its name to comply with a rule of court as to five days' notice of trial does not affect the jurisdiction, and the corporation objecting to the change could not complain thereof where it was not prejudiced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4129; Dec. Dig. § 1046.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 47*) — PETITION TO CHANGE NAME—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Findings of fact are not required in a proceeding by a corporation under Code Civ. Proc. § 1276 for leave to change its name.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 47*)—PETITION FOR LEAVE TO CHANGE NAME—SUFFICIENCY.

A petition by a corporation for leave to change its name from "Los Angeles Trust Company" to "Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank" which alleges that the corporation proposes to conduct a savings bank department as well as a trust department, and that it will be to its advantage to have its name indicate that fact, states a reason for a change of name within Code Civ. Proc. § 1276, sufficient to warrant the court in granting the petition, unless there is reasonable ground for concluding that the proposed name so closely resembles the name of another corporation that its adoption will tend to deceive the public to the injury of the latter corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 47*)—CHANGE OF NAMES—PROCEEDINGS—OBJECTIONS.

The Los Angeles Trust Company applied for leave to change its name to the "Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank" and showed that it proposed to conduct a savings bank department as well as a trust department. The Los Angeles Savings Bank resisted the application on the ground that the proposed name so closely resembled its own that the change would deceive the public with resulting injury to it. It was not actively engaged in the savings bank business, but had transferred practically all its business to another savings bank, and took no new business, and had only a small amount on deposit. Held, that the change in name was properly allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 387*)—OFFICIAL CERTIFICATE—CONCLUSIVENESS—PAROL EVIDENCE.

A mere declaration by the Secretary of State as to his understanding when he issued a certificate to a corporation is not competent to impeach the certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1698; Dec. Dig. § 387.*]

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 47*)—PROCEEDINGS FOR LEAVE TO CHANGE NAME—EVIDENCE.

Where a corporation resisted the application of another corporation for leave to change its name on the ground that the proposed name so closely resembled its own name that its adoption would tend to deceive the public, evidence of the reasons for the desire to change the name and as to the market value of the name of the objecting corporation was inadmissible, but evidence as to the cessation of active business by the objecting corporation was admissible on the issue of deception of the public and injury to the objecting corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL TO STRIKE OUT TESTIMONY.

The error, if any, in refusing to strike out testimony establishing a fact previously testified to by another witness is not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4195; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Application by the Los Angeles Trust Company for a change of name. From an order permitting the change, the Los Angeles Savings Bank appeals. Affirmed.

Shankland & Chandler, for appellant. Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher (Henry M. Young, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by the Los Angeles Savings Bank, a corporation, from an order of the superior court granting the application of the Los Angeles Trust Company for authorization to change its name to "Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank," made under the provisions of sections 1275–1279, Code Civ. Proc. Appellant objected in the superior court to the granting of such application on the ground substantially that the proposed name so closely resembled its own name that it would tend to deceive the public as to the identity of the two corporations, with the result that it would be injured thereby.

The application of respondent, complying fully with the provisions of section 1276, Code Civ. Proc., was filed with the clerk of the superior court of Los Angeles county during the forenoon of July 27, 1909, and an order was thereupon made by Judge Wilbur, one of the 12 judges of said court, directing all persons interested in said matter to appear in his department on August 24, 1909, at 10 o'clock a. m. to show cause why the application should not be granted, and directing publication for four consecutive weeks of a copy of the order in the Los Angeles Express, a newspaper of general circulation in the county published daily except Sundays. This paper was what is known as an evening paper, being published in the afternoon. The order to show cause was published therein from and including July 27, 1909, to and including August 23, 1909, as often as said paper was published, viz.; every day except Sunday. On August 24, 1909, the matter came on for hearing before Judge Wilbur, respondent and appellant both appearing. Evidence on behalf of the parties was received, and on August 25, 1909, the matter was submitted for decision. On August 27, 1909, counsel for both parties attended at the judge's chambers at his request, and were informed by him that by reason of certain facts that had come to his knowledge it was possible that he was disqualified as matter of law to act as judge in such proceeding. Evidence was received upon the question of Judge Wilbur's disqualification, and on September 2, 1909, Judge Wilbur ordered the matter transferred to department 11 of said court, presided over by Judge Willis, for further proceedings. On September 3, 1909, the matter was taken up before Judge Willis in department 11, both parties being present. Appellant objected to being compelled to proceed at once with the hearing, claiming that such procedure was in violation of a rule of the court requiring five days' notice, and that it was not ready to proceed. Its objections were overruled and a hearing was then had de novo. There is no pretense that it did not produce all the evidence that it desired to present, or that it was at all injured by being compelled to proceed with the hearing on that day. In its order granting respondent's application the trial court specifically found in favor of the allegations of respondent's application, and against the allegations of appellant's remonstrance. The facts in regard to the question of Judge Wilbur's alleged disqualification were substantially as follows: There was no pretense that there was any actual bias. Judge Wilbur and four other gentlemen were the trustees of a trust for charitable purposes known as the Hollenbeck Home, the property held by them as said trustees being certain land on a portion of which a home for indigent women and homeless children was to be erected, and twenty-five shares of stock in the First National Bank of Los Angeles. Certain of the directors of said National Bank held in trust for the stockholders of said bank all of the stock of respondent Trust Company. The Hollenbeck Home trustees received no compensation and had no personal interest in the execution of their trust other than such interest as any person acting as a trustee of a charitable trust might have in its welfare.

Upon the facts we have stated various technical contentions having no real connection with the merits of appellant's opposition to respondent's application are made by learned counsel for appellant.

Although the hearing was had and decision made by a judge admittedly qualified to act—Judge Willis—it is urged that the proceeding must fail because the order to show cause was made by Judge Wilbur, who it is claimed, was disqualified to act at all; section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, providing that no judge shall "sit or act" in "any action or proceeding, to which he is a party or in which he is interested." Assuming purely for the purposes of this decision that upon the facts stated Judge Wilbur was disqualified to sit or act in this proceeding, we are of the opinion that the making of the order to show cause was not such action as is prohibited on the part of the disqualified judge. Section 1277, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that upon the filing of the application in the form prescribed by section 1276, Code of Civil Procedure, the court shall thereupon make an order reciting certain things, and "directing all persons interested in said matter to appear before the court at a time and place specified, not less than four or more than eight weeks from the time of making said order, to show cause why the application for change of name should not be granted." No discretion whatever is given to the court in the matter of making such order. It must be made upon the filing of a petition in the form prescribed by law, and the court simply fixes therein the date when the matter shall come on for hearing. Section 170, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the provisions "shall not apply to the arrangement of the calendar, or to the regulation of the order of business, nor the power of transferring the * * * proceeding to some other court." The whole purpose of the order to show cause is simply to give notice to the general public of the making of the application, and of the time when the same will come on for hearing, so that any person interested may present his objections. In making it the court is simply fixing the time of hearing and directing the notice expressly required by the law. Such action on the part of a judge may well be held to be action relating solely to the arrangement of the calendar and regulation of the order of business. It is not at all analogous to such action as is involved in extending the time within which a bill of exceptions may be filed, where the judge must determine whether good cause for such extension is shown by the applicant. See Johnson v. German, etc., Ins. Co., 150 Cal. 336, 88 Pac. 985.

Section 1277, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the time of hearing specified in the order must be "not less than four or more than eight weeks" from the time of making the order, and that a copy of the order must be published for four successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation printed in the county, if a newspaper be printed therein. The claim that these requirements were not complied with finds no support in the facts above set forth. The requirement as to a full four weeks' publication was complied with by the publication in the Los Angeles Express on every publication day from and including July 27, 1909, to and including August 23, 1909, and such four weeks' publication was completed with the publication in the issue of August 23, 1909. See Derby v. City of Modesto, 104 Cal. 515, 522, 38 Pac. 900; Sherwood v. Wallin, 154 Cal. 735, 738, 99 Pac. 191. And there is absolutely nothing in the record to show that there was not a full four weeks' period between "the time of making such order" and the time fixed for hearing thereby, even if we consider fractions of days. But it is settled by the authorities in this state that in such matters as this section 12, Code Civ. Proc., providing for the exclusion of the first day and the inclusion of the last, is applicable. See Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 514; Hannah v. Green, 143 Cal. 19, 21, 76 Pac. 708; Wilson v. His Creditors, 55 Cal. 476; Dean v. Grimes, 72 Cal. 442, 14 Pac. 178; Hagenmeyer v. Board of Equalization, 82 Cal. 214, 23 Pac. 14; Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 182, 38 Pac. 715; Bellmer v. Blessington, 136 Cal. 3, 68 Pac. 111.

There can be no question of the right of Judge Wilbur to transfer the matter from his department to another department of the same court, instead of to the superior court of another county, for hearing. The statutes clearly contemplate that this shall be the course followed in case of a disqualified judge in counties where there is more than one judge (section 170, Code Civ. Proc.), and the provision in section 398, Code Civ. Proc., relating to a change to another county, is applicable only when all the judges of the county are disqualified, and when, as specified in subdivision 4 of section 397, Code Civ. Proc., "there is no judge of the court qualified to act."

Assuming the applicability of the rule of court as to five days' notice of trial, failure to comply therewith in the matter of hearing before Judge Willis did not affect the jurisdiction, and it is clear that appellant's rights were not prejudiced thereby.

If findings of fact on the part of the trial court were essential, we are satisfied that the recitals in the order must be taken as constituting such findings. We are of the opinion, however, that formal findings of fact are not required in a proceeding of this character. See In re Danford, 108 Pac. 322, 324.

The petition for authorization to change name was in full compliance with the statute, and constituted a sufficient basis for the proceeding and subsequent order. The statute (section 1276, Code Civ. Proc.) provides that the petition must specify "the reason for such change of name." Appellant claims that no good reason was alleged. A reason stated was that as the applicant proposed to conduct a savings bank department as well as a trust department, it believed that it would be to its advantage to have its name indicate that fact, so that its customers and the general public might be informed by its name that it had a savings bank department, and not be led to believe thereby that it conducted only a trust department. This was certainly a compliance with that portion of the law requiring a statement of the reasons for change of name.

It was also a sufficient reason to warrant the court in granting the application, unless there was reasonable ground for concluding that the proposed name so closely resembled the name of appellant that its adoption by respondent would tend to deceive the public as to the identity of the two corporations, with resulting injury to the appellant. In re U. S. Mortgage Co., 83 Hun, 572, 32 N. Y. Supp. 11. This is really the only question in which appellant has any interest. Upon this point, respondent filed in court, in compliance with section 1278, Code Civ. Proc., the certificate of the Secretary of State that the name desired to be used by the applicant is not the corporate name of any corporation existing at said time, and that said name does not so closely resemble the name of any such existing corporation as will tend to deceive. We see no good ground for holding that the decision of the court below to the effect that no substantial right of appellant would be invaded by the proposed change of name was erroneous. It appeared that appellant was no longer actively engaged in the savings bank business, having transferred practically all its business to the Security Savings Bank, and taking no new business, and now having only about $21,000 on deposit. It is apparent that until appellant does engage in active business again, a matter as to which there appears to be no certainty, there can be no probability of confusion existing or the identity of the two corporations being destroyed. If it ever does re-engage in active business along the lines specified in its articles of incorporation, being according to such articles strictly a savings and loan corporation, we are satisfied that the lower court was warranted in holding that the presence of the word "trust" in the proposed name of respondent, which has been a part of its name ever since its incorporation in 1902, will sufficiently serve to characterize it and distinguish it from appellant to prevent injury to appellant, and imposition or deceit upon the public. As said in Re U. S. Mortgage Co., supra: "A mere possibility by the suggestion of extreme instances that might never occur should never be the basis of the court's action, the duty being to determine what with reasonable certainty would be the natural consequences of granting the application."

Several alleged errors of law in the rulings of the court in regard to evidence are specified by appellant, but none is of such a nature as to warrant a reversal. The evidence offered to impeach the certificate of the Secretary of State hereinbefore referred to, consisting of a mere declaration by that officer to appellant's attorneys as to his understanding when he issued the certificate, was not competent for that purpose. The questions asked Mr. Drake by appellant relating to the reasons for the desire to change respondent's name were of no importance so far as the controversy between these parties is concerned. The evidence elicited by respondent from Mr. Sartori on cross-examination in regard to the cessation of active business by appellant was material upon the question at issue between the parties, viz.: that of the deception of the public and injury to appellant in the event of the change of name being had. We do not see how evidence as to market value of appellant's name could assist in the determination of this question. No prejudice could have resulted to appellant from the refusal of the court to strike out certain testimony of Mr. Drake as to information regarding appellant obtained from the report of the bank commissioners. The same facts had already been testified to by Mr. Sartori for appellant.

There is no other matter requiring notice. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

---

158 Cal. 559

McLEMORE v. EXPRESS OIL CO. (S. F. 5,179.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 17, 1910.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 36*)—LOCATION FOR OIL—PROTECTION OF LOCATOR'S RIGHTS BEFORE DISCOVERY.

That one who has made a mining location on government land for oil, which Act Cong. Feb. 11, 1897, c. 216, 29 Stat. 526 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1434), requires to be made under the laws relating to placer mining claims, may without actual possession of the claim be protected from a homestead entry of the land, his location must be valid and complete, for which discovery of oil is essential; and not having made such discovery, he is protected only while in possession, diligently prosecuting his work to a discovery, which means not the pursuit of capital to prosecute the work, or an attempted holding by cabin, lumber or unused derrick, but the diligent continous prosecution of the work, with the expenditure of whatever money may be necessary to the end in view; the laws as to assessment work having no application till the discovery is made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 35*)—HOMESTEADS—COMPLETE ENTRY.

A homestead entry is complete, so as to protect whatever preferential rights the homesteader has, without his actually going on the land, for which he is allowed six months from the date of the entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 74; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 9*)—RIGHT TO EXPLOIT LANDS ENTERED AS HOMESTEAD.

The rule that a homestead entry removes the land out of the public domain is not subject to any exception that without minerals having been discovered on it, and proof of its present value for mineral purposes, another than the homesteader may enter on it merely for the purpose of exploiting it to see if perchance it possesses such value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by C. A. McLemore against the Express Oil Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for appellant. Larkins & Feemster, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The action is in ejectment. Judgment passed for plaintiff, and from that judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial it appeals. The controversy is between a claimant to government land under homestead entry, and a claimant to the same land under a purported mining location. An attempted location had been made by eight associates, defendant's grantors, under the placer mining laws. The valuable mineral sought to be discovered was oil. This was in January, 1906. A cabin was constructed upon the claim, its boundaries were marked, some bits of road built, and, in the language of appellant's brief, work had been done and improvements made upon the claim "far in excess of the requirements of the United States statutes with respect to assessment work and before any claim had been initiated by the plaintiff, they had expended in a direct and legitimate way many times over the amount required in the way of assessment work." Upon April 12, 1907, plaintiff first connected himself with the land by fulfilling all the requirements for entering it as a homestead. At that time, finds the court, no one of the defendants was in possession of the land.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Appellant's first contention is that the evidence of location, occupation, and possession of the ground as a mining claim by defendant was sufficient to exclude it from entry by plaintiff upon the 12th day of April, 1907, when his homestead entry was made. Undoubtedly appellant's contention in this respect would be correct if the location was valid and complete at the time of the homestead entry, since "actual possession of a mining claim held under a mining location is no more necessary for the protection of the title thereto, than it is for any other grant of the United States" (Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 26 L. Ed. 735), and the principle has become axiomatic that discovery and appropriation are the source of title to mining claims, and that assessment or development work is the condition of their continued possession (27 Cyc. 588). But this rule applies only when the location is valid and complete. And a location is valid and complete only when, after compliance with other requirements, a discovery of valuable mineral in place has been made. In the case of ordinary minerals, little or no difficulty has been experienced by the courts in this matter. In practice, the miner went upon the public domain, and, before he took the trouble to stake his claim and post and record his notice, he made discovery. The staking of the boundaries of the claim and the posting of notice followed such discovery. When, however, Congress enacted that locations could and should be made of public lands containing petroleum or other mineral oils under the laws relating to placer mining claims (Act Feb. 11, 1897, c. 216, 29 Stat. 526 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1434]), the courts were at once confronted with serious difficulty in their endeavor to obey the congressional mandate, and fit the placer mining laws to the exigencies of oil locations which in their nature were radically dissimilar. Thus, it is well established, that the sole power of disposition and control of the public lands being vested by the Constitution of the United States in Congress (Const. U. S., art. 4, § 3), Congress could at any time change its policy in regard to those lands so long as vested rights were not impaired.

It was fully established, also, that a qualified person, who had made a valid location upon a part of the public mineral domain (which valid location always, of course, included discovery), acquired vested rights, which no change in congressional policy could affect or impair, but per contra that a change in policy could impair the rights of one upon the public domain who had not acquired a valid location. As has been said, in the case of other minerals discovery preceded the demarkation of the boundaries, the posting and recording of the notice. In the case of oil, discovery, in the very nature of things, would rarely or never be made except at the end of much time and after the expenditure of much money, the discovery of oil involving the erection of a derrick and the laborious drilling of a well, frequently to the depth of 3,000 feet and more. If, therefore, the placer mining laws, which were declared by Congress to be the only laws under which oil locations could be established, were to be made of any practical benefit to the oil locator, it must be by permitting him to mark the boundaries of his location and post and record his notice, and protect him in possession while he was with diligence prosecuting the labor of digging his well to determine whether or not a discovery could be made. So it was held by the federal courts, by the courts of some of the other states, and by this court in Miller v. Chrisman, 140 Cal. 447, 73 Pac. 1084, 74 Pac. 444, 98 Am. St. Rep. 63, to the following effect: "One who thus in good faith makes his location, remains in possession and with due diligence prosecutes his work toward a discovery, is fully protected against all forms of forcible, fraudulent, surreptitious, or clandestine entries and intrusions upon his possession. Such entry must be always peaceable, open and above board, and made in good faith, or no right can be founded upon it." Weed v. Snook, 144 Cal. 439, 77 Pac. 1023; Cosmos, etc., Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co. (C. C.) 104 Fed. 20; Id., 112 Fed. 4, 50 C. C. A. 79, 61 L. R. A. 230; Id., 190 U. S. 301, 23 Sup. Ct. 692, 47 L. Ed. 1064; Whiting v. Straup, 17 Wyo. 1, 95 Pac. 849, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1093; Moffat v. Blue River, etc., Co., 33 Colo. 142, 80 Pac. 139. But it is always to be borne in mind that, until the perfection of the inchoate and incomplete location by discovery, the locator has, first, no vested rights which Congress is obliged to recognize. So that Congress may change its policy in regard to the lands to the extent even of excluding therefrom the diligent operator who has not made discovery. However inequitable such a proceeding might be, it in no way would be illegal.

Second. It is to be observed that the laws touching assessment work are not applicable to such an imperfect location. When the location is valid and complete, the law exacts the doing of but $100 of work per year, and, when that is done, all of the locator's rights are fully protected, whether he remains in possession longer than is necessary to do that work or not. But, where the location is incomplete, no question of assessment work is involved. What the attempting locator has is the right to continue in possession, undisturbed by any form of hostile or clandestine entry, while he is diligently prosecuting his work to a discovery. This diligent prosecution of the work of discovery does not mean the doing of assessment work. It does not mean the pursuit of capital to prosecute the work. It does not mean any attempted holding by cabin, lumber pile, or unused derrick. It means the diligent, continuous prosecution of the work, with the expenditure of whatever money may be necessary to the end in view. Of such work defendant's grantors were not in the prosecution up to April 12, 1907. They were not only not in the actual possession of the land, as the court finds, but the evidence discloses that what they had done was no more than an attempt to hold the land under the theory that assessment work was adequate for that purpose. It is shown by the evidence that they were not only not engaged in the diligent prosecution of the work, but that they were not financially able so to prosecute it, and were either in search of capital to enable them to do so, or in search of a purchaser to buy out such interest as it might be thought that they had. The cases of Cosmos, etc., Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Company (C. C.) 104 Fed. 20, and 112 Fed. 4, 50 C. C. A. 79, 61 L. R. A. 230, are not at all in conflict with these views. To the contrary, these views and those expressed in Miller v. Chrisman, supra, Weed v. Snook, supra, and New England, etc., Oil Co. v. Congdon, 152 Cal. 211, 92 Pac. 180, are themselves in great part based upon the opinion of the learned circuit judge in those cases. The federal cases involved conflicts between "scrippers" and oil locators, under an act which allowed the scrippers, for the land from which they had been displaced, to "select in lieu thereof an equal tract of vacant land open to entry." They endeavored to select land that was not only in the possession of oil men, but of oil men who were diligently prosecuting their work to a discovery so as to complete their locations. The circuit court held that such land so occupied and worked was not vacant land open to entry within the meaning of the act, and declared (we quote from the syllabus which correctly enunciates the determination): "A claimant of land entered under Act June 4, 1897 (Act June 4, 1897, c. 2, 30 Stat. 36 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1541]), in lieu of land situated within a forest reservation, on an affidavit stating its nonmineral character, that it was free from mining claims, and was entered for agricultural purposes, will not be granted relief in equity against another claimant in possession under an oil placer mining location, made prior to such entry, and followed up by development work, which was being prosecuted on the land when the entry was made, and resulted in valuable producing wells, where the affidavit of the entryman was also false in other particulars, the land being valueless for agricultural or grazing purposes, but situated in an oil district, and the entry being in fact made because of its supposed value for oil, although no discovery of oil had then been made thereon."

Plaintiff filing his homestead entry upon the 12th day of April, 1907, made physical and personal entry on the 5th day of October, 1907—within the six months limited by law. Appellant contends that plaintiff had made no "entry" within the meaning of the law until he took possessionem pedis on October 5th; that up to that time he had acquired merely a preferential right of entry over those claiming under the homestead or agricultural laws, but not over those who might have entered under the mining laws. In this connection appellant expounds the different meanings which have been given to the word "entry," and concludes that the entry of a homesteader is not complete, within the meaning of the law, until he has actually gone upon the ground. But this is not the meaning of the word as employed in the statute. In "Suggestions to Homesteaders" issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office March 9, 1908 (paragraph 27, page 12), it is said: "Actual residence on the lands entered must begin within six months from the date of all homestead entries, except additional entries and adjoining farm entries of the character mentioned in paragraphs 14 and 15, and residence with improvements and annual cultivation must continue until the entry is five years old, except in cases thereafter mentioned, but all entrymen who actually reside upon and cultivate lands entered by them prior to making such entries may make final proof at any time after entry when they can show five years' residence and cultivation." Says the Supreme Court of the United States in Hastings, etc., R. R. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 10 Sup. Ct. 112, 33 L. Ed. 363: "Under the homestead law three things are needed to be done in order to constitute an entry on public lands: First, the applicant must make an affidavit setting forth the facts which entitle him to make such entry; second, he must make a formal application; and, third, he must make payment of the money required. When these three requisites are complied with, and the certificate of entry is issued to him, the entry is made—the land is entered." All of these things had been done by plaintiff, and his entry was therefore complete. What effect did this entry have upon the right of defendant subsequently to enter upon the land and exploit it for minerals?

"A homestead entry," says the Supreme Court of the United States, "which is prima facie valid removes the land, temporarily at least, out of the public domain." Hastings, etc., Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 10 Sup. Ct. 112, 33 L. Ed. 363; U. S. v. Turner (C. C.) 54 Fed. 228. But appellant contends that this language is to be construed with an exception, and that this exception is that one who claims the land to be valuable for mineral purposes has the right, notwithstanding such homestead entry, to enter thereon and explore it for the valuable minerals it is thought to contain. Herein reliance is placed upon McClintock v. Bryden, 5 Cal. 97, with the note which is appended to that case in 63 Am. Dec. 87. But it will be found upon examination that that, and the cases like it, all arose where the land was of proved mineral value, and the decisions were based upon the national laws, which, in effect, excepted from homestead entry the mineral lands of the nation, the mineral lands being those of more value for mineral than for agricultural purposes. We know of no case, and have been cited to none, where a right of entry upon lands held under an agricultural entry has been permitted without proof of the present value of the lands for mineral purposes merely for the purpose of exploiting them to see if perchance they possess such value. That is precisely what appellant desires here to do, and contends that it has the right to do. No discovery of oil has been made upon the lands, but defendant insists that it has the right to enter and explore them to see if there is oil therein. The decisions are against the existence of such a right. In Lentz v. Victor, 17 Cal. 273, it is declared that such an entry upon an agricultural holding can be justified and upheld only by showing, first, that the land is public land; and, second, "that it contains mines or minerals." The Land Department has uniformly laid down the rule to the following effect: "The burden of proof being upon the protestants (mineral claimants), they are required to show by a preponderance of testimony that the land is more valuable for mining than for agricultural purposes as a present fact; not that it might possibly hereafter develop minerals in such quantity, and of such character, as to establish its mineral value." 1 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 561; Creswell Mining Co. v. Johnson, 8 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 440; Dobler v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 17 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 103; Winscott v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 17 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 274; Southern Pac. R. Co., 25 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 223; Alldritt v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 25 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 349.

For these reasons the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

---

158 Cal. 619

In re PEPPER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,107.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 21, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1910.)

1. Husband and Wife (§ 262*)—Community Property.

It is presumed that personal property acquired after marriage by the husband was community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 913, 914; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

2. Husband and Wife (§ 264*)—Community Property—Separate Property — Evidence to Establish—Weight.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1826, providing that the law does not require such proof as excludes all possibility of error, and produces absolute certainty, but only such proof as produces conviction to an unprejudiced mind, or proof to a moral certainty, and section 1835, defining satisfactory evidence, justifying a verdict, as that which ordinarily produces moral certainty in unprejudiced minds, it is not necessary to the establishment of the separate character of property acquired by a spouse after marriage, that the evidence demonstrate that fact to the exclusion of the possibility of a doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 916; Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 1011*)—Review—Findings—Conclusiveness.

A finding of the trial court upon conflicting evidence that property acquired by a spouse after marriage was separate property is no more reviewable on appeal than any other finding under such circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

4. Husband and Wife (§ 248½*)—Community Property—Separate Property — Property Acquired Before Marriage — Perfecting of Title After Marriage.

Where the husband had occupied a ranch for many years before his marriage under a claim of ownership, the fact that his title to a part of the land was not perfected by conveyance until thereafter would not affect the character of the land as separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 248½.*]

5. Husband and Wife (§ 257*) — Separate Property—Profits of Land.

Under Civ. Code, § 163, providing that all property owned by the husband before marriage with the rents, issues, and profits thereof is his separate property, the profits of selling trees and plants raised by the husband in a nursery conducted on land acquired by him before marriage are his separate property; the fact that the husband's industry and attention to the business was an important element in conducting it not changing the character of such profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 904–910; Dec. Dig. § 257.*]

6. Executors and Administrators (§ 222*)—Claims Against Estate — Necessity of Presentation.

If an amount advanced by the wife to her husband to be used by him in conducting his separate business was a loan, the wife's remedy was to present her claim therefor as a creditor to his executors, and not to claim such amount as separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

7. EVIDENCE (§ 220*) — ADMISSIBILITY—DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST.

While the husband's declarations that all of his property was acquired before marriage were self-serving statements, and not admissible in favor of his successors in interest on the petition of his executor to distribute his estate as separate property pursuant to the will, against the wife's claim as community estate, if such declarations were made in his wife's presence, her conduct in respect thereto was admissible against her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 236*)—DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST—PERSONS AGAINST WHOM ADMISSIBLE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1850, providing that where a declaration formed part of a transaction, which is itself the fact in dispute, or is evidence of that fact, such declaration is evidence as part of the transaction, statements by testator against his interest as to the community character of his property were admissible against parties claiming under his will as against his wife's claim to his estate as community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

On the executors' petition to distribute a husband's estate pursuant to his will, wherein his wife claimed a part of his estate as community property, a declaration by testator that upon his arrival in the county in 1858, which was 16 years before his marriage, he had very little property, had a bearing upon the issue or the community character of the property so remote as to make its exclusion harmless, especially where it did not appear that any large part of testator's estate was owned by him in 1858.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

Where the issue was whether property owned by testator at his death was separate or community property, testimony of a declaration by testator that he considered certain money he had acquired since marriage as community property was properly stricken; whether it was community property being a question of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2171; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William H. Pepper, deceased. From a decree of distribution, according to the will, Phebe Pepper appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Leppo, for appellant. Thomas P. Boyd, W. F. Cowan, and F. A. Meyer, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. William H. Pepper died testate, leaving an estate which was appraised at $113,000 and over. By his will he gave to his widow, Phebe Pepper, $26,000, and a house and lot valued at $4,000. In due course the executors petitioned for distribution of the estate in their hands in accordance with the terms of the will. The widow appeared and answered, claiming that all of the estate was community property, and that she was entitled to one-half thereof, in addition to the legacy and devise given her by the will. The trial court, after hearing evidence on this issue, decided that the entire estate was the separate property of the decedent, and decreed distribution in accordance with the terms of the will. The widow appeals from the decree of distribution. The point most strongly urged by the appellant is that the evidence fails to support the finding of the separate character of the estate.

William H. Pepper came to Sonoma county in 1858 or 1859. He settled upon a tract of land in Green Valley, containing 160 acres. He took up his residence upon this land and commenced at once to cultivate it, putting in a nursery and an orchard, and devoting part of the land to pasturage and the growing of grain. Later, and prior to his marriage to the appellant, he acquired additional land adjoining his original holding, until his ranch or farm comprised about 291 acres. He was married to the appellant in 1874. At that time he had put upon his land various improvements, and was conducting thereon an active nursery business. His course of procedure was to grow plants, principally fruit trees, either from seed or from stock imported from France or the Eastern states, until they had attained the age of one or two years, and then to sell the plants so grown. From the time of his marriage until his retirement in 1900, he lived upon the land mentioned, and devoted his entire time and energy to the conduct of the nursery and the farming operations which were being carried on there. During all this time the appellant lived with him, and performed her household and other duties as a faithful wife should. The area of land applied to nursery purposes was, from time to time, increased by Pepper. There is the direct testimony of several witnesses, including Mrs. Pepper herself, to the effect that during all the years of his marriage Pepper was engaged in no business other than that which he conducted on the ranch. In January, 1900, he sold the land, with the nursery and the personal property thereon, to one Robinson for $20,000, and took up his home in Petaluma. In March, 1906, he died. His estate consisted of the house and lot devised to his widow, of cash in bank to the amount of $51,121.92, of interest-bearing notes to the amount of $57,400, and of bank stock and furniture appraised at $1,350. The bank deposits were made, and the notes and other personal property acquired, so far as appears, after his marriage. The presumption is, therefore, that all of these items were community property. In re Boody, 113 Cal. 682, 45 Pac. 858; Fennel v. Drinkhouse, 131 Cal. 447, 63 Pac. 734, 82 Am. St. Rep. 361. Was the trial court justified in finding that this presumption was overcome? There are to be found, in many of the decisions of this court, expressions to the effect that the separate character of property acquired by either of the spouses after marriage is to be established only by "clear and convincing evidence," "clear and decisive proof," or the like. Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 252, 253, 73 Am. Dec. 538; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557; Adams v. Knowlton, 22 Cal. 288; Morgan v. Lones, 78 Cal. 62, 20 Pac. 248; In re Boody, supra; Davis v. Green, 122 Cal. 364, 55 Pac. 9; Rowe v. H. S. & L. S., 134 Cal. 405, 66 Pac. 569. But, as is said in Freese v. Hib. S. & L. Soc., 139 Cal. 392, 73 Pac. 172, "it was never intended by this court to lay down a rule requiring demonstration in such matters; that is, such a degree of proof as, excluding possibility of error, produces absolute certainty. Code Civ. Proc. § 1826. Such proof is never required. Generally, moral certainty only is required, or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, and evidence which ordinarily produces such conviction is satisfactory." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1826, 1835. And, in speaking of a similar question in Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 Pac. 357, we said that "whether or not the evidence offered * * * is clear and convincing is a question for the trial court. * * * In such cases, as in others, the determination of that court in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not open to review in this court."

While the respondents were unable to trace with exactness the transmutations of Pepper's acquisitions into the items of property which he left at his death, we think it can hardly be questioned that the record authorized an inference that his entire estate consisted of the proceeds of the sale of property owned by him at the time of his marriage, together with such profits and earnings as he had made in conducting his ranch. It was shown that he held the ranch before his marriage, and had been occupying it under a claim of ownership for many years. The mere fact that his title to a part of the land was not perfected by conveyance from the source of paramount title until a later date would not alter the character of the land itself as separate estate. Lake v. Lake, 52 Cal. 428; Estate of Higgins, 65 Cal. 407, 4 Pac. 389; In re Lamb, 95 Cal. 397, 30 Pac. 568; Estate of Boody, 119 Cal. 402, 51 Pac. 634. It was also shown that he had been engaged in no business other than that of conducting the ranch. In this testimony the court had a sufficient basis for the conclusion that whatever Pepper had at his death, over and above the property owned by him when he married, had been acquired in the business or occupation carried on by him on said ranch.

There can be little question, on the evidence, that the principal part of such business consisted of the conduct of his nursery. The appellant argues with great earnestness that the profits and earnings of such nursery business after marriage must, as matter of law, be held to be community property. We think this position cannot be sustained. Section 163 of the Civil Code provides that "all property owned by the husband before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property." The question here is whether the proceeds of the nursery conducted on the land can be considered as "issues" or "profits" of the land. Earnings, acquired by the exercise of the industry or skill of either husband or wife, are to be credited to the community. On the other hand, the products of land, separately owned by either spouse, and cultivated by either or both, become the separate property of the one owning the land. The appellant does not dispute the proposition that, if Pepper had, year after year, sown his land to grain, the resulting crops would have formed a part of his separate estate. But it is argued that, in the case of the nursery, the principal element in the success of the venture was the industry, skill, and attention of Pepper, and that the use of the land was merely incidental to what was, in effect, a commercial enterprise. We are unable to see that this argument furnishes a sufficient ground of distinction. In any agricultural enterprise, the labor and skill of man are essential to success. An orchard or a grain field must be cultivated and cared for. The resultant product is in part due to the processes of nature operating upon the land, and in part to the intelligent application of manual labor to the soil. It is, in the nature of things, impossible to apportion the crop so as to determine what share of it has come from the soil and what share from the exertions of man. The product must be treated as a whole, and, if it is the growth of land separately owned, it is the separate property of the owner of the land. See Diefendorff v. Hopkins, 95 Cal. 343, 352, 28 Pac. 265, 30 Pac. 549. The case of the nursery differs from that of the orchard or the grain field, if at all, only in the fact that the enterprise may require the application of personal skill, labor and attention in a greater degree. But the occupation is, none the less, one conducted upon land, and the product sold is the growth of that land. The seed or the cutting is planted in the soil, it is there nurtured and grown until it reaches a certain stage of development, and is then taken up and sold. If the crop of grain sown and harvested by the owner of the land constitutes "issues and profits" of the land, we are unable to see why the same may not be said of young trees and plants raised on the land until they are ready for transplanting. There may be cases in which the business is virtually one of purchase and sale of plants, the ground being used merely to preserve the plants until sales can be effected. In such cases it might well be said that the enterprise is so predominently commercial that the profits are not to be treated as issuing from the land. But on the facts before us, the court below, while it might have regarded the case as coming within this class, was not bound to do so. The decisions of this court are not in conflict with these views. It would not be profitable to review the cases cited by counsel, since none of them deal with facts like those before us.

There was evidence that, soon after his marriage, Pepper has obtained from his wife the sum of $2,000, which he had used in the nursery business. The money was never returned to Mrs. Pepper. This circumstance is not inconsistent with the finding that the entire estate was separate property of Pepper. Under the evidence the court might have concluded that Mrs. Pepper made a gift of the $2,000 to her husband. If, however, it was a loan the lender's recourse was to present a creditor's claim to the executors.

The appellant complains of errors alleged to have been committed by the court below. The respondents were permitted to introduce evidence of declarations made by Pepper to the effect that all of his property had been accumulated by him before his marriage. Standing by themselves, these self-serving statements were, of course, not admissible in favor of the declarant or his successors in interest. There was, however, testimony to the effect that Pepper had made the declarations in the presence of his wife. Her conduct in the face of his assertions was competent as against her.

On the other hand, the court did not permit the appellant to prove declarations of Pepper himself. In so far as his statements were against his interest, they were admissible against the parties claiming under his will. Code Civ. Proc. § 1850. The first of Pepper's declarations sought to be proved was one to the effect that, upon his arrival in Sonoma county in 1858 he had very little property. This statement referred to a period antedating his marriage by sixteen years. Besides, it had not been shown by the respondents that any considerable part of the estate left by Pepper could be traced back to his possession in the year 1858. The evidence in question had so remote a bearing upon the ultimate issue that its exclusion, if error, must be regarded as of no consequence.

The court permitted one of appellant's witnesses to testify that Pepper had stated, some 16 years before his death, that he had accumulated $40,000 since his marriage, and that this was, or that he considered it, community property. The court struck out the declaration that the amount stated was community property. We think there was no error in this ruling. Whether the property was community or separate was a question of law, depending on the manner and time of its acquisition. The opinion of Pepper on this legal question was entitled to no weight. The statement of fact made by him was allowed to stand, and this was all the appellant was entitled to.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

158 Cal. 611

MESSENGER v. KINGSBURY, Surveyor General. (S. F. 5,252.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 21, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1910.)

1. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 37*)—TIDE LANDS.
The state may grant in private ownership such tide lands as are capable of reclamation without detriment to the public right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Cent. Dig. §§ 201–227; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*) — SALE — WITHDRAWAL.
The disposition of the public lands is entirely in the control of the Legislature, which may withdraw or reserve from further sale any part of the public domain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*) — SALES — CONTRACTS—WITHDRAWAL.
Where no valid contract for the sale of public lands has been entered into between the state and a purchaser, and no right has vested in the latter, the withdrawal of the land from sale by repeal of the statute authorizing sales or otherwise precludes the government officers from transferring title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*) — SALE — WITHDRAWAL.
Where the survey of one applying for the purchase of swamp lands under Pol. Code, §§ 3440, 3443, had not been approved, and he had not paid the installment of the purchase price required by the statute, he acquired no vested rights, and the Legislature was authorized by Act March 25, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 444), enacting Pol. Code, § 3443a, to withdraw the lands from sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 16*)—DEFENSES—WRIT NOT BENEFICIAL.
Mandamus will not be granted to compel the reception of an application to purchase public lands, wrongfully rejected, where such lands have since been withdrawn from sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 48, 59, 60; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Proceedings by James E. Messenger for writ of mandate against W. S. Kingsbury, Surveyor General of the state of California. From the judgment and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., R. C. Van Fleet, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Malcolm C. Glenn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant. A. E. Bolton and Smith, Miller & Phelps, amici curiæ.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

SLOSS, J. This is a proceeding originally brought in the superior court for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant, as surveyor general, to receive and file an application of plaintiff made under section 3443 of the Political Code to purchase from the state a piece of land, a portion of which is swamp and overflowed land, and a portion is tide land bordering on the waters of Suisun Bay. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the trial court, and this judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, were, on the 23d day of February, 1909, affirmed by the District Court of Appeal for the First appellate district. On the application of the appellant the proceeding was transferred to this court for hearing and determination.

As stated by the learned justice who wrote the opinion in the District Court of Appeal: "It clearly appears from the complaint and the findings that a portion of the land sought to be purchased is a strip of land lying along the margin of Suisun Bay, between the line of ordinary low tide and the line of ordinary high tide, and does not extend into or through the swamp and overflowed lands adjoining. It is alleged in the complaint, however, that all of the land sought to be purchased is capable of being reclaimed for agricultural purposes, and can be reclaimed without any interference with navigation, or any fishing or fisheries on Suisun Bay or elsewhere, and the court so found." Upon these facts, there were presented for decision the questions (1) whether the state has power to transfer its tide lands, constituting the shores of navigable waters, into private ownership, except in aid of navigation, commerce or fisheries; and (2) whether, granted that it has such power, it has upon a proper construction of its legislation in fact offered such lands for sale. Both questions are answered by the appellate court in the affirmative.

That the state may, if it sees fit so to do, grant in private ownership such tide lands as are capable of reclamation without detriment to the public right is a proposition that seems well supported by the authorities cited by the respondent. It will be sufficient for the present purpose to refer to Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331; Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 365, and Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277.

The other question—i. e., whether or not the state had, at the time of the proceedings under consideration, made provision by law for exercising this power—presents a more difficult problem. As the case stood when it was under consideration by the Court of Appeal, the determination of this question of statutory construction was necessary to a decision. But, as we shall presently point out, the law has now been changed so as to deprive the plaintiff of his right to relief under any view that may be taken of the meaning and effect of the statutes as they read at the time these proceedings were instituted.

The claim of the plaintiff is based upon sections 3440 and 3443 of the Political Code. Section 3440 provides that "the swamp and overflowed, salt-marsh and tide lands belonging to the state must be sold at the rate of one dollar ($1.00) per acre, in gold coin, payable, twenty per cent. of the principal within fifty days of the approval of the survey by the surveyor general; and the balance, bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable in advance, is due and payable one year after the passage of any act of the Legislature requiring such payment, or before, if desired by the purchasers. * * *" Section 3443 provides that "any person desiring to purchase swamp and overflowed, or tide lands, above low tide, must make * * * and file in the office of the surveyor general of the state" an affidavit stating certain matters. The section provides for the determination, by action in the superior court, of any contest filed in the office of the surveyor general.

Plaintiff herein had, at the time of instituting this proceeding, advanced to the point of offering for filing his affidavit and application to purchase, and no further. He has not, to the present time, gone beyond this point. His survey has not been approved, and he has not paid the first installment of twenty per cent., or any part of the purchase price. While matters were in this condition, the Legislature by an act approved and effective March 25, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 774), enacted section 3443a of the Political Code reading as follows: "The words 'tide-lands' mentioned and described in sections thirty-four hundred and forty and thirty-four hundred and forty-three of this code shall not be held or construed to apply to or to include the shore, or any part thereof, or the bed, or any part thereof, of the ocean or of any navigable channel or stream or bay or inlet within the state, between ordinary high and low water mark, and all such land over which the ordinary tide ebbs and flows is hereby withheld from sale. Nothing in this section shall be construed as a recognition that prior to the passage hereof, the tide-lands by this section withheld from sale have been offered for sale by the state."

Now, whatever may have been the effect of sections 3440 and 3443, standing alone, with respect to the purchase of tide lands forming the shore or bed of navigable waters, there can be no question that by the enactment of section 3443a further sales of such lands were forbidden. If lands of this character had theretofore been offered for sale, the Legislature, in passing the new section, manifested, by language too plain to be misunderstood, its intent to withdraw them from further sale under sections 3440 and 3443. The disposition of the public lands is a matter resting entirely within the control of the Legislature and that body has the undoubted right to withdraw or reserve from further sale any part of the public domain. 36 Am.

& Eng. Ency. of Law (2nd Ed.) 225; Day Land, etc., Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 526, 4 S. W. 865. Where a valid contract of sale has been entered into pursuant to law between the state and a purchaser so that an equitable interest in the land is vested in the latter, the state will, of course, be prevented by force of familiar constitutional provisions from destroying the right so vested. Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363. But where there is no contract, and no vested right in the intending purchaser, the withdrawal of the land from sale, by repeal of the statute authorizing sales or otherwise, absolutely terminates the power of the officers of the government to take the steps necessary to transfer title. Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187, 19 L. Ed. 668.

The decisions of this court are clear to the effect that an applicant who has merely filed his affidavit and application to purchase, without paying any part of the purchase price, under statutes essentially similar to the scheme provided by the Political Code for the disposition of public lands, has no such vested right as will prevent a termination of the opportunity to purchase upon a repeal of the law providing for sale.

In Eckart v. Campbell, 39 Cal. 256, the court had under consideration the act of March 28, 1868 (St. 1867–68, p. 507), an act which provided for the disposition of public lands in the same manner as that declared by the Political Code. Indeed, that act formed the basis of the provisions subsequently incorporated in the Political Code. Upon a consideration of the entire statute the court came to the conclusion that one whose application filed in due form had been accepted by the surveyor general, and who had received a certificate of location as provided for in section 12 of the act received "the exclusive privilege to become the purchaser of the particular premises described at any time within the 50 days from its (the certificate's) date. It is, however, a mere privilege which he might, at his option, accept or decline within that time—and his failure to pay the 20 per cent., as required, is conclusive evidence to the land officers that he has abandoned the privilege thus conferred upon him." Referring to section 4 of the act, identical in terms with section 3514 of the Political Code, the court says: "The holder of such a certificate as that held by Eckart (i. e., the certificate of location merely) is, under this section, distinctly characterized as an applicant merely, and it is the payment of the 20 per cent. which converts him into a purchaser, and entitles him to receive from the register a certificate, which sets forth the terms of the contract, now for the first time made between the applicant and the state, the description of the land purchased, the sum already paid, and the amount to be paid hereafter," etc. And finally, as summarizing its views on the proper construction of the law, the court says that: "It does not seem to have been the intention of the statute that the state should be considered as having parted with any interest in the land, until she had received the payment of at least the first installment of the purchase money." Upon this reasoning it was held that the surveyor general had the right to entertain a second application to purchase where the first applicant had failed to make payment of 20 per cent. of the purchase price within 50 days after the date of his certificate of location.

Much closer in their facts to the case at bar, and, in our judgment, determinative of it, are the cases holding that article 17, § 3, of the Constitution of 1879, providing that state lands suitable for cultivation shall be granted only to actual settlers, operates as a restriction on applications made before, as well as after, the Constitution took effect. The first of these cases was Johnson v. Squires, 55 Cal. 103. That was an action to determine a contest over the right to purchase state lands. The plaintiff's application, made prior to the adoption of the Constitution complied, as is assumed by the court, with the law in existence when it was made. That law did not limit the right of purchase to actual settlers, and plaintiff was not such settler. It was held that, by reason of the constitutional provision, he was not entitled to purchase. Referring to said provision, the court said: "This language is clear and explicit, and operates as well on applications made before as after the Constitution took effect. As the case shows, appellant has paid no portion of the purchase money, nor has his proposition to buy been accepted by the agent of the state. He has parted with nothing of value, and can neither assert that the state Constitution has 'impaired the obligation' of a contract, or deprived him of property without due process of law." This case was cited with approval in Dillon v. Saloude, 68 Cal. 267, 9 Pac. 162, and was followed in Urton v. Wilson, 65 Cal. 11, 2 Pac. 411, Mosely v. Torrence, 71 Cal. 318, 12 Pac. 430, and Manley v. Cunningham, 72 Cal. 236, 13 Pac. 622.

The same principle was applied in Klauber v. Higgins, 117 Cal. 451, 49 Pac. 466. There the appellants claimed title to the lands in controversy by virtue of patents issued upon applications for purchase made under the act of March 28, 1868, supra. The property consisted of tide lands fronting on the bay of San Diego, and was situated within two miles of the city of San Diego. On April 4, 1870 (St. 1869–70, c. 573, § 8), the Legislature amended section 70 of said act of 1868 by excluding from the provisions of the act all swamp and overflowed, salt-marsh and tide lands "within two miles of any town or village." Assuming that the original act authorized the sale of the lands in question, the court held that the amendment took from the officials of the government the right to sell said land, no right to the same having vested in the appellants prior to their making a payment. Says the court: "The applications under which appellants claim were not approved until November, 1871, and no payments were made by the applicants prior to that time. They therefore had made no contract with the state, and had no vested rights until that time." The opinion does not disclose the exact date of the filing of the applications, and a copy of the record is not, at the moment, accessible to us. It clearly appears, however, from the opinion itself, as well as the reported abstract of arguments of counsel, that the applications preceded the amendment of the statute. If this had not been so, there would have been no occasion for the court to hold that the right of the applicants did not vest until payment. Furthermore, the argument of counsel for respondents, on page 454, concedes that the applications to purchase were made before the passage of the amending statute.

The effect of these decisions is to put the applicant for the purchase of state lands in a position similar to that of one who enters federal lands under the pre-emption laws of the United States. Under those laws it was uniformly held that no right, as against the United States, vested in a claimant until he had made or tendered the required payment. Up to that time, the land might be withdrawn from sale. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 650; Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475; Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187, 19 L. Ed. 668; Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77, 21 L. Ed. 82, affirming Low v. Hutchings, 41 Cal. 634; Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 15 Sup. Ct. 796, 39 L. Ed. 906. In Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363, the Supreme Court of the United States intimated, but found it unnecessary to decide, that an Oregon statute similar to that contained in the above-quoted sections of the Political Code was to be regarded as having the same effect as the pre-emption laws; i. e., of conferring a vested right only upon payment or tender of part of the purchase price.

Under these views, a granting to the plaintiff of the relief sought would be of no avail. If it be urged that private rights will not be permitted to be defeated by the wrongful action of government officials, plaintiff could at most, assuming the rejection of his application to have been unauthorized under the old law, be entitled to have his application received, filed, and approved. Conceding for argument's sake, that the law, as it stood at the time of his application, authorized the purchase of these lands, he would find himself in the position of having applied to purchase lands which the state has decided to withhold from sale. He would have no vested right which could prevent such withholding. Whether or not the superior court and the District Court of Appeal rightly held that plaintiff was entitled to his writ of mandate, it is plain that, as the law now reads, no such writ should issue. It would assume to require the surveyor general to perform a mere preliminary act which could not be pursued to an effective termination without a violation of the law.

It is therefore a matter of no concern to the applicant to have this court decide whether sections 3440 and 3443, prior to the enactment of 3443a, authorized the sale of lands of the character here involved. That question, one of great importance, will properly require determination when it is raised in a case involving the claims of applicants who had received patents or had made partial or full payments, before section 3443a was made a part of the Code. It seems to us to be more fitting and proper to postpone its consideration until it shall be presented in a case in which parties really interested in its disposition may have an opportunity to be heard.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 328

EVINGER v. MORAN. (Civ. 792.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 6, 1910.)

1. Pleading (§ 264*)—Amended Pleadings—Operation—Abandonment of Prior Pleading.

The filing of an amended answer operates as an abandonment of the original.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 803–805; Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

2. Pleading (§ 231*)—Amended Pleading—Amendments of Court—Statutes.

Under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 472, the permission is given to amend a pleading once as of right before the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 594–598; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

3. Pleading (§ 231*)—Amended Pleading—Time of Amendment.

Where a stipulation was filed that a motion for judgment on the pleadings should be submitted upon briefs to be later filed, an amended answer under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 472, could be made as of course before the time for filing such briefs had expired; therefore, where such an amended answer has been filed, it supplants the original pleading, and it is error to render judgment on the motion if the new answer presents a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 594–598; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

4. Pleading (§ 34*)—Construction—Rules.

A pleading should be most strongly construed against the pleader, and no intendments can be indulged in its aid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

5. Pleading (§ 345*)—Defenses.

In an action for money lent, where it was alleged that no time of repayment had been agreed upon, and the defendant's answer setting up that the money was to be repaid when the plaintiff had paid certain moneys to the defendant upon the issuance of a certain patent, and that such patent had not been issued, it must be assumed that the money due defendant had been paid or he would have alleged its nonpayment, and a judgment was therefore properly given on the pleadings for plaintiff.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by D. R. Evinger against T. L. Moran. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Kaye, for appellant. Carter & Carter, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The controlling question involved upon this appeal relates to the sufficiency of an amended answer filed by defendant pending the hearing of a motion for judgment upon the pleadings. This amended answer was filed before the trial of an issue of law raised by a demurrer to the original answer. The effect of filing such amended answer, if properly filed, was to supersede the original answer. Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 123. The permission to amend a pleading once as of right before the trial of such issue is authorized by section 472, Code Civ. Proc. Were it even conceded that the motion for a judgment on the pleadings performs the same office as a demurrer, and therefore the section should be construed as only permitting such amendment as of right before an issue of law is heard under a motion presenting the issues which would be involved in a general demurrer, nevertheless it appears from the record that the amended answer was on file before such motion for judgment was disposed of. A stipulation was filed that the motion was submitted upon briefs thereafter to be filed. The effect of such stipulation is a submission upon the filing of such briefs. The amended answer was filed before the time allowed for filing briefs had expired. If the amended answer was sufficient to raise an issue of fact, the court erred in rendering judgment on the motion directed against the original answer. If, upon the other hand, the amended answer presented no defense, the trial court was warranted in rendering judgment. Benham v. Connor, 113 Cal. 171, 45 Pac. 258.

The complaint alleged a loan by plaintiff to defendant without agreement as to time of repayment. The answer denied that no time for repayment was agreed upon, but alleged that the same was to be payable when plaintiff and an associate paid to defendant a certain $6,000, which they had agreed to pay when a patent was issued for certain land. It is alleged that such patent has never issued, but it is not averred that the $6,000 has not been paid. The event which should mature the loan was the payment of the money. Construing the answer under the rule "that the pleading is to be construed most strongly against the pleader, and that no intendments can be indulged in its aid" (Callahan v. Loughran, 102 Cal. 481, 36 Pac. 836), it must be presumed that if the money had not been paid that such fact would have been averred.

The payment of the money not being negatived, we see no error in the record, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

158 Cal. 638

HALL v. BARTLETT et al. (L. A. 2,113.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 22, 1910.)

1. DEEDS (§ 38*)—EVIDENCE (§ 451*)—DESCRIPTION—UNCERTAINTY.

A deed, which on its face contains two inconsistent descriptions, either of which will identify a different piece of property, discloses a patent ambiguity which, as a general rule, cannot be removed by parol evidence, and the deed is void for uncertainty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–79; Dec. Dig. § 38;* Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2085–2092; Dec. Dig. § 451.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 111*) — DESCRIPTION — UNCERTAINTY.

Whether the description in a deed is uncertain must be determined from a construction of the entire deed, and the construction to be put on it must be reasonable, as required by Civ. Code, § 3542, and, as required by section 3541, such an interpretation must be indulged in as will give effect to the deed rather than defeat it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 309–315; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 42*) — DESCRIPTION — UNCERTAINTY.

Where, from the description in a deed, taking into consideration all its calls, it is possible by rejecting calls which are apparently false to ascertain its application to a particular tract as embraced within the description, the false call will be rejected and the deed sustained, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 1, declaring that where there are certain definite and ascertained particulars in the description, the addition of others which are indefinite does not frustrate the conveyance, which must be construed by the first-mentioned particulars.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 85–87; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 38*) — DESCRIPTION — SUFFICIENCY.

A deed described the land as lot 10, of block V of the Mott tract, "the same being the lot on the corner of First street on the east side of F. street, being 65 feet front by 165 feet deep." A map of the Mott tract showed lot 10 of block V, as a lot fronting 60 feet on F. street with a depth of 165 feet, and as located 60 feet from First street, and lot 9 of the same dimensions lying between it and First street, and fronting on F. street. Held, that the quoted words did not render the description uncertain as inconsistent with the other description, for the word "on" in the quoted description might be construed as equivalent to "near to" or "at," as simply denoting proximity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–79; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 4960–4966; vol. 8, p. 7737.]

5. DEEDS (§ 38*) — DESCRIPTION — SUFFICIENCY.

A deed described the land as lot 10 of block V of the Mott tract, the same being the lot on the corner of First street on the east side of F. street, being 65 feet front by 165 feet deep, "and a two-story frame house situate thereon." A map of the Mott tract showed lot 10 of block V and lot 9 lying between it and First street, both fronting on F. street. A two-story frame house was situated on lot 10. Held, that the deed was not void for uncertainty, but the description applied only to lot 10, since the reference to the house as situated on the lot was a part of the description and made it certain, there being no lot other than lot 10 to which it could possibly apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–79; Dec. Dig. § 38.*

6. DEEDS (§ 38*) — DESCRIPTION — SUFFICIENCY.

Where a deed calls for a part of a larger tract of land, and there is no identification of the part intended to be conveyed by measurement or quantity, and nothing further in the deed by which the part may be identified, there is an uncertainty vitiating the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–79; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

7. DEEDS (§ 114*) — DESCRIPTION — SUFFICIENCY.

A deed which called for all of a certain lot, being a part of lot 10 of block V of a tract, and being 65 feet front by 165 feet deep, sufficiently described the tract, and embraced the entire lot according to its boundaries on the map of the tract disclosing a lot of the dimensions specified in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 316–322, 326–329; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

Beatty, C. J., and Sloss and Angellotti, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by H. E. Hall against Cornelius Bartlett and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

George H. Moore, for appellant. Lucius M. Fall, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action in ejectment in which judgment went for defendants, and plaintiff appeals therefrom on a bill of exceptions. The complaint alleged ownership in the plaintiff, and right of possession to "all that certain lot and parcel of land situate in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, and state of California, and described as follows, to wit: Lot ten (10) of block 'V' of the Mott tract as per map of said tract recorded in book 14, page 7, miscellaneous records of said county, excepting therefrom any portion thereof included in Figueroa street, formerly Pearl street, as indicated upon a plat of block 'V' of the said Mott tract recorded in book 53, page 21, miscellaneous records of said Los Angeles county." The answer denied title or right of possession in plaintiff, and set up that defendants were tenants of one E. R. Fox, whom they allege was the owner of the property and entitled to its possession.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On the trial plaintiff in support of his title introduced a judgment roll in an action entitled William M. Peckham et al. v. E. R. Fox in the superior court of Los Angeles county, in which plaintiff was awarded a money judgment and a decree foreclosing a lien (its nature does not appear) on certain real property in the city of Los Angeles described in the judgment, which property was directed to be sold. The property so ordered to be sold was described as situated in the city of Los Angeles and described as follows: "Being part of lot ten of block 'V' of the Mott tract, the same being the lot on the corner of First street on the east side of Figueroa street, being sixty-five feet front by one hundred and sixty-five feet deep and a two-story frame house situate thereon." The return of the sheriff to an order of sale issued pursuant to the decree showed that the property as described in the judgment was sold to plaintiff. Two deeds made by the sheriff to the plaintiff as purchaser at the sale were also offered by counsel for plaintiff, but at this stage simply for the purposes of identification. In them the property sold was described as "all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles and state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit:" (here follows the identical description contained in the judgment and heretofore quoted therefrom). The second deed was made simply to correct an error in the execution and acknowledgment of the first.

In aid of the deeds plaintiff then introduced in evidence both the map and plat referred to in his description of the property as set forth in his complaint. The map of the Mott tract showed a lot 10 of block V of that tract to be a lot fronting 60 feet on Grasshopper (now Figueroa street) with a depth of 165 feet, and being located 60 feet from First street: and a lot 9 of the same dimensions lying between it and First street and fronting on Figueroa and First streets. The plat of block V of said tract (referred to in the complaint as recorded in book 53, page 21) does not identify either of said lots 9 or 10, but shows the two lots nearest the corner of Pearl (now Figueroa) and First streets, fronting on Pearl street, to be each 60 feet wide and 163.28 feet deep. This offer of the plat and map was supplemented by testimony showing that there were no other plats or maps of the Mott tract recorded in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county; that the name of Grasshopper street had been changed to Pearl, and this in turn to Figueroa, and plaintiff himself testified that there was no two-story frame house on the lot at the corner of First and Figueroa, but that there was such a house on lot 10 of block "V" of the Mott tract; that is, on the lot next to the corner. After this proof plaintiff then offered in evidence the second deed executed by the sheriff (corrective of the first) and which had theretofore been marked for identification only, to which the defendants objected on the ground that the description in the sheriff's deed offered varied from the description in the complaint, and for the additional reason that the description in it was so uncertain that it did not describe any property, and the property could not be identified thereby. The trial court sustained these objections to the deed, and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. The question in this appeal is as to the correctness of the ruling of the court in this respect.

The first objection urged to the introduction of the deed and sustained by the court, namely, that there was a variance between the description therein and that in the complaint, need be given no particular consideration. If the other and more serious ground of objection to the deed, namely, that it was void for uncertainty in its description, was erroneously sustained by the trial court, it is clear that the complaint and the rejected deed described the same property, though in a different form. So that the controlling point on this appeal is whether the rejected sheriff's deed was or was not void for uncertainty.

It is undoubtedly true that where a deed on its face contains two inconsistent descriptions, either of which would identify a different piece of property from that described by the other, there is disclosed a patent ambiguity which, as a general rule, parol evidence is not admissible to remove, and the instrument is void for uncertainty. Brandon v. Leddy, 67 Cal. 43, 7 Pac. 33; Cadwalder v. Nash, 73 Cal. 43, 14 Pac. 385. But whether the description is uncertain or not is to be determined from an inspection of the entire deed, and in considering it the construction to be put upon it must not only be a reasonable one (Civ. Code, § 3542) but such an interpretation must be indulged in as will give effect to the deed rather than defeat it. Civ. Code, § 3541. If from the description in the deed, taking into consideration all its calls, it is possible by rejecting calls which are apparently false to ascertain its application to a particular tract of land as embraced within the description, the false call will be rejected and the deed sustained. Reed v. Spicer, 27 Cal. 58; Irving v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 16, 4 Pac. 766; 1 Green. on Ev. (15th Ed.) 301; 2 Devlin on Deeds, § 1016. In this respect and as declaring the rule for construing the descriptive parts of a conveyance of real property where the construction is doubtful, and there are no other sufficient circumstances for identifying it, the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provides in section

2077, subd. 1, that "where there are certain definite and ascertained particulars in the description, the addition of others which are indefinite, unknown or false, does not frustrate the conveyance, and it is to be construed by the first-mentioned particular."

Now to come to a consideration of the description in the deed in question. It refers to the Mott tract, and when we examine the plat of that tract we find lots 9 and 10 designated thereon. A portion of the description in the deed refers to the property as "part of lot 10 of block V in the Mott tract, the same being the lot on the corner of First street on the east side of Figueroa." It is this portion of the deed which it is claimed shows two inconsistent descriptions—a specific reference by number to lot 10, and also a description which embraces lot 9, because while the latter lot is not expressly mentioned, it is the one which answers the general call for a lot at the "corner of First street on the east side of Figueroa." Taking, however, this portion of the description as we find it, if there were nothing else in the deed, it does not necessarily follow that there was a patent ambiguity in the description. There being a definite reference to lot 10 of block V of the Mott tract, the words of further reference to the lot conveyed as "the same being the lot on the corner of First street on the east side of Figueroa," would not necessarily be construed as inflexibly locative, and hence a distinctively inconsistent description when compared with the special reference to lot 10. The word "on" in the description may be construed as the equivalent of "near to" or "at," as simply denoting contiguity, neighborhood or proximity. Be that as it may, however, and conceding that if the description above quoted constituted the entire description of the property in the deed, it would fall within the rule of Brandon v. Leddy and similar cases, and be void for uncertainty, still it is quite clear that when the whole description of the deed is considered that the call for a lot on the corner of First and Figueroa streets (which is what the second call in this particular description really amounts to) is really a false call, and should be rejected. That this is true needs no particular elaboration. Conceding that the description applied equally to lot 10 of block V of the Mott tract, and to block 9 thereof, as being on the corner of First and Figueroa streets, and, if this were all the description, it would be void for uncertainty, it is apparent that this uncertainty is removed, and the description attaches to lot 10 when we consider the additional terms of description of the lot intended to be conveyed as embraced within the terms "and the two-story house situated thereon." It is the lot, whether it be lot 10 or the lot on the corner of First and Figueroa streets (lot 9), with a two-story house situated thereon which was being conveyed. The evidence shows that a two-story house was situated on lot 10 and that there was no house situated on the lot on the corner of First and Figueroa streets of the Mott tract—lot 9. In fact, it was shown that there was no lot on any of the corners of First and Figueroa streets which might by any possibility be embraced within the description in the deed upon which any house, two story or otherwise, was located. There was no lot which might by any construction be embraced within the calls and upon which any house was constructed except lot 10, and it was upon this lot that the house stood. There can be no question that this reference to the house as situated on the lot conveyed was a part of the description. Burnham v. Stone, 101 Cal. 164–170, 35 Pac. 627; Chapman v. Zoberlein, 152 Cal. 216, 92 Pac. 188. Counsel does not contend to the contrary, and this being true it would appear that the call for a lot on the corner of First and Figueroa streets when considered in connection with the entire description in the deed must be regarded as a false call. It may be said in this connection that if taking into consideration the reference to a two-story house as being situated on the lot conveyed, it does not apply to lot 10, there is no other lot to which it could possibly apply.

It is insisted, further, by respondent that the description is indefinite and uncertain because it calls for a "part of lot 10" without describing or designating what part. Of course, where a deed calls for a part of a larger tract of land, and there is no identification of the part intended to be conveyed by measurement or quantity, and nothing further in the deed by which the part may be identified, there is an uncertainty which vitiates the conveyance. But this is not the case here. The deed calls for "all that certain lot * * * being part of lot 10 of Block 'V' of the Mott tract * * * being sixty-five feet front by one hundred and sixty-five feet deep." Having determined from the description taken as a whole that the land which was intended to be conveyed was lot 10 of block V of the Mott tract, as distinguished from any other lot, it further appears that the dimensions of that lot intended to be conveyed were 65 feet front by 165 feet deep. While it is true that the deed opens the description by a call for a part of the lot, it designates the part as "being sixty-five feet front by one hundred and sixty-five feet deep." The measurement calls are sufficient to include all of lot 10, which appears to have a frontage of 60 feet by 165 feet deep, as delineated upon the map of the Mott tract. While the call for a "part of the lot" would have of itself been an indefinite call, still as it is followed by a reference to measurements which are sufficient to describe and embrace the entire tract according to the map referred to, under familiar rules of construction the indefinite description must give way to the definite one, and if the latter is sufficient to embrace the entire lot according to its boundaries on the map it must control and be given effect; and that it is there can be no question.

This is all the consideration we feel necessary to give to this subject.

We are satisfied that under the proofs made the court should have admitted the sheriff's deed to plaintiff in evidence.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

We dissent: BEATTY, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. It is perhaps not very material, but it does sufficiently appear from the record that the demanded premises were sold to the plaintiff in execution of a decree foreclosing a mechanic's lien. The material point is that it was a sale under execution, a transaction in which the policy of the law and the rights of the judgment debtor require that nothing shall be done or omitted by the execution creditor contrary to law which will have a tendency to prevent competition in the bidding. The law, among other things, requires a definite description of the property to be sold, and I can conceive of no more fatal defect of description than the offer for sale of a part of a lot without describing the part. Here there was no such description. The dimensions, 65 by 165 feet, contained in the description refer by proper grammatical construction to the lot—the whole lot—an undefined portion of which was to be sold, and this construction is corroborated by the fact that they include the whole lot and five feet of frontage more than the whole. In a voluntary sale upon terms satisfactory to the vendor a description as vague and ambiguous as this might justly be aided by a liberal and benevolent construction in favor of the vendee, but an execution sale requires the application of a stricter rule. Cadwalder v. Nash, 73 Cal. 48, 14 Pac. 385. "It is of the utmost importance that land to be sold at execution sale should be so definitely described as to inform the public what particular tract will be offered to purchasers, and each bidder what land he will get if his should be the best offer at the sale. Otherwise bidding would be discouraged instead of promoted, and the right of the defendant sacrificed. To find out what land is to be sold, purchasers look to the proceedings by virtue of which the sale is to take place, which are, in the present case, the levy, the judgment, and the order of sale. If from these an intended purchaser would be left in hopeless uncertainty as to where and what the land is, he will be deterred from buying, at least for anything like a reasonable price." Pfeiffer v. Lindsay, 66 Tex. 123, 1 S. W. 264. It is a significant circumstance that the valuable house and lot here in question was purchased at the execution sale for five dollars.

---

158 Cal. 632

POLK v. SLEEPER. (S. F. 5,278.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1910.)

1. Public Lands (§ 144*)—State Lands—Rights of Purchasers.

One who has merely filed an application to purchase state land, but who has not procured the approval thereof nor a certificate of purchase, and who has not paid any part of the price, has acquired only a personal right which does not survive him, and, on his death, his estate had no interest therein, and neither his administrator nor any person interested in his estate has any right to the land by virtue of the application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 391–399; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

2. Constitutional Law (§ 93*) — Vested Rights—Application to Purchase State Lands.

One who has merely filed an application to purchase state land, and who has not procured the approval thereof, nor a certificate of purchase, and who has not paid any part of the price, has no such vested right as will prevent termination by the state of the opportunity to purchase by a repeal of the statute providing for a sale of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 183; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

3. Public Lands (§ 144*)—Rights of Purchasers—Statutes.

Under Pol. Code, §§ 3515, 3523, providing that certificates of purchase and the rights acquired thereunder are subject to sale, and declaring that, where a patent for lands is issued in the name of a decedent, the title vests in his heirs, an applicant for the purchase of state land who procures the approval of his application and a certificate of purchase, and who has paid a part of the price, acquires an interest in the land which is the subject of sale, and which survives his death, so that a patent can be issued in due course.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 391–399; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

4. Public Lands (§ 144*)—Application for Purchase—Contests.

In an action to determine a contest for the purchase of state swamp land, originating in the state land office, and referred by the Surveyor General under Pol. Code, § 3414 et seq., to the superior court for adjudication, the contestant, failing to make out a case in favor of his own application, may have an adjudication as to the validity of defendant's claim, with the result that, if the defendant is also found to be without right, a decree shall be given that neither party is entitled to purchase, but the legal representative of an applicant who died before the approval of his application and the issuance of a certificate of purchase, and the payment of any part of the price, has no such interest in the land as will entitle him to an adjudication of the right of another applicant for the purchase of the same land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 391–399; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

5. Public Lands (§ 144*)—Application for Purchase—Contests.

Pol. Code, § 3414, authorizing a contest before the Surveyor General concerning the approval of a survey or location of state land, or a certificate of purchase, etc., does not authorize the initiation of a contest by one who does not himself seek to purchase the land, or who has no interest in the land which he may protect in some action, but the contest authorized is one solely for the protection of some right of the party contesting which is entitled to protection.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 391–399; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

6. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE—CONTESTS.

Under Pol. Code, § 3414, authorizing contests before the Surveyor General concerning the approval of a survey or location of state land, or certificate of purchase, and providing for the transfer of the contest to the superior court, and section 3415, as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, c. 300), authorizing any person legally qualified to purchase public land to intervene in the action after the transfer thereof, the only questions involved in the action are those affecting the relative rights of the parties thereto, and the only person who can intervene is one legally qualified to purchase from the state, who, after the order of transfer, presents his own application of purchase, and a cause of action by an applicant who has merely filed his application to purchase, but who has not procured the approval thereof, nor a certificate of purchase, and who has not paid any part of the price, terminates on his death, and his personal representative may not prosecute the action, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 385, providing that an action does not abate by the death of a party where the cause of action survives.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 391–399; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Thomas W. Polk, prosecuted after his death by Robert T. Polk, as administrator, against Moreau Sleeper, prosecuted after his death against Ed. Sleeper, as administrator. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Crawford & Crawford and Mannon & Mannon, for appellant. Herbert V. Keeling, for respondent.

ANGELOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment that plaintiff take nothing, that the action be dismissed, and that defendant have and recover his costs taxed at $2.25, in an action to determine a contest for the purchase from the state of certain swamp and overflowed land in Lake county, originating in the state land office between Thomas W. Polk and Moreau Sleeper, and referred by the Surveyor General on June 2, 1886, under section 3414 et seq., Pol. Code, to the superior court of said county for adjudication. The judgment was entered on sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint. From the original complaint, which is brought up as a part of the judgment roll, it appears that this action was instituted by the contestant, Thomas W. Polk, by the filing of such complaint within 60 days after the order of reference, viz., on July 10, 1886. The fourth amended complaint was not filed until the 9th day of January, 1908. The demurrer having been interposed, the action was transferred to the superior court of Mendocino county on account of the disqualification of the judge of Lake county, and on November 23, 1908, this demurrer was sustained, and the judgment appealed from thereupon entered.

Among other grounds of demurrer was that of want of facts to constitute a cause of action and want of legal capacity on the part of plaintiff's administrator to sue.

From the allegations of the fourth amended complaint it appears that this action has outlived both of the original parties. It is alleged that contestant, Thomas W. Polk, died on November 13, 1899, and that Moreau Sleeper died on December 15, 1889. The complaint shows that on November 18, 1885, the register of the state land office issued to said Moreau Sleeper a certificate of purchase for said land based upon an application therefor made by him on December 3, 1868, but it is stated that the same was illegally issued; the facts upon which the claim of illegality is based being alleged. The contestant presented his own application to purchase the said land on May 29, 1886, and this was followed by the order of reference of June 2, 1886. Because of Sleeper's prior application and certificate of purchase contestant's application was never approved. It is claimed that all of his rights in the matter abated with his death, and that consequently the fourth amended complaint states no cause of action, and shows the administrator to be without legal capacity to maintain the contest.

The claim of defendant's attorney that all rights of Thomas W. Polk to purchase this land under his application abated with his death and did not descend to his heirs, if he had any, or to the administrator of his estate, is not disputed by counsel for plaintiff. This claim appears to us to be well based. The effect of our statutes is that the right of one who has merely filed an application to purchase state land and whose application has never been approved and who has received no certificate of purchase or paid any part of the purchase price is purely a personal right, which does not survive him. The authorities in this state are clear upon the proposition that an applicant so situated has no such vested right as will prevent a termination by the state of the opportunity to purchase by a repeal of the law providing for a sale of the land. These authorities are fully discussed and the same conclusion reached in the case of Messenger v. Kingsbury (S. F. No. 5,252, decided November 21, 1910) 112 Pac. 65. We think it is clear that an applicant so situated has nothing more than a purely personal right to himself proceed with the purchase so long as the state does not change its laws relating to the sale of the land. It was held in Cadierque v. Duran, 49 Cal. 356, that "a party who has only filed an application to purchase has acquired no right which he can transfer to another." The same conclusion was reached in People v. Blake, 84 Cal. 611, 22 Pac. 1142, 24 Pac. 313, and these cases are approvingly cited in Anderson v. Yoakum, 94 Cal. 227, 29 Pac. 500, 28 Am. St. Rep. 121. A distinction has been made by this court between such cases and a case where the application has been approved and a portion of the purchase money paid and the applicant holds a certificate of location (Stanway v. Rubio, 51 Cal. 41), and also a case where the purchaser has received a certificate of purchase. Wholey v. Cavanaugh, 88 Cal. 132, 25 Pac. 1112. As to the latter class of cases there can be no question, of course, in view of the statutory provision that "certificates of purchase, and all rights acquired thereunder, are subject to sale, by deed or assignment," etc. Pol. Code, § 3515. And undoubtedly where an applicant has proceeded so far as to obtain an interest in the land that is capable of transfer his interest will survive his death, and a patent can be issued in due course. See section 3523, Pol. Code. But, as to the applicant whose application has not been approved and who has paid nothing, the effect of the decisions is that there is no such interest in the land as constitutes property capable of transfer. Our statutes relating to the sale of public lands make no provision the effect of which would be to enable any one to succeed to the right of an applicant so situated in the event of his death, as has been done by the United States in regard to pre-emption and homestead claims. The decisions as to pre-emption claims are to the effect that, in the absence of such a statute on the subject, the privilege given by the government would lapse with the death of the applicant so situated and the land be open to entry by any one, and that, where such a statute exists, the title subsequently acquired from the government comes to the persons taking it not through the applicant, but directly from the government by virtue of the privilege of purchase expressly given by the statute. It is also held that in such a case the land is not subject to devise by the pre-emptor, and cannot be sold in satisfaction of his debts or for the expenses of administration. See Elliott v. Figg, 59 Cal. 117; Wittenbrock v. Wheadon, 128 Cal. 150, 60 Pac. 664, 79 Am. St. Rep. 32. The same is well settled as to homestead claims. See 32 Cyc. 834. As said before, our statutes make no provision whatever for such cases. The situation here is exactly the same as it would be in regard to a pre-emption claimant from the United States similarly circumstanced, in the absence of any statutory provision for succession to the rights of the claimant. Thomas W. Polk at the time of his death had at most merely a purely personal privilege to purchase this land, which lapsed with his death, leaving the land so far as his application was concerned open for acquirement by any other qualified purchaser. His estate could have no interest therein, and neither his administrator nor any person interested in his estate has any right in regard to this land by virtue of anything done by him.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

As we have suggested, these conclusions are not disputed by counsel for appellant, but it is claimed that, the action having been originally commenced by the contestant under the order of reference made by the Surveyor General, it may be continued by the administrator of his estate for the sole purpose of protecting the state by obtaining an adjudication as to the validity of the certificate of purchase held by the original defendant. This claim is based, we suppose, upon the doctrine established by the decisions that in an action of this character it is the right of the contestant, notwithstanding he fails to make out a case in favor of his own application, to have an adjudication as to the validity of the defendant's claim, with the result that, if the defendant be also found to be without right, a decree shall be given that neither plaintiff nor defendant is entitled to purchase. See Perri v. Beaumont, 91 Cal. 30, 27 Pac. 534. The decisions in regard to this proposition may be based solely on the fact that the contestant, although he does not show himself entitled under his pending application, may nevertheless be aggrieved by the failure of the court to also adjudge the defendant's application void. For instance, in Perri v. Beaumont, supra, where Perri, the original contestant, was appealing from a judgment similar to the one here involved, it was said: "It cannot be said that the plaintiff is not aggrieved by the failure of the court to decide this part of the controversy, and adjudge defendant's application void. The plaintiff is an actual settler on the land, and has valuable improvements thereon. In addition to this, he is possessed of all the personal qualifications which would entitle him to purchase if the land were surveyed, and it is alleged that he desires to purchase it. It is clear, therefore, that he has an interest in preventing defendant from acquiring the legal title from the state." Of course, in view of what we have heretofore said, none of this can be true as to the deceased or his legal representative, who is the only existing claimant. It is settled by Dollenmayer v. Pryor, 150 Cal. 1, 87 Pac. 616, that the provisions of section 3414, Pol. Code, providing for the initiation of a contest before the Surveyor General and the reference of that contest to the superior court of the county in which the land is situated for determination, do not authorize the initiation of such a contest by one who does not himself seek to purchase the land or who has no interest in the land which he would be entitled to protect in some action or proceeding. In that case an order of reference made by the Surveyor General upon the protest of

Pryor, "who had neither possession, interest, nor claim," was held to be absolutely void and insufficient as a basis for any proceeding in the superior court. It was said that "a mere sentimental interest, or a general interest as a citizen in the protection of state property, * * * or even the particular interest which a qualified person, privileged to purchase state lands and expecting at some future time to apply for the particular tract in question, but who is not a settler thereon, might have in preventing or delaying a prior applicant, would not be a sufficient interest to authorize such a contest." The contest thus authorized is one solely for the protection of some right of the party contesting which is entitled to protection. It is this contest between contestant and contestee which may be initiated and referred under section 3414, Pol. Code, and it is this contest alone that is referred to in the succeeding sections (3415 to 3417). The only parties concerned in the action are the parties who properly become parties to the contest in the Surveyor General's office and whose rights have been referred by that officer to the courts for adjudication, and prior to the amendment of section 3416, Pol. Code, in 1907, no other person could intervene in the action commenced under said reference. This was definitely settled in Youle v. Thomas, 146 Cal. 537, 80 Pac. 714, and reaffirmed in Youle v. Thomas, 150 Cal. 676, 91 Pac. 584. The amendment of 1907 authorizes such an intervention only by one legally qualified to purchase from the state public lands of the same character, who, after the order of reference, presents his own application to purchase the land or a portion thereof, to the Surveyor General. The only questions involved in the action are those affecting the relative rights of the parties thereto. The state is in no sense a party to the action. Where all possible rights of the contestant and those claiming under him in regard to the land lapse by reason of his death, it would appear to necessarily follow that the particular contest referred must end, in the absence of the intervention, under section 3415, Pol. Code, as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, c. 300), of some person who had applied to the Surveyor General to purchase the land or a portion thereof. The contestant's cause of action does not survive him, and section 385, Code Civ. Proc., providing that "an action or proceeding does not abate by the death of a party * * * if the cause of action survive or continue," and providing for the substitution of the representative of the deceased, has no application. In the absence of statutory provision for its continuance, the action abated with the contestant's death. The question we have discussed does not appear to have been suggested upon the former appeal in this case (Polk v. Sleeper, 143 Cal. 70, 76 Pac. 819), and there is nothing in the opinion then filed that can be construed as purporting to decide it. In fact, all that is said therein as to the nature of the action and the rules applicable thereto is in line with the views we have discussed.

From what we have said it follows that, in view of the facts made known to the trial court by the fourth amended complaint, the judgment that the action be dismissed was correct. No point is made here as to the correctness of the judgment in so far as it awards respondent $2.25 costs against appellant, and we have not considered that question and express no opinion thereon.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

158 Cal. 626

SAN JOAQUIN & KINGS RIVER CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. v. FRESNO FLUME & IRRIGATION CO.

MILLER & LUX v. FRESNO FLUME & IRRIGATION CO. (S. F. 4,922 and 4,923.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 22, 1910.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 53*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—DAMS.

A lower riparian owner must show some damage in order to restrain an upper owner from the beneficial use of the water, so that an upper riparian owner may dam the waters of a stream for the purpose of floating logs therein, if such use did not interfere with the water rights of the lower owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 45; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. COMMON LAW (§ 14*)—OPERATION—CHANGE OF COMMON-LAW RULE.

If a rule of common law is unfitted to the changed conditions existing in this state, so that its application will work hardship, the Supreme Court will not follow it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Common Law, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 116*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

The impounding and distribution of flood and storm waters is not prohibited by law, but rather encouraged, where it does not substantially damage the existing riparian rights of others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

In Bank. Appeals from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Actions by the San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Company and by Miller & Lux, against the Fresno Flume & Irrigation Company. From judgments for defendant in each case, and orders denying motions for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Houghton & Houghton, Frank H. Short, and Edward F. Treadwell, for appellants. L. L. Cory and Goodfellow & Eells, for respondent.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

HENSHAW, J. These appeals present the same questions, and may, therefore, be considered and decided together. Stevenson creek is a small stream tributary to the San Joaquin river. In dry seasons of the year its waters do not reach the latter. In its course through the mountains it flows into, through, and out of a flat tract of land—"a mountain meadow"—about 85 miles distant from plaintiffs' lands. Defendant constructed a dam across the cañon at the lower end of this mountain meadow impounding the rain, storm and flood waters of the adjacent hills, and converting the mountain meadow into a lake. Into this lake it brought timber from its forests, and out of this lake for several miles down the channel of Stevenson creek it conducted a V flume, and by the waters of the lake carried its timber down the V flume out of the watershed of the creek to its mills and factories below. Defendant has expended for these purposes exceeding $500,000. Plaintiffs Miller & Lux are riparian proprietors of the San Joaquin river, and plaintiff San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Company is an appropriator of water therefrom. Their actions are to the same end—to enjoin the maintenance of defendant's dam and its alleged interference with and diminution of the natural flow of Stevenson creek. The trial court found, in brief, that the dam and operations of defendant did not diminish the flow of Stevenson creek to the San Joaquin river and did not interfere with any of plaintiffs' rights. It found that in a state of nature the flow of Stevenson creek into the mountain meadow was largely absorbed by the lands of that meadow so that comparatively little of the entering water flowed out. It found that by reason of the complete saturation and filling of this mountain meadow and the conversion of it into a lake more water actually flowed down Stevenson creek below the dam than had previously done so. This water came, first, from the overflow of the dam; second, from its leakage; and, third, from the leakage of the V flume by which the water was carried for some miles down the channel of Stevenson creek. Under these findings the relief asked by plaintiffs was denied, and they appeal. Upon appeal they contend (1) that the maintenance of the dam and works in the bed of Stevenson creek constitutes a nuisance which should have been enjoined regardless of any question of the injury to plaintiffs, and regardless of the question whether or not the dam and works did or did not perceptibly diminish the flow of Stevenson creek or of the San Joaquin river. They contend (2) that the findings show positive injury to plaintiffs' right entitling them to the relief sought.

Plaintiffs construe such cases as Gould v. Eaton, 117 Cal. 539, 49 Pac. 577, 38 L. R. A. 181, Barneich v. Mercy, 136 Cal. 205, 68 Pac. 589, and Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., 155 Cal. 61, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, as establishing the proposition that the riparian owner is entitled to the unobstructed flow of a stream at all times, including flood periods following the annual fall of rains and the melting of snow in the region about the head of the stream, and that, without regard to the damage itself, it is the right of every riparian proprietor to have the water come to his land through its natural channel undiminished in quantity and unimpaired in quality, save to the extent that results from a reasonable use of the water by other riparian owners upon the stream; that, as a necessary corollary to this doctrine the riparian owner is entitled to have the stream flow in its natural channel, and has a right to object to any change in the channel, or to any artificial work of any kind which tends to retard the flow or spread the stream over more surface, or to change its channel. For this reliance is placed, in addition to the cases above cited, on Wood on Nuisances, p. 348; Ferrea v. Knipe, 28 Cal. 340, 87 Am. Dec. 128; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Bliss v. Johnson, 76 Cal. 597, 16 Pac. 542, 18 Pac. 785. But the cases do not support the position which appellants take. Even if at common law or under the civil law it was a part of the usufructuary right of the riparian owner to have the water flow by for no purpose other than to afford him pleasure in its prospect, such is not the rule of decision in this state. The lower claimant must show damage to justify a court of equity in restraining an upper claimant from his beneficial use of the water. The fair apportionment and economic use of the waters of this state are of the utmost importance to its development and well-being. The problems presented never came within the purview of the common law. They have been of necessity, therefore, and must continue to be solved by this court as cases of first impression, and, as in the past, so in the future, if a rule of decision at common law shall be found unfitted to the radically changed conditions existing in this state, so that its application will work wrong and hardship rather than betterment and good, this court will refuse to approve and follow the doctrine.

It will be found, therefore, that the decisions of this state not only do not deny the right to the use of storm and flood waters, but encourage the impounding and distribution of those waters wherever it may be done without substantial damage to the existing rights of others. Thus, it is said in Modoc L. & L. S. Co. v. Booth, 102 Cal. 156, 36 Pac. 432: "In a state like this, where irrigation is greatly needed, and where large areas of land are comparatively worthless unless artificially irrigated, it is difficult to lay down a rule as to riparian rights which will be applicable to and cover all cases. It seems clear, however, that in no case should a riparian owner be permitted to demand, as of right, the intervention of a court of equity to restrain all persons who are not riparian owners from diverting any water from the stream at points above him, simply because he wishes to see the stream flow by or through his land undiminished and unobstructed. In other words, a riparian owner ought not to be permitted to invoke the power of a court of equity to restrain the diversion of water above him by a nonriparian owner, when the amount diverted would not be used by him, and would cause no loss or injury to him or his land, present or prospective, but would greatly benefit the party diverting it. If this be not so, it would follow, for example, that an owner of land bordering on the Sacramento river in Yolo county could demand an injunction restraining the diversion of any water from that river for use in irrigating nonriparian lands in Glenn or Colusa county, and yet no one, probably, would expect such an injunction, if asked for, to be granted, or, if granted, to be sustained." In Fifield v. Spring Valley Water Works, 130 Cal. 552, 62 Pac. 1054, it was sought to enjoin defendant from arresting and diverting the waters of San Mateo creek. The court decreed that defendant should permit at all times all the ordinary flow of the creek to go down to plaintiff's lands, but that he could take and divert "the storm or freshet or flood waters that may flow in or into San Mateo creek above said lands during times of extraordinary high water or freshet in said creek or stream." The court further found that this diversion would not damage plaintiff's lands in any way nor interfere with his rights in the premises or with rights appurtenant to his lands. This court held that under these findings, which were supported, the plaintiff was not injured, and was not entitled to an injunction restraining the diversion of such storm or flood waters. In Miller v. Bay Cities Water Co., 107 Pac. 115, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772, the principle is clearly recognized and declared that an appropriator of water may divert for use to any point beyond the watershed any portion of the waters of the stream which serves no useful purpose either to the riparian owners, or in supplying the underground stratum, or such waters as are in excess of the quantity necessary for such purpose. In Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal Co., 155 Cal. 61, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, this court treated the questions presented under the findings of the trial court. The contention of defendant was that it was diverting or proposed to divert extraordinary flood or storm waters without injury to plaintiff. The findings of the court were that the rise in the river level and the flooding of plaintiff's lands occurred in all ordinary years, and so constituted a part of the regular and annual and usual flow of the river; that these waters were valuable to the lands of plaintiff, because they both irrigated them and deposited upon them valuable sediment. "Upon this showing," says this court, "it cannot be said that a flow of water occurring as these waters are shown to occur constitutes an extraordinary and unusual flow. In fact, their occurrence is usual and ordinary." And, further, it is said that our cases "decide that an injunction restraining the diversion of storm or flood waters will not be granted at the instance of a riparian owner, when it appears that he will not be injured in any way by such diversion." If the doctrine announced in Gould v. Eaton, supra, may be thought to confer upon a riparian proprietor greater rights than these, namely, the right to have all the water of the stream at all times flow past his land, without regard to the question as to whether or not any diminution of the flow does or could injure him, then it must be said that the doctrine of Gould v. Eaton is to this extent modified by the later decisions. Of course, the riparian proprietor's rights are not measured by the amount of water which he is actually using at the time of his action. In this sense the actual present damage ceases to be of great consequence, but its place is taken by the necessary and consequential damage which would follow to his land if the unauthorized act of the upper appropriator were allowed to ripen into prescriptive right. Barneich v. Mercy, supra, has no bearing upon this question, the court there deciding merely that a lower riparian proprietor may enjoin an upper riparian proprietor from maintaining a dam upon his land which entirely prevents the flow of the water of the stream to plaintiff's land and ditch. In Byers v. Colonial Irr. Co., 134 Cal. 553, 66 Pac. 732, it is ruled that where the dam of the defendant is not found to be a nuisance in itself, but only a nuisance as used to interfere with plaintiffs' right, the trial court would not be justified in directing its total abatement or removal, but should limit its decree to modifying the use. Here, as has been said, the court finds upon sufficient evidence that the use of the dam actually increases, and certainly does not diminish, the waters of Stevenson creek, to the flow of which into the San Joaquin river plaintiffs are entitled. As riparian owner, which defendant is, it has the right, independent of these other considerations, to impound the waters of the stream for the purpose of floating logs. This is what it is doing, and this fact itself justifies the construction and maintenance of the dam, provided of course it be not so constructed and maintained as to interfere with plaintiffs' rights to the water of the stream. Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 323, 100 Pac. 1082, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382. There is no such interference.

The judgments and orders appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

14 Cal. App. 377

SISK v. CASWELL. (Civ. 735.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 22, 1910.)

1. Waters and Water Courses (§ 247*)—Irrigation Ditches—Suit to Quiet Title—Complaint—Sufficiency.

A complaint in an action to quiet title to an irrigation ditch, and to enjoin defendant, over whose land the ditch runs, from interfering with the exercise by plaintiff of his right to use the ditch, and for damages suffered by plaintiff from defendant's obstruction of the ditch, held sufficient as against a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

2. Waters and Water Courses (§ 247*)—Obstruction of Irrigation Ditch—Complaint—Parties.

Where the complaint, in an action to quiet title to an irrigation ditch, and to enjoin interference therewith, and for damages for a wrongful interference, showed that the object of the suit was to prevent defendant from inflicting on plaintiff, irreparable injury, and to obtain compensation for damages already individually suffered by him from the acts of defendant, allegations of the complaint that plaintiff had conveyed to third persons tracts of land with a distinct agreement that the tracts were entitled to receive the benefits of irrigation by means of the ditch, and that defendant's obstruction of the ditch would subject plaintiff to litigation, did not require that the third persons be made parties, since such allegations merely disclosed the extent of the injury to plaintiff through the conduct of defendant, and plaintiff could obtain equitable relief and compensation for the damages suffered by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

3. Waters and Water Courses (§ 247*)—Irrigation Ditches—Reservations.

In a suit to quiet title to an irrigation ditch running on land conveyed by plaintiff to defendant and carrying water for the benefit of other land of plaintiff, evidence held to justify a finding that the reservation of the right of plaintiff in the irrigation ditch, was incorporated in the deed pursuant to agreement between the parties and was binding on defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 1011*)—Review—Verdict—Conclusiveness.

A finding on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3983; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

5. Deeds (§ 94*)—Construction—Merger of Previous Contract—Reservations.

That a contract for the sale of real estate called for a conveyance free from all incumbrances, without stipulating for a reservation in favor of the vendor, has but little bearing on the issue whether the vendor was entitled to a reservation, and the deed containing a reservation must be deemed the sole guide for measuring the rights of the parties thereunder, since all prior negotiations are merged in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 266; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

6. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 134*)—Contracts — Construction—"Incumbrances."

A contract for the sale of real estate, free from all incumbrances, ordinarily refers to incumbrances defined by Civ. Code, § 1114, declaring that the term "incumbrances," includes taxes, assessments, and liens, and a purchaser intending to make the term include an incumbrance affecting only the physical condition of the property, must have the agreement so declare.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 134.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3519-3527.]

7. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 135*)—Contracts — Construction—"Incumbrances" —Physical Condition of Property.

Where there is a physical burden on real estate which is visible, the presumption, in the absence of an express agreement, is that the burden is not an incumbrance, within a covenant against incumbrances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 255-258; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

8. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 135*)—Contracts — Construction — Incumbrances—Physical Condition of Property.

Where, at the time of the execution of a contract for the sale and purchase of real estate and the payment of a part of the price, a drainage ditch existed on the land, sufficient to run water through it, and it appeared that the value of the land retained by the vendor and his grantees rested largely on the fact that they could be given the benefit of the irrigation by an extension of the ditch on the land, the law would presume, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, that the ditch was not an incumbrance, within the contract against incumbrances, and a deed reserving irrigation rights in the ditch merely complied with the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 255-258; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

9. Deeds (§ 69*)—Contents—Validity—Mistake.

A party may not plead ignorance of the covenants of a deed executed to him after it has been accepted and recorded, as a ground for defeating the force and effect of such covenants, in the absence of any fraud practiced by the grantor preventing the grantee from familiarizing himself with the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

10. Deeds (§ 196*) — Validity — Presumptions.

The presumptions are in favor of the validity of a deed and its recitals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 587; Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

11. Deeds (§ 74*)—Contents—Presumptions.

A grantee in a deed, chargeable with constructive notice of the recitals therein, who remained indifferent as to its precise provisions for about two years after it was filed for record, may not defeat its covenants on the ground that he did not know the provisions thereof, and relied on the contract of sale and on the supposition that the deed corresponded therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by William H. Sisk against Thomas Caswell. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Maddux & Maddux, for appellant. P. H. Griffin, for respondent.

HART, J. This controversy arises over an alleged claim of right by plaintiff to the use, for the purpose of irrigation, of water carried through a certain irrigating ditch running through and upon the land of the defendant. The purpose of the suit is to quiet plaintiff's title to and interest in said ditch, to enjoin defendant from interfering with or obstructing the exercise of his right to use the same, and for damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff for defendant's wrongful obstruction thereof. The plaintiff obtained judgment as prayed for, and from said judgment and the order denying him a new trial the defendant has appealed.

It appears from the allegations of the complaint that, on the 2d day of April, 1904, the plaintiff was the owner in fee of a tract of land in Stanislaus county, described as the N. E. ¼ of section 18, the S. ½ of said section 18, and, jointly with one W. F. Rose, of the N. E. ¼ of section 19, all said land being in township 4 S., R. 9 E., M. D. B. & M.; that on the 10th day of December, 1904, plaintiff sold and conveyed to defendant said N. E. ¼ of section 18, "reserving, as provided in said conveyance, 'the right to use the ditch now constructed on said premises to run water to other lands of plaintiff in the neighborhood, or to join onto said ditch and to extend the same for the same purpose,' which said right and interest in said land and ditch was, and was so stated in said conveyance, to extend to the heirs and assigns of plaintiff for any lands owned by him or which he had sold in the neighborhood which could be conveniently irrigated therefrom, and plaintiff ever since has been and now is the owner of and entitled to the rights and interest in said land so reserved, except that plaintiff had, on the said 2d day of April, 1904, * * * and on the 29th day of April, 1905, * * * and on the 9th day of May, 1905," sold and conveyed to a number of other parties (named in the complaint), respectively, certain parts, in separate and distinct tracts, of the described land remaining to him after the said sale and conveyance to the defendant. The said water ditch is described as being 10 feet wide on the bottom and 4 feet deep; that the beginning of the center line of said ditch was at a point a fraction over 24 feet west of the northeast corner of said section 18, and, by certain meanderings, ran to a point 455 feet west of the "east boundary of said section." The complaint further declares that "at all times herein mentioned all the lands herein described were within the Turlock irrigation district and entitled to receive therefrom their proportion of the water provided thereby under the laws pertaining thereto for irrigation purposes, and all of said lands were and are in the neighborhood of the land conveyed to defendant as aforesaid and of said water ditch and could be conveniently irrigated therefrom, and said ditch was constructed for the purpose of such irrigation, and but for the acts of defendant herein alleged would have received such water, all of which was well known to defendant."

It is charged that the defendant has wrongfully destroyed "the northerly 522.4 feet of said ditch, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $75, the cost of reconstruction thereof," and that defendant has prevented plaintiff "from entering upon, and from having and using said ditch and making necessary repairs and improvements thereon, so as to use the same for irrigation of lands which he would have irrigated but for such acts of defendant, to plaintiff's damage in the further sum of $500," and it is further alleged that such damage will continue in a much greater sum each year that plaintiff is so prevented by defendant from having and using said ditch. It is alleged that defendant claims some estate or interest, adverse to plaintiff, "in said ditch and interest in the lands conveyed by plaintiff to defendant as aforesaid, which claim is without right," and that defendant denies plaintiff's right in said ditch, "and has slandered and will, if not restrained, continue to slander plaintiff's title as aforesaid."

Paragraph 8 of the complaint contains the following averments: "That the lands aforesaid are of great value for irrigation, and are of little value without such irrigation; that the acts of defendant, done and threatened as aforesaid, have prevented and will if not restrained continue to prevent the same from being irrigated, and will cause great and irreparable injury, the amount of which cannot be determined; that a portion of the considerations for the various sales and conveyances from plaintiff to the third persons as hereinbefore alleged was the rights and privileges appertaining to the respective tracts by reason of the facts aforesaid, and the said acts of defendant herein complained of have rendered, and will, if not restrained, continue to render plaintiff liable to damage and litigation on account thereof; that plaintiff desires and intends to, and will, if not prevented by the wrongful acts of defendant herein complained of, irrigate his said lands remaining unsold as aforesaid, and will sell portions thereof, but by reason of the said acts of defendant, plaintiff has been prevented, and unless the same are restrained, plaintiff will be prevented, from so irrigating said land or selling any part thereof, which works and will continue to work, if continued, great and irreparable injury to plaintiff, the amount of which cannot be determined."

A general and a special demurrer were interposed to the complaint and overruled by the court.

The special demurrer is based upon the grounds: 1. "That there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff," the point here involved being that, as the complaint alleges that parts of the land described in said pleading were conveyed by plaintiff to other parties, and as the plaintiff thus "asks relief as to those parties similar to the relief that he asks himself," said other parties should have been made parties plaintiff. 2. That several causes of action have been improperly united, in that "plaintiff has alleged that the damage will arise to all his assignees, and that their cause of action is the same as his and specifies the names of the assignees in his complaint, * * * and also asks that the use to the ditch be quieted as to the rights of the assignees mentioned." 3. That there is a "misjoinder of defendants," in that, if the assignees refused to appear as plaintiffs, they should have been made defendants, "for the reasons stated in" subdivision 1 of the grounds of the special demurrer as they are herein given. 4. That the complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain for the alleged reason that "it cannot be determined whether or not the amount of damages claimed in the complaint is for the individual damage to plaintiff and his land or is the damage to his lands and those of his assignees in the aggregate; that it cannot be ascertained whether it is an action to quiet title or a suit for damages."

The demurrers having been overruled by the court, the defendant filed an answer to the complaint and also a cross-complaint.

The answer specifically denies all the important averments of the complaint, and, as separate defenses, in substance, alleges: That plaintiff agreed, at the time of the execution of the said conveyance to defendant, to construct a canal and deliver water on the land so sold and conveyed to defendant from the water system of the Turlock irrigation district; that, in view of said agreement, defendant "prepared, checked up, and planted 43 acres of said land to alfalfa; that plaintiff failed to deliver any water on said land as agreed, and that on account of said failure "the defendant was unable to plant more than 43 acres, and the land planted failed to make another crop, to the damage of defendant in the sum of $250"; that plaintiff, since the sale of said land to defendant, "has gone upon said land without the consent of the defendant and dug up said land and attempted to construct a canal across said land and otherwise interfere with the possession of the defendant, in all to his damage in the sum of $500."

The sum of the cross-complaint is that defendant bought the land from plaintiff on the 29th day of March, 1904; that on that day defendant delivered to plaintiff his check for $200 as a payment thereon; that, on the 8th day of June, 1904, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written contract, by the terms of which the plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant and the defendant agreed to buy, for the sum of $9,925.55, the land affected by this controversy; that the terms of payment as thus agreed upon were as follows: "$200 heretofore paid, $5,804.36 paid this day (including accrued interest), and the balance * * * $4,000, on the delivery of conveyance and title to said property as hereinafter provided," etc.; that on the execution of said contract defendant paid to plaintiff the sum of $5,804.36; that the deed to said property was, as to the terms thereof, to correspond with said contract—that is, that the plaintiff would execute and deliver to defendant a good and sufficient deed, conveying said land "free and clear of all incumbrances made, done, or suffered by said first parties"; that on the 10th day of December, 1904, said first parties executed a deed to defendant, conveying said land; that said deed was drawn by one George Perley, and delivered to the Stanislaus Abstract Company, by which company or its officers it was filed for record with the county recorder; that, without the knowledge and against the consent of defendant, the following reservation was incorporated in said deed, viz.: "Save and except therefrom the east twenty feet of the said north-east quarter of section 18, reserved for road purposes. The parties of the first part also reserve the right to use the ditch now constructed on said premises to run over the lands of the parties of the first part in the neighborhood, or to join onto said ditch and extend the same for the same purpose, such right to use said ditch to extend to the heirs or assigns of the parties hereto of the first part for any lands owned by them or which they or either of them have sold in the neighborhood, which can be conveniently irrigated therefrom." The cross-complaint declares that defendant was not present when said deed was prepared, executed, or delivered; that "said abstract company, nor any one else had any authority from defendant to accept any deed containing either or both of the aforesaid reservations"; that "at the time of the preparing of said deed plaintiff had in his possession a duplicate of the aforesaid agreement of June 8, 1904; that knowingly and fraudulently, and in fraud of the rights of defendant, plaintiff had said deed prepared and signed and acknowledged, and knew at all of said times that said reservations could not be a part of said deed."

The prayer of said cross-complaint is that plaintiff "take nothing by this action," and that the said deed be reformed by striking therefrom the reservations aforesaid, and for the sum of $750 damages, etc. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, denying each material allegation thereof and reaffirming the vital averments of the complaint.

1. We see nothing erroneous in the court's order overruling the demurrers. It is not seriously urged that there are not sufficient facts stated in the complaint to entitle plaintiff to the relief asked for, and there can be no doubt that the general demurrer was properly overruled. Nor did the court err in its order overruling the special demurrer.

It may first be suggested that the ground that there is a "misjoinder" of parties plaintiff or parties defendant is, strictly speaking, inaccurate here. Obviously, if the complaint is faulty as to parties, it is because there is a defect or "nonjoinder" of parties, and not a misjoinder. But there would be even then no tenable reason for criticism of the complaint. The object of the suit, as very clearly appears from the averments of the complaint, is to prevent the defendant from inflicting upon plaintiff irreparable injury and to obtain compensation for damages already individually suffered by him from the alleged acts of the defendant. The averments with respect to the sale by plaintiff to the other parties named in the complaint of certain parts of his lands, and that the parts so conveyed were, in common with his own, entitled to the privilege of using the ditch for the purposes of irrigation, were, manifestly, inserted for no other purpose than to disclose the extent of the injury which would be suffered by plaintiff through the conduct of defendant in preventing the plaintiff and his grantees from using said ditch—that is, that the injury so inflicted would be irreparable. The complaint, as we have seen, declares that plaintiff had conveyed to said other parties certain tracts of land with a distinct agreement upon his part with said parties that the tracts thus conveyed were entitled to and would receive the benefit of irrigation by means of said ditch, and that defendant's obstruction of plaintiff's right to use the water carried by said ditch for the lands so conveyed will, by reason of said agreement, subject the latter to litigation and consequent expense and damage, in addition to the injury which he will sustain by being deprived, through the said acts of the defendant, of the privilege of thus irrigating his own land. There is, in other words, absolutely nothing in the averments which calls for any relief for the grantees of plaintiff. They are, therefore, neither necessary nor even proper parties.

The foregoing also disposes of the claim made under the third and fifth grounds of the special demurrer. It is very clear from the complaint that the plaintiff seeks damages for alleged injuries individually sustained by him, and does not claim the right to or ask for damages which the lands of his grantees have sustained through the alleged conduct of the defendant. The reference in the complaint to damage to the lands of his said grantees is, as before stated, for the sole purpose of showing, as an element of damages which he has himself sustained by reason of his promise to said grantees, at the time he executed the conveyances to them, that they should and would be entitled to the use of said ditch, to what extent, and in what way or manner he has sustained damage.

2. All the findings of the court—some in a general way and others specifically—are assailed as being without sufficient support. Some of these assignments we shall specially notice. But it may be said generally that all the averments of the complaint essential to a statement of a cause of action are sustained by the proofs. The charge that the defendant prevented and threatens to continue to prevent the plaintiff and his grantees from using said ditch is amply supported. The plaintiff testified that when he went upon defendant's land for the purpose of extending the ditch so that he and his grantees could use the same, the defendant ordered him away and refused to allow him to proceed; that defendant covered up the ditch and in other ways obstructed plaintiff's use of the canal.

But the most important contention is that the evidence does not justify and support the finding that the plaintiff had the right or was authorized, under his agreement with defendant, to insert in the deed executed by him to said defendant the clause providing for the reservation referred to. The decision of this controversy, in our opinion, could well rest alone on the determination of this question, as it in reality, aside from the question of the alleged injury and threatened injury, involves the vital point in the case. But it will not be improper to consider other questions which are discussed in the brief.

The decree of the court limits its operation to the ditch, making no reference to the reservation so far as it relates to the roadway. The respondent does not complain of the judgment in any respect, and, therefore, that feature of the reservation pertaining to the road is not before us.

The second part of the reservation reserves, as before noted, to the plaintiff and to "his heirs and assigns" the right to use the ditch for the purpose of running water over their lands, and to extend said ditch for such purpose.

The undisputed evidence shows that, on the 29th day of March, 1904, the defendant entered into negotiations with the plaintiff, as the owner of the N. E. ¼ of section 18, Tp. 4 S., R. 9 E., and plaintiff and said William F. Rose, as the owners of the E. ½ of the N. E. ¼ of said section 18, for the purchase of the lands so described; that on said day the defendant gave to plaintiff his check for the sum of $200, on the back of which was the following indorsement: "This check is to apply on payment of N. E. ¼ and E. ½ of N. W. ¼ of section 18, township 4 S., range 9 Mt. Diablo base and meridian. $42.50 for first description and $40 on last named above, when abstract is examined, and charge interest on full amount of purchase money not before 30 days after this date. W. H. Sisk." On the 8th day of June, 1904, said W. F. Rose and plaintiff, as owners of said lands, and the defendant, entered into and executed the written agreement, already referred to, for the sale by the first parties and the purchase by the defendant of said lands.

There is, in connection with this point, considerable discussion in the briefs of the proposition whether the transaction of March 24, 1904, in which the check mentioned was given by defendant to plaintiff, amounted to an agreement of sale or merely an option, tendered to defendant, to purchase the lands. The court found, in harmony with the theory of plaintiff on the proposition, that the transaction involved an option and not an agreement to sell and buy. We cannot see what material difference it would make, so far as it would affect the right of plaintiff to insert the reservation in the deed, whether the transaction amounted to a contract of sale or only an option. But counsel for appellant declares that if the sale was effected on "December 10th the plaintiff should recover," but that if it took place on "March 29th or June 8th, the defendant should recover." We are unable to perceive in the circumstance, on whatsoever date it might have occurred, any such importance or any particular probative significance. Indeed, if the circumstance ever possessed any weight in its bearing upon the principal question in this case, viz.: Whether the reservation was included in the deed fraudulently and in violation of the agreement of sale between the parties, its importance in that regard, like that of any other circumstance which was offered at the trial in support of the main issue, has been lost, so far as this court is concerned, in the fact that there is disclosed by the record before us ample evidence to support the finding, which in effect declares that the reservation was incorporated in the deed upon an agreement between the parties to the instrument and with the consent of the defendant. Indeed, if all of plaintiff's testimony was credited by the trial court, it justified a direct and unqualified finding that the reservation was inserted in the deed upon an express agreement of the parties.

The plaintiff testified that, on the occasion of the delivery of the check to him by defendant, a conversation occurred between them concerning the conditions of the sale and the covenants of the deed, wherein defendant "consented to have the reservation for the ditch and the road—the ditch that was then constructed on the land." "The deed," continued plaintiff, "was prepared in accordance with the understanding at that time. There was nothing in the deed, as far as I understood it, different from what was understood before the deed was drawn." Mr. W. F. Rose, to some extent, corroborated the testimony of plaintiff on this point.

The defendant, it is true, denied that there was any understanding that the reservation should be inserted in the deed, and declared that he knew nothing of said reservation until long after the deed had been recorded and shortly before the institution of this action. But the testimony introduced by defendant on this point only presents a substantial conflict in the evidence, and, of course, this court cannot settle the issue of veracity between the parties.

It is contended, however, that the deed, with respect to the reservation, is obviously at variance with the terms of the written agreement of sale, in that said agreement not only made no provision for said reservation, but that therein, as before noted, the plaintiff agreed to execute and deliver to the defendant, upon the payment of the consideration, "a good and sufficient deed, conveying said land, free and clear from all incumbrances, made, done or suffered by the said first parties." There is absolutely nothing in this point, and we are of opinion that it presents a question which can have little bearing on the determination here of the principal point in this case. All the prior negotiations and agreements of the parties relative to the sale and purchase of the lands involved here were, of course, merged in the deed of conveyance, and the deed itself must, as we shall presently see, be the sole guide for measuring and determining the rights of the parties thereunder. But the point is given considerable attention by counsel, and we shall therefore examine it to some extent. The argument is that, by the language of the agreement which we have italicized, the plaintiff agreed to convey the land to defendant free from all burdens of whatsoever kind or character, whether they be such as would affect the title or those which would affect only the physical condition of the property, as, for illustration, public roads or rights of way. We think that it is reasonably certain that the "incumbrances" referred to and contemplated by the agreement are of that class only that are defined by section 1114 of the Civil Code, viz.: "Taxes, assessments, and liens." See section 1180, Code Civ. Proc., and section 2872, Civ. Code, for definition of a "lien." If the vendee intended to include all incumbrances of the two general kinds, he should have taken the pains to have explicitly so declared in the agreement, and no doubt would have done so had that been his intention.

In Memmert v. McKeen, 112 Pa. 320, 4 Atl. 544, it is said: "Incumbrances are of two kinds, viz.: 1. Such as affect the title. 2. Those which affect only the physical condition of the property. A mortgage or other lien is a fair illustration of the former; a public road or right of way, of the latter. Where incumbrances of the former class exist, the covenant referred to, under all the authorities, is broken the instant it is made, and it is of no importance that the grantee had notice of them when he took the title. Cathcart v. Bowman, 5 Pa. 317; Funk v. Voneida, 11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 109 [14 Am. Dec. 617]. Such incumbrances are usually of a temporary character and capable of removal; the very object of the covenant is to protect the vendee against them; hence, knowledge, actual or constructive, of their existence, is no answer to an action for breach of such covenant. Where, however, there is a servitude imposed upon the land which is visible to the eye, and which affects not title, but the physical condition of the property, a different rule prevails. Thus it was held in Patterson v. Arthurs, 9 Watts [Pa.] 152, that where the owner had covenanted to convey certain lots free from all incumbrances, a public road, which occupied a portion of such lots, was not an incumbrance within the meaning of the covenant." See Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85; Haldane v. Sweet, 55 Mich. 199, 200, 20 N. W. 902; Harwood v. Benton & Jones, 32 Vt. 724; Scribner v. Holmes, 16 Ind. 142; Burk v. Hill, 48 Ind. 52, 17 Am. Rep. 731; Smith v. Hughes, 50 Wis. 620, 7 N. W. 653.

Speaking of that class of incumbrances that affect only the physical condition of the property, Brewster, in his work on Conveyancing, § 203, says: "In cases where there is a physical burden of this sort, which is visible, there is a fair and reasonable presumption, in the absence of an express agreement, that both parties act with reference to this plain, existing burden, and that the vendor on the one hand demands, and the vendee on the other pays, only the fair value of the land as visibly incumbered. Therefore, it is said such burdens, by way of open and notorious easements, are not really incumbrances within the meaning of this covenant, because the real subject-matter of the dealings between the grantor and the grantee is the land, subject to visible easements."

There is evidence in the record to the effect that, at the time of the check transaction, the ditch on the lands conveyed to defendant, while not fully completed, was "entirely V'd out"; that the defendant, at the time the deed was written and delivered to the abstract company for him, had seen said ditch. Plaintiff testified: "It was a ditch. I think it would have run water through it if run into the upper end." It further appears that the value of the lands owned by plaintiff and his grantees rested largely upon the fact that they could be given the benefit of irrigation by an extension of said ditch to said lands. Under all the authorities, the presumption is, therefore, there being no express agreement to the contrary, that the parties acted in this transaction, in so far, at least, as the ditch is concerned, "with reference to this plain, existing burden," and as so incumbered the land was purchased by defendant. The evidence not only utterly fails to overcome this presumption, but in fact confirms and strengthens it by proof abundantly sufficient to support the findings of the court in favor of said reservation, or, in other words, that the agreement of June 8, 1904, "was not, and was not intended by the parties, to be the full agreement of the parties, * * * and the reservation and agreement therein [the deed] were not contrary to any agreement of the parties and was not in fraud of any right of the defendant," etc., and that plaintiff "had the right to include the reservation contained in the deed referred to in the pleadings herein in said deed," etc.

The foregoing observations virtually dispose of appellant's criticism of finding 10. The court therein found that the defendant "at all times had the means of knowledge of the contents of said deed, though he did not have the actual, personal knowledge thereof, till after its receipt and acceptance by him." The court elsewhere found that the reservation was included in said deed "with the implied knowledge and consent of defendant, but without his actual personal knowledge and consent," etc.

But it seems to us that there is another and conclusive answer to the defense interposed here, and that is, that a party will not be permitted to plead ignorance of the covenants of a deed executed to him, after it has been accepted and recorded, as a ground for defeating the force and effect of such covenants. The presumptions are always in favor of the validity of a deed and its recitals. It is not, of course, claimed that the plaintiff fraudulently or otherwise prevented the defendant from giving the deed personal inspection and thus fully familiarizing himself with its precise provisions and covenants before he accepted and recorded it. The deed, as has been seen, was delivered for the defendant to the Stanislaus Abstract Company, and was recorded by a Mr. Perley, president of said company, for the defendant. The defendant testified that he did not read the deed after it was written or before or after its recordation until a short time before the commencement of this action, and that he knew nothing, from a personal inspection of the instrument, of its contents; the claim being that he had supposed and had reason and right to rely upon the supposition that the contents of the deed corresponded with his interpretation of the terms of the written agreement as to incumbrances. He further denied that the abstract company or any other person had any right to cause to be recorded a deed containing the reservation objected to; but Perley testified that he recorded the deed for defendant, "and he paid me for it." This witness further testified: "While I don't know that Mr. Caswell knew the contents of the deed, he was present and had an opportunity."

It is, as declared, not only true that "the presumption is in favor of the validity of every grant issued in the forms prescribed by law, and that it is incumbent on him who controverts, to support his objections" (Patterson v. Jenks et al., 2 Pet. 216, 7 L. Ed. 402; Payne & Develey v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 228; Latham v. City of Los Angeles, 87 Cal. 518, 25 Pac. 673), but "every person is presumed to read the deed under which he holds, and a failure to read certain recitals contained in the deed cannot avail him as a defense when it is sought to charge him with notice." Devlin on Deeds, § 1002; Weisenberg v. Truman, 58 Cal. 63; Steez v. Kranz, 32 Minn. 313, 20 N. W. 241; Dargin v. Beeker, 10 Iowa, 571; Hamilton v. Nutt, 34 Conn. 501.

It is said in the last of the cited cases: "Men of ordinary prudence will use all reasonable means to ascertain the state and condition of their own titles. Hence, we may lay it down as a rule, founded upon the experience of mankind, that one who has knowledge of the existence of a deed, to which he has access, and which affects the title to property in which he is interested, will, in equity, be presumed to have knowledge of the contents of the deed. * * * Under our recording system a deed duly recorded is constructive notice to all the world; and the law conclusively presumes that every person interested has knowledge not only of the deed, but of its precise language, where that is material. * * * If a man will, under certain circumstances, be presumed to have knowledge of the contents of the deed of another, how much more reasonable is it to presume that he has knowledge of the contents of his own deed." And it is said in Wailes v. Cooper, 24 Miss. 228, that "it is in consonance with reason, that if the title deeds under which a purchaser derives title recite an incumbrance, he will be bound by that recital, and presumed to have had notice of it, whether he has read it or not. For the law will not permit him to deny notice by insisting that he has not read the deed."

From the moment of the filing of the deed here for recordation, the defendant was charged with constructive notice of all its recitals, but, according to his own testimony, he remained supine and apparently indifferent as to its precise provisions from the time it was filed with the recorder—December 24, 1904—until about "a month or two" before the trial of this action, which was in January, 1906. It is therefore very clear that his want of personal knowledge of the precise contents of the deed, prior to its execution, delivery, acceptance, and recordation, if, in truth, he was without such knowledge, was entirely due to his own inexcusable negligence in not fully posting himself, beforehand, on the terms of an instrument to which he was about to bind himself. His excuse that he relied upon plaintiff's written agreement with him and supposed that the deed would correspond therewith is no excuse at all. He had no right, as we have shown, to rely for personal knowledge of the recitals of his deed upon his own interpretation of the scope of said agreement. If such an excuse were available as a defense against the recitals of a deed, many such instruments would rest on exceedingly frail and insecure grounds and court calendars, as a consequence, would soon be congested with all manner of controversies arising out of the unmitigated ignorance of vendors and vendees as to exactly what covenants they intended should be included in the most solemn legal writings to which men may bind themselves—writings which the law, to avoid, as far as possible, future controversies in relation thereto, require and prescribe shall be executed under circumstances of the strictest circumspection, and the evidence thereof preserved in the most public and enduring form.

Other parts of the findings are challenged as not having sufficient support from the proofs, but to these assignments we have already, in effect, replied adversely to the contention of appellant. We have shown that the evidence sufficiently discloses that a ditch, constructed for irrigation purposes, was partly completed on the lands conveyed by plaintiff to defendant at the time of the conveyance. There is also enough support for the finding that "the lands mentioned in said complaint as conveyed to other parties could and can be conveniently irrigated from said ditch," and that "said lands and the land of plaintiff described in said complaint would have received water for such irrigation but for the acts of the defendant."

3. Some of the court's rulings on the evidence are objected to as erroneous and prejudicial. We have discovered no error in any of the challenged rulings, and see no reason for giving these assignments special consideration.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

14 Cal. App. 376

In re JOHNSTON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 769.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 22, 1910.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 786, 787*)—DISMISSAL—LACHES.

Where appellant was guilty of unwarranted laches in prosecuting an appeal and it appears that the appeal was taken for delay and has been abandoned, it will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3128, 3129; Dec. Dig. §§ 786, 787.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of William Johnston, deceased. From a decree of distribution, Josephine A. C. Johnston appeals. Appeal dismissed.

C. M. Beckwith, for appellant Josephine A. C. Johnston. White, Miller & McLaughlin, for respondent for estate.

BURNETT, J. A decree of distribution in the above-entitled estate was rendered in the superior court of Sacramento county on the 4th day of August, 1908. A notice of appeal therefrom was given October 3, 1908. A proposed bill of exceptions was filed September 14, 1908, and amendments thereto proposed by respondent, the administrator of said estate, and served upon appellant on the 13th day of October, 1908. No other step has been taken and no other proceeding had in the prosecution of said appeal. Appellant has manifestly been guilty of unwarranted laches and delay in the premises, and the conclusion is justified that the appeal was taken for delay, and that it has since been abandoned.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The motion to dismiss, based upon the foregoing and other grounds, is not contested. There was, indeed, no appearance by appellant at the hearing.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J., HART, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 349

RIDEOUT v. NATIONAL HOMESTEAD ASS'N. (Civ. 802.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 18, 1910.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 80*)—PRESUMPTIONS—FOREIGN LAWS.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the laws of Arizona are similar to those of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 281*)—OFFICERS—SELECTION.

The organizers of a corporation cannot select its officers; such being the duty of the board of directors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1187; Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 448*)—RATIFICATION OF CONTRACT MADE BY ORGANIZERS—PRESUMPTION.

Since a person suing on an unauthorized contract must show actual ratification, or some affirmative act from which it may be inferred, ratification by a corporation of a contract made by its organizers will not be presumed, even where it has received benefits therefrom, unless it is shown that it had actual knowledge of the specific contract out of which the benefits arose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1709, 1789–1792; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 448*) — UNAUTHORIZED CONTRACT—ESTOPPEL.

A corporation will not be estopped to disaffirm an unauthorized contract of its organizers by receiving the benefits thereof, unless it had knowledge of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1709, 1789–1792; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 407*)—PRESIDENT—POWER TO CONTRACT.

Where the minutes of the board of directors of a corporation authorized its president "to make any contract he saw fit, to employ whom he pleased," while such general authority could extend only to matters relating to the ordinary conduct of the corporate business, yet he could authorize a person to sell corporate stock for which he should receive commissions, as the board could properly delegate such power to the president.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

6. BROKERS (§ 43*)—CONTRACT AUTHORIZING SALE OF CORPORATE STOCK—NECESSITY OF WRITING.

A contract authorizing the sale of corporate stock, certain land to be given to purchasers as a bonus, is not within Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, providing that an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission, shall be invalid, unless made in writing, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by E. G. Rideout against the National Homestead Association. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed upon condition that the plaintiff, within 30 days, file his written consent with the clerk of this court that a certain amount be deducted from the judgment; otherwise the judgment shall be reversed.

Edw. L. Payne, for appellant. L. R. Wharton and Louis W. Myers, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Plaintiff sought to recover upon an alleged contract with defendant corporation through which he claimed $389.50 on account of money paid out for the use and benefit of the corporation, and $1,900, less a payment of $525, on account of services rendered. The court found in favor of plaintiff for each of the amounts claimed; the judgment aggregating $1,764.50. From the judgment and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals upon a statement settled and allowed.

The record discloses that the defendant corporation was organized under the laws of Arizona April 10, 1908; that the first meeting of the board of directors was held April 30, 1908; that prior to the organization of the corporation the promoters thereof authorized plaintiff to incur an indebtedness of $369.50; that after the filing of the articles of association, but before the first meeting of the board of directors, plaintiff personally paid the indebtedness so authorized by the promoters. There is nothing in the record tending to show any affirmative act by the board in connection with this indebtedness or its payment, nor any resolution or minutes in the meetings of the board from which ratification can be claimed. Nor is there anything in the record indicating that the corporation had any agents or any one authorized to transact business in its name, other than the board of directors, before the 30th of April. The evidence in the record to the effect that the articles of incorporation named the officers may be disregarded. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the laws of Arizona are similar to our own, and in this state the selection of the corporate officers is not a matter within the power of the organizers, but is a duty devolving upon the board of directors.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Respondent's contention is that the services being for the benefit of the corporation, and the corporation having accepted such benefits, it is either estopped to deny the authorization, or that the acceptance of such benefits amounted to a ratification. It is incumbent upon a party claiming a resulting benefit to show actual ratification, or some affirmative act from which it may be inferred. Ratification will not be presumed, even when the corporation has received benefits, unless actual knowledge of the specific contract out of which the benefits arose is made to appear (Pacific Bank v. Stone, 121 Cal. 202, 53 Pac. 634), and the same knowledge is essential in considering the question of estoppel. Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 71, 34 Pac. 527. The most that can be claimed in support of ratification or estoppel, from this record, is that two members of the board of directors had knowledge of the contract and the services, but nothing appears showing such knowledge upon the part of the other member of the board. In addition to this, the two members having notice were interested parties to the contract. We are of opinion, therefore, that neither ratification nor matter amounting to an estoppel as against the corporation appears in the record. The corporation, then, not having authorized the $389.50 payment, nor having ratified the contract or payment, it must follow that there is no evidence in the record to support the finding of the court that this money was laid out and expended by plaintiff at the instance and request of the corporation, but, on the contrary, it affirmatively appears that the same was a debt of the promoters for which the corporation is not liable.

There is evidence in the record ample and sufficient in support of the findings of the court with reference to the indebtedness arising on account of the services rendered after June, 1908. The contract with reference to these services was made by the president, and it is shown that the minutes of the board authorized the president "to make any contract he saw fit, to employ whom he pleased." While such general authority could only extend to matters relating to the usual and ordinary conduct of the corporate business, yet the contract under consideration here was a contract the authority to make which could properly be delegated by the board to the president.

It is insisted by appellant that the contract with plaintiff, which was one for the payment of a weekly salary and commissions on sale of corporate stock, was invalid under the provisions of subdivision 6 of section 1624, Civ. Code. This subdivision only relates to agreements authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or commission. The mere fact of plaintiff being authorized to sell corporate stock under an agreement with the purchasers that certain land should be conveyed in the nature of a bonus to such purchasers does not bring the contract within the purview of the subdivision last cited. Plaintiff's employment was not to sell land, nor was he to receive any commissions or brokerage on account thereof; on the contrary he was to receive a commission on account of the sale of corporate stock as an incident to his general employment upon a salary as an agent of the corporation. We think this contract was such as might rest in parol, and that the judgment for the amount unpaid, with reference to the service under such contract, was warranted.

In our opinion, the entire judgment as rendered exceeded the amount which should properly have been awarded to plaintiff to the extent of $389.50, and it is ordered that if the plaintiff, within 30 days from the filing hereof, shall file with the clerk of this court his written consent that the judgment of the superior court be modified by deducting the sum of $389.50 therefrom, leaving the judgment to stand for $1,375, together with interest thereon from August 4, 1909. and costs as therein provided, said judgment shall be modified accordingly and the judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed. Otherwise, and in case plaintiff fails to file such consent in writing, the judgment shall be reversed. In any event, it is ordered that the appellant recover its costs on this appeal.

We concur: SHAW, J; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 353

McPHERSON v. ALTA IRR. DIST. et al.

(Civ. 729.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1910.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 618*) — RES JUDICATA — DEFENSES BARRED.

The defendant, an incorporated irrigation district, had been ordered in a former judgment to place a waste or weir of prescribed dimensions at the intersections of its ditch with a stream for the purpose of preventing an overflow, and had been enjoined from placing boards in the wasteway and from preventing their removal if so placed. The defendant failed to comply with the order of court, and plaintiff, who was a successor in interest of the previous plaintiff, brought action to recover for damages to his land and trees, caused by an overflow of the ditch. Held, that the previous judgment was res judicata as between parties in the later action as to the objection that the enforcement of the injunction would impair or destroy the usefulness of the canal.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1131; Dec. Dig. § 618.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 247*)—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF WORKS — INJURIES — EVIDENCE.

In an action against an incorporated irrigation district for injuries resulting from the construction and maintenance of its works, evidence held sufficient to sustain findings that defendants had violated a previous injunction against obstructing a waste weir, and claimed the right to do so, and would continue so to do unless restrained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 169*)—ISSUE NOT RAISED—REVIEW.

An issue raised for the first time in the appellate court will not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1018–1034; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; P. W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by J. W. McPherson against the Alta Irrigation District and others. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bradley & Farnsworth and Power & McFadzean, for appellants. Lamberson & Lamberson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The defendant Alta irrigation district is a public corporation, organized under what is commonly known as the "Wright Act,"† and the other defendants were directors of said corporation during the time when the acts complained of were committed. As stated by respondent, the plaintiff is the successor in title and estate to the Visalia Savings Bank. By the latter an action was begun in 1897 in the superior court of Tulare county against the said district, in which a judgment was obtained by plaintiff, providing, among other things, that the defendant "forthwith place on the upper side of its said ditch at the intersection of said ditch with the principal channel of said creek (Sand creek) a suitable wasteway or weir for the reception of said waters of said stream which may flow down the same at times of high water, and that said wasteway be at least 100 feet in width, and that said defendant forthwith place on the lower side of its said ditch at said point a wasteway for the purpose of permitting the waters of said stream to escape from said ditch into the channel of said stream below said ditch and that said wasteway be at least 100 feet in width." It appears that the Alta irrigation district did not comply with the order of the court to the extent of placing a wasteway of sufficient width to enable the waters of the ditch to cross the canal. One was constructed of the width of 40 feet on the upper side and but 20 feet on the lower side of said canal. This was insufficient to carry the water at times, and, besides, the flow was obstructed by boards placed in the lower opening. The result was that water and sand filled up the creek channel and the water overflowed the lands of plaintiff and killed a large number of his trees, to his damage in the sum of $600, as found by the court. Plaintiff was also awarded an injunction restraining the defendants from putting or maintaining any boards in said wasteway "in the south bank of the ditch or canal of the defendant Alta irrigation district where the said ditch or canal intersects and crosses the channel of Sand creek near the south boundary line of the land of plaintiff and from keeping or maintaining the same therein, and from preventing the plaintiff, his agents and employés, from removing said boards from said wasteway should said boards at any time be placed therein, at all times when the waters flowing down the channel of said creek flow as far as to the said ditch or canal of said defendant the Alta irrigation district at the point of location of said wasteway."

There is evidence that the overflow of plaintiff's land and the damage to his trees was caused by the acts of defendants hereinbefore specified. We have therefore clearly a case of the violation of a valid order of the said superior court and also of a failure to comply with a statutory duty imposed by section 38 of said Wright act, providing that "the board of directors shall have power to construct the said works across any stream of water, water course, street, avenue * * * which the route of said canal or canals may intersect or cross, in such manner as to afford security for life and property; but said board shall restore the same when so crossed or intersected to its former state as nearly as may be, or in a sufficient manner not to have impaired unnecessarily its usefulness." The injury to plaintiff being the direct result of the breach of an obligation on the part of defendants and the evidence showing that the award was not excessive, the judgment is manifestly just and should be upheld, unless a reversal is demanded by some prejudicial error appearing in the record. Nothing of the kind is pointed out, and we cannot be expected, of course, to make an independent investigation to discover some ground not designated by counsel for interference with the action of the court below.

Appellants complain that the enforcement of the injunction will impair or destroy the usefulness of the canal, but that question was determined by the former adjudication, and said judgment is conclusive between the parties here. Besides, no reference is made to any part of the transcript disclosing any evidence to support the contention.

The nearest approach to any definite assignment of error in the brief of appellants is the specification that finding 1, to the effect that the board of directors of the district maintained boards in the wasteway by force of arms from February 17 to May 20, 1907, and that they refused to permit these boards to be removed, and finding 3, that they believed that they had a right to keep the boards in the wasteway at all times, that they would continue to do so, and would continue to prevent the plaintiff from taking them out at all times when there was water in the channel of said creek, unless restrained by injunction, are unsupported by the evidence. Reference is made to the testimony of plaintiff that Mr. Toler, the ditch tender, took the boards out on each occasion when the waters of Sand creek rose to a great height, that he was there to take them out when the waters got so high in Sand creek that the Alta canal would not carry it, and that it was plaintiff's understanding that Mr. Toler was acting under instructions from the managers of the Alta in doing what he did. It is manifest, however, that some of these particular findings may be disregarded, as it is clear that defendants were maintaining said boards in said wasteway, and that they intended to maintain them in the future, and that plaintiff's rights were thereby invaded and his property injured. These latter considerations found by the court are sufficient to support the judgment. But the findings assailed are entirely justified by certain facts detailed by the witnesses as follows: The plaintiff removed the boards on several different occasions and they were put back by the defendants, and guards were stationed there day and night, relieving each other, from April 18th to March 20th. On April 19th plaintiff attempted to take the boards out, but was prevented from doing so by the said Toler. The attitude of the board is further shown by the testimony of one of the defendants, H. R. McGee, that "nobody was ever injured by keeping the boards in the wasteway either. I know Mr. McPherson complained about that. He complained that injury was done by keeping those in the wasteway, but I know it was not a fact. We could very easily have obviated that difficulty and put him in the wrong by opening the wasteway. I didn't do it because I didn't want to. I don't understand that is the law." There is evidence also that Mr. McGee said he would keep the waters of Sand creek in the ditch if one-half the men in Orosi lay in jail while the other half kept it there. The whole conduct of defendants, indeed, shows that they claimed the right to remove and replace the boards at their own volition and in accordance with their own judgment as to the necessities of the case. The findings of the court, however, amply supported by the evidence, were opposed to this view.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

†St. 1887, p. 29; St. 1891, p. 244.

The suggestion of appellants that as the ditch had been permitted to remain across the channel of Sand creek for a great number of years, plaintiff must be deemed to have acquiesced in the existing condition of things, is satisfactorily answered by respondent as follows: "This contention cannot prevail for the reason that there is no evidence upon this subject as to whether or not the ditch had been permitted peacefully to remain in its condition as shown by the evidence at the time the injuries were committed or otherwise. It is shown by the record that an action had been commenced some years ago by the Visalia Savings Bank to compel the district to place a wasteway through the canal for the purpose of permitting the waters of Sand creek to flow through the same, but there was no evidence by either side as to whether the keeping of the ditch and its banks across said channel had been permitted in a peaceful manner for any length of time whatever. Evidence of interruption by cutting the banks of the ditch for the purpose of allowing the waters of Sand creek to flow through the same could not have been introduced by the plaintiff in this case in chief, nor could it have been introduced in rebuttal, because the defendants offered no evidence upon that subject, and there was neither plea in the answer, nor evidence tending to show the quiet or peaceable possession by the defendants of the canal in the condition in which it was found by the evidence in this case." If defendants had desired to rely upon such consideration, they should, of course, have put it in issue.

There is apparently no reason why we should disturb the conclusion of the trial court, and the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

14 Cal. App. 363

MACLAY CO. v. MEADS et al. (Civ. 720.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 20, 1910. Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1910.)

1. APPEARANCE (§§ 9, 24*)—OBJECTIONS TO COMPLANT—OBJECTIONS TO JURISDICTION—WAIVER.

Where defendants objected to a default judgment because it was unsupported by the complaint, they thereby appeared generally and waived any objection to the service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 52, 118–143; Dec. Dig. §§ 9, 24.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 158*)—DEFAULT—APPLICATION TO VACATE—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS.

Where defendants applied to vacate a default judgment and filed a demurrer to the complaint, it was not necessary that an affidavit of merits be filed; the motion not being based on Code Civ. Proc. § 473, permitting amendments, and authorizing the court to relieve defendants not personally served from certain judgments, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 311; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 213*) — ACTION AGAINST FIRM—COMPLAINT.

The caption of a complaint described the defendants by name, with the addition, "individually and as copartners under the firm name and style of Petaluma Transportation Company," etc. The complaint did not allege that the transportation company was a partnership, except as stated in the caption, and by implication from a paragraph which charged that defendants were using the rented premises for wharfage purposes, either as agents of certain of the defendants named or some of them or others unknown to plaintiff constituting the Petaluma Transportation Company or as members of said partnership under the firm name and style of Petaluma Transportation Company. Other parts of the complaint alleged that defendants named were acting under the name of Petaluma Transportation Company, but whether such company was a partnership, association, or corporation did not appear. Held, that the reference to defendants as members of such transportation company was mere descriptio personæ, and hence the complaint stated no cause of action against the firm.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 408, 409; Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

4. PARTNERSHIP (§ 219*)—JUDGMENT—PROCESS —SERVICE.

Where an action was brought against the members of a firm in their individual capacity only, service of summons on one member or on all does not constitute service on the firm, and, in order to bind all the members by any judgment obtained, service must have been made on all.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 429-445; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 219*)—ACTION—SERVICE—JUDGMENT.

Where an action is against a firm, service on one or more of the members is sufficient to bind the firm, and the judgment obtained therein is binding not only on the joint property of all the associates, but also on the individual property of the party or parties served with process, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 388.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 429-445; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 18*) — APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS.

A judgment in favor of plaintiff is unsustainable, where it has no primary support in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-37; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

7. JUDGMENT (§ 147*) — VACATION—PERFORMANCE.

Where a judgment by default in an unlawful detainer proceeding providing for surrender of the premises and payment of treble the amount of rent found due against a firm and the partners individually was unsustained by the complaint in so far as it constituted a judgment against the firm, the fact that it had been performed in so far as it required a surrender of the premises did not constitute such a total extinguishment and performance thereof as would prevent the firm from maintaining a motion to have it set aside as to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Maclay Company against N. L. Meads and others, individuals and as copartners under the name of the Petaluma Transportation Company, and others. From an order setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lippitt & Lippitt, for appellant. W. H. Early, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside the judgment and default entered in favor of the plaintiff.

The action is for unlawful detainer, and was instituted on the 23d day of November, 1909, for the purpose of securing restitution of certain premises, situated in the city of Petaluma, Sonoma county, which were, by an instrument in writing, leased by the plaintiff to N. L. Meads, one of the defendants herein, for the term of one year, from the 1st day of July, 1908, at the monthly rental of $75, payable in advance on the 1st day of each and every month during said term, and for judgment for treble the amount of rent found by the court to be due. Section 1174, Code Civ. Proc.

The complaint alleges that said Meads "assigned said written agreement and lease to the Petaluma Transportation Company"; that "said defendants N. L. Meads, Chas. P. Doe, G. L. Ray, and H. G. Cox, or some of said defendants, or others to this plaintiff unknown, constituted, and, at the time of said assignment of said lease constituted, the Petaluma Transportation Company," and that said defendants, or some of them, or others unknown to the plaintiff, "acting and assuming to act under the name and style of Petaluma Transportation Company, continue to hold possession of said premises as tenants of this plaintiff." It is further alleged that, although the right of said defendants to the possession of the premises expired under the terms of said lease on the 30th day of June, 1909, they "have continued and are now in the possession of said premises, as tenants of this plaintiff." The complaint further declares that "on the 27th day of September, 1909, and more than 30 days before the expiration of the month of October, 1909, the plaintiff gave notice in writing to the defendants, changing the terms of said tenancy, to take effect at the expiration of the month of October, 1909, increasing the rental of said premises to the sum of three hundred dollars for the month of November, 1909, payable on the 1st day of November, 1909." The defendants, so the complaint further avers, failed and refused to pay to the plaintiff the said sum of $300 on the 1st day of November, 1909, then due for rent of said premises, "pursuant to the lease from month to month between the plaintiff and defendants, as hereinbefore alleged, and pursuant to the said notice in writing changing the terms thereof," and that, by reason of the said default in the payment of said rent, there is due plaintiff from defendants the sum of $300, etc.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The ninth paragraph of the complaint reads as follows: "That the premises hereinbefore described and leased by the plaintiff to the defendants as aforesaid, at all the times hereinbefore mentioned, have been used by the steamer Resolute and the owners thereof for wharfage purposes; said steamer Resolute and the owners thereof so acting and using said premises for wharfage purposes, either as agents of the defendants, N. L. Meads, Charles P. Doe, G. L. Ray, and H. G. Cox, or some of them, or others unknown to the plaintiff constituting Petaluma Transportation Company, or as members of said partnership under the firm name and style of Petaluma Transportation Company." Immediately upon the filing of the complaint, a summons, addressed to all the defendants named in the title of the action, was caused to be issued, and on the same day said summons was served on the defendants Meads and Ray. There also appears in the record before us an affidavit of a purported service of said summons on the Petaluma Transportation Company. This affidavit was by one Reuben G. Hunt, who alleged therein that on the 23d day of November, 1909, he "personally served a summons in the above-entitled action hereto annexed and made part hereof, on the Petaluma Transportation Company, one of the defendants therein named, by delivering to N. L. Meads, personally known to me to be a member of said partnership, a copy of said summons," etc. The summons, as the statute requires to be done in such case (section 1167, Code Civ. Proc.), commanded the defendants to appear and answer the complaint within three days after the service of said summons upon them, and notified them that, unless they did so appear and answer, the plaintiff would apply for the relief asked for in the complaint. None of the defendants thus served answered the complaint or otherwise appeared in the action within the time named in the summons and as prescribed by the statute, and accordingly, on the 27th day of November, 1909, the plaintiff applied for a default, which application was granted and judgment thereupon entered against the defendants Meads, Ray, and the Petaluma Transportation Company, adjudging plaintiff to be entitled to the possession of the demanded premises, annulling and forfeiting the lease, and for treble the amount of the rent ($300) alleged to be due.

On the 29th day of November, 1909, the defendants appeared and served and filed a notice of motion to set aside the default entered against them, and at the same time served and filed a general demurrer to the complaint. This motion was made upon the grounds: (1) That said default was entered by the clerk of the court contrary to section 1169 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that the defendant Petaluma Transportation Company was not served with summons. On the 3d day of December, 1909, the plaintiff caused to be issued a writ of restitution, directed to the sheriff of Sonoma county, who executed said writ by placing the appellant in possession of the premises concerned here, and on the 6th day of December, 1909, said officer made a return to that effect on said writ to the court. On the last-mentioned date the motion of defendants to set aside the default was heard and denied by the court; permission, however, being granted defendants to notice and file a motion to vacate and set aside the judgment. Thereafter defendants served and filed a motion to vacate the judgment on the following grounds: (1) That the court was without jurisdiction to enter the judgment; (2) that the judgment is not supported by the pleadings; (3) that the defaults of the defendants herein were not entered. This motion was heard by the court on the 13th day of December, 1909, and an order made granting the same on the 20th day of December, 1909. With the notice of the last-mentioned motion the defendants filed an affidavit of merits, made by the defendant Cox, in which it is alleged, among other things, that affiant is a member of the "copartnership in the Petaluma Transportation Company; * * * that this affiant was not served with summons and had no notice of said action served on him either by way of summons and complaint or otherwise; that affiant has consulted his attorney, W. H. Early, and is informed by his said attorney that he has a good and perfect defense to the said action on the merits which said defense is based on a certain indenture of lease, a copy of which said lease is hereto attached and made a part of this affidavit; * * * that affiant is informed by his said attorney that the said lease is in full force and virtue and a good and perfect defense to each and every part of said action on its merits." The lease so referred to appears to have been executed by plaintiff and the Petaluma Transportation Company, "by N. L. Meads, Mgr.," in the month of July, 1909, and purports to lease to the Petaluma Transportation Company the premises in dispute for the term of four years, "from and after July 1st, 1909, at the rent of $3,600.00, payable in monthly installments of $75.00, * * * in advance on the first day of each and every month during the term hereof."

1. By objecting to the judgment on the ground that it was unsupported by the allegations of the complaint, the defendants undoubtedly made a general appearance, and thus waived the objection that the court was without jurisdiction to render and enter the judgment because the defendants were not or might not have been served with summons. In Burdette v. Corgan, 26 Kan. 102, it is said: "The motion to vacate the judgment recited that the parties specially appeared and moved to set aside the judgment as void for several reasons—among them that the petition of the plaintiff did not state facts sufficient to uphold the judgment. * * * In the first place, we remark that this appearance by the motion, though called special, was in fact a general appearance, and by it this defendant appeared so far as she could appear. The motion challenged the judgment, not merely on jurisdictional, but also on nonjurisdictional, grounds, and, whenever such a motion is made, the appearance is general, no matter what the parties may call it in their motion." The rule as thus stated is expressly approved by our Supreme Court in the case of Security, etc., Co. v. Boston, etc., Co., 126 Cal. 418–423, 58 Pac. 941, 59 Pac. 296. See, also, Lowe v. Stringham, 14 Wis. 222; Gilbert-Arnold Land Co. v. O'Hare, 93 Wis. 194, 67 N. W. 38; In re Clarke, 125 Cal. 388, 58 Pac. 22; 2 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 625, notes and cases cited. The filing of a demurrer and an affidavit of merits—the latter unnecessary, since, obviously, the motion is not based on section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure (De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165)—is a move addressed to the merits by the defendants here, and is additional evidence of a general appearance, if, indeed, more evidence is necessary to show a general appearance than is disclosed by the objection to the judgment on the ground that it is not "supported by the pleadings." Indeed, said objection is itself, in effect, a demurrer to the complaint, and it is therefore very clear that the defendants thus challenge the judgment on a ground other than that of want of jurisdiction of the persons of the defendants.

2. But we think the complaint fails to state a cause of action against the defendant Petaluma Transportation Company, or, in other words, the action is not against said company. The caption of the complaint reads: "Maclay Company, a Corporation, v. N. L. Meads, Charles P. Doe, H. G. Cox and G. L. Ray, Individually and as Co-partners Under the Firm Name and Style of Petaluma Transportation Company," etc. From an examination of the complaint it is to be noted that nowhere therein does it even appear that the Petaluma Transportation Company is a partnership, except in the caption and by implication only in paragraph 9 thereof, heretofore quoted herein. The third paragraph declares that Meads, one of the defendants, and to whom the premises were originally leased, subsequently assigned said lease to the "Petaluma Transportation Company," without alleging the character of said company, whether a partnership, association, or corporation. Paragraph 4 alleges that the persons named as defendants in the caption of the complaint, "or some of them, or other persons unknown to plaintiff," constituted at the time of said assignment of said lease, the Petaluma Transportation Company, and that they still "have possession of said premises as tenants of this plaintiff." In other parts of the complaint it is averred that the defendants, Meads, Doe, Ray, and Cox, etc., are acting under the name of Petaluma Transportation Company, but whether said transportation company is a partnership or an association or a corporation is not therein made to appear. The caption of the summons is, we infer from the record, the same as the caption of the complaint. The summons is directed to the defendants named in the caption of the complaint in the following language: "The people of the state of California send greeting to N. L. Meads, Charles P. Doe, H. G. Cox and G. L. Ray, individually and as copartners under the firm name and style of Petaluma Transportation Company," etc., and directs them to appear and answer the complaint. The person who served the summons, as we have seen, made a return as to the Petaluma Transportation Company that he had personally served said summons on said company "by delivering to N. L. Meads, personally known to me to be a member of said partnership, a copy of said summons," etc.

The judgment is against "the said defendants, composing said partnership under the firm name and style of Petaluma Transportation Company for the sum of three hundred dollars, trebled as provided by statute, to wit, nine hundred dollars," together with costs, and for annulment and forfeiture of said lease and for restitution of said premises. It will be observed that, so far as the caption of the complaint is concerned, the action is not against the Petaluma Transportation Company, a partnership, but against the persons expressly named as individuals and members of said partnership and others fictitiously named. The words "and as copartners under the firm name and style of the Petaluma Transportation Company" do not, and cannot, make the said partnership a party defendant to the action. The words referred to are merely descriptive—that is, they do no more than unnecessarily describe or identify the particular persons proceeded against, in their individual capacities, whatever may have been the intention of the pleader in so using them. They, in other words, amount to no more than would the following language if employed in the caption of the complaint: "Maclay Company, etc., v. John Jones and William Smith, Individually and as Residents of the City of Petaluma." Surely, no one would for a moment contend, even if such a thing were possible, that such allegation even in the charging part of a complaint would or could be construed to include the city of Petaluma as a party defendant. Nor does it appear from the averments of the complaint that the transportation company was or is made a party. The nearest the complaint even comes to alleging that said transportation company is a partnership is, as seen, in paragraph 9 thereof. But this allegation, while perhaps sufficient, as against a general demurrer, to indicate that the transportation company is a partnership, does not make the action one against such partnership.

The case of Davidson v. Knox, 67 Cal. 143, 7 Pac. 413, bears a striking resemblance to the one at bar in all particulars. There the caption of the complaint contained the names of certain persons, "copartners doing business under the firm name of Knox & Osborne." The complaint alleged that said persons (naming them) "now are, * * * and have been, partners and associates, doing business under the firm name of Knox & Osborne, and as such partners and associates, owning, working and operating a certain quartz mine and quartz mill," etc. The prayer of the complaint, as here, asked for judgment against "said defendants." The caption of the summons was, as here, in the words of the caption of the complaint. The direction and notification to the defendants in the summons were the same as in the summons here. The judgment rendered and entered was against all the defendants, two of whom were not served with summons. The court said: "We are of opinion that this is an action against the individual partners doing business under the firm name of Knox & Osborne, on partnership contracts," etc. See sections 414, 388, Code Civ. Proc.

In Feder v. Epstein et al., 69 Cal. 456, 10 Pac. 785, the title of the action in the complaint was: "Moses M. Feder, Plaintiff, v. Samuel Epstein and Wolf Epstein, Partners, Under the Firm Name of Epstein Brothers, Defendants." The complaint alleged that the defendants "have been and now are partners under the firm name aforesaid." The prayer was for "judgment against said defendants," etc. The summons contained the same title as the complaint, and then followed: "The people of the state of California send greeting to Samuel Epstein and Wolf Epstein, defendants," and "concluded with a notice that, if the defendants failed to appear and answer the complaint, the 'plaintiff will take judgment against you,' etc. The sheriff returned that he served the summons 'on Epstein Brothers, by delivering to Samuel Epstein, one of said defendants, personally in the county of Ventura, a copy of said summons,' etc." Samuel Epstein failed to appear and answer, and a judgment of default was entered against him. Thereafter the plaintiff filed a motion for permission to so amend the judgment as to "make it a judgment against the firm of Epstein Bros., and to be enforced against the joint property of the firm as well as against Samuel Epstein and his separate property." The motion was denied, and the Supreme Court, sustaining this ruling, said: "We see no error in the ruling. The associates were not sued by their common name, but by their individual names, and the case was therefore not within the provisions of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure"—citing Davidson v. Knox, supra.

In the investigation of this proposition the case of Peabody v. Oleson, 15 Colo. App. 348, 62 Pac. 235 (not cited by either of the parties here), has come under our observation. The suit was against the individual members of the partnership and not against the partnership by name. The contention there was that under a section of the Colorado Code, in all respects similar to section 388 of our Code of Civil Procedure, the suit should have been brought against the partnership by its name, and that "there was no authority for a judgment against the individuals composing the firm." It was there held that, under the law of Colorado, a party had the right, in case of a partnership liability, either to sue all the members of the partnership by their individual names, thus binding them all to any judgment which might be obtained, or sue the partnership by the partnership name. And we do not say that either course may not be pursued in this state. But where, as here, the action is against the members of the partnership in their individual character, and not against the partnership by its partnership name, the effect of service of process or summons on one member, or on all the members, is not to summons the partnership but only the member or members upon whom such service is had and, in such case, in order to bind all the members of the firm by any judgment which may be obtained in the action, service of summons must be made on all. Of course, where the action is against the partnership, then, by the terms of section 388, supra, service of summons on one or more of the members of the partnership is sufficient, and thereby the judgment in the action is binding not only upon "the joint property of all the associates," but also upon "the individual property of the party or parties served with process." We entertain no doubt that, tested by the provisions of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the decisions to which we have directed attention, the complaint here falls far short of disclosing that plaintiff, however much it may have intended to do so, proceeded against the Petaluma Transportation Company. As in Davidson v. Knox, supra, and Feder v. Epstein, supra, so it is true here, that the defendants, though constituting, according to the averments of the complaint, the partnership named the Petaluma Transportation Company, "were not sued by their common name, but by their individual names," and the action was therefore against each member of said partnership in his personal, and not in his partnership, character.

It requires the citation of no authorities to show that a judgment in favor of plaintiff must have for its primary support a complaint which states a cause of action against the defendant. To undertake to rest a judgment upon an alleged complaint which is bad for want of sufficient facts would, of course, be no less an act of futility than an attempted defiance of the inexorable law of gravitation. The complaint here is, it is true, sufficient as against those individuals that are proceeded against, but it is no complaint against the transportation company, as to which a judgment rendered and entered thereupon would obviously be coram non judice.

But the point is made that the judgment cannot be vacated because it has been executed in part as to all the parties, including the transportation company, and upon this proposition our attention is invited to cases cited in the footnotes of 23 Cyc. 893. See Penfold v. Singleton, 36 Ga. 556; Skillings v. Mass. Ben. Ass'n, 151 Mass. 321, 23 N. E. 1136; Davis v. Blair, 88 Mo. App. 372; Foster v. Hauswirth, 5 Mont. 566, 6 Pac. 19; Galbraith v. Cooper, 24 N. J. Law, 219; Alverson v. Alverson, 2 R. I. 27; Enders v. Burch, 15 Grat. (Va.) 64. But an examination of these authorities will show that in each case there was, before the motion was made, a "total extinguishment of the judgment by a full and complete performance of its mandates and directions" (Davis v. Blair, supra), and therefore the judgment, which in each case was for money, became functus officio. It cannot be said that there has been "a full and complete performance of the mandates and directions" of the judgment here. According to the record only that portion of the mandates of the judgment restoring the premises to the plaintiff has been performed, while that portion awarding to plaintiff rent in the sum of $300, trebled, is "very much alive."

We think the court made no error in granting the motion as to the Petaluma Transportation Company, and the order is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

14 Cal. App. 347

MULLER et al. v. MULLER et al. (Civ. 849.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 18, 1910.)

1. PARTITION (§ 77*)—PARTITION IN KIND—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In partition, the land should be partitioned in kind, unless such partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners; the matter of a sale being in most cases one of discretion in the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 211–223; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

2. PARTITION (§ 77*)—SALE.

In partition of a city lot fronting 90 feet on one street and 57½ feet on another, wherein the three plaintiffs owned an undivided five-eighths interest, incumbered by various mortgages and liens, and the three defendants owned an undivided three-eighths, and several witnesses testified that the lot could be sold as a whole for a much better price than if subdivided, and that, if subdivided into two lots, their combined value would not equal the value of the lot as a whole, there was no abuse of discretion in ordering a sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 211–223; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Partition action by John H. W. Muller and others against George A. Muller and others. From an interlocutory decree ordering a sale of the real estate, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Garber, Creswell & Garber, for appellants. E. J. Talbott and Wm. J. Herrin, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. This appeal is from an interlocutory decree in partition by which a sale of the real estate described therein is ordered. The trial court found "that the real estate described in the complaint and hereinafter is so situated that actual partition thereof cannot be made without great prejudice to the plaintiffs and the defendants, the owners of said real property." The only question raised is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding.

We have examined the evidence, and conclude that it is sufficient to support the finding. The land is a lot in the city and county of San Francisco, fronting 90 feet on Mission street and 57½ feet on Eleventh street. The plaintiffs own an undivided five-eighths interest, incumbered by various mortgages and liens, and the defendants own an undivided three-eighths interest therein. Several witnesses testified that the lot would sell much more readily and for a much better price if sold as a whole than if it were subdivided, and that if it were subdivided into two lots the combined value of the two lots would not be as great as the value of the lot as a whole. The rule is that the land should be partitioned in kind, unless such partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners. The courts favor a partition in kind where it is practicable, and this for the reason that the owners of real estate should not be deprived of their title thereto through a sale, unless such sale is necessary to prevent great prejudice to the owners. In most cases the matter is one of discretion in the trial court. Considering the size of the lot, the number of owners, and the testimony of real estate experts, we cannot hold that the court abused its discretion.

The decree is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

14 Cal. App. 342

BILICKE v. JANSS. (Civ. 774.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 17, 1910.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 173*)—PREMISES —POSSESSION—DISTURBANCE OF POSSESSION —ACTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

Where a lease contained a covenant that the landlord should not be liable for damages to the lessee by the acts of other tenants and occupants, there was no constructive eviction because the acts of another tenant rendered the leased premises unfit for the purpose for which they were engaged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 705–707; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 172*)—PREMISES —POSSESSION—DISTURBANCE OF POSSESSION.

The mere fact that a landlord rents premises to a tenant whose occupancy disturbs the other tenants does not amount to an eviction in the absence of appropriate covenants in the lease. Thus a landlord who let part of his premises to a butcher who smoked meat upon them, to the annoyance of another tenant who engaged his premises for a physicians' institute, did not evict the latter, where the lease specifically provided that the landlord should not be liable for the acts of other tenants, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 695–703; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 172*)—PREMISES —POSSESSION—DISTURBANCE—USE OF OTHER PREMISES OF THE LANDLORD.

In the absence of a covenant to that effect, a tenant has no right to dictate the landlord's possession of other portions of his premises, save that he shall not maintain a nuisance, nor let the same for a business which, notwithstanding reasonable care on the part of the tenant, would constitute a nuisance, so that a landlord who lets premises to a butcher, the smoke from whose shop annoys others, is not liable to other tenants, where there is no covenant to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 695–703; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 180*)—REVIEW— FINDINGS—IMMATERIALITY.

As a tenant cannot maintain a claim of constructive eviction because of the acts of another tenant unless the landlord is responsible for what the tenant does, a finding of the trial court that the lessor could reasonably have remedied the evil caused by the objectionable practices of another tenant, of which the first tenant complained, is immaterial, where there is no covenant or legal duty imposed on the landlord to remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by A. C. Bilicke against P. Janss. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Foster C. Wright, for appellant. Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover monthly installments of rent for July and August, 1907, upon a lease of a storeroom. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals upon the judgment roll alone, claiming the judgment is not supported by the findings.

The lease was made to one E. W. Raymond, and in consideration of its execution defendant agreed that if the lessee should not pay the rent specified in the lease in accordance with the terms and provisions thereof, he would pay the same on demand therefor. The suit is against defendant upon this guaranty. While several defenses are set up in the answer, the only one urged on the appeal is the alleged constructive eviction of the lessee from the leased premises by plaintiff. The question therefore presented is whether or not the facts found by the court, considered with the admitted covenants of the written lease made on the part of the lessee, show his eviction by plaintiff. The premises, which were leased for the period of 30 months, commencing July 1, 1906, and for the purpose of conducting the business of a physicians' institute, are situated in Los Angeles and described in the lease as "That certain storeroom known as and numbered 504 South Main street, comprising the space about seventeen feet wide and about sixty-seven feet in depth from the easterly line of said Main street, together with a space in the rear of these premises and on an elevation of about seven feet above the same, said rear space being approximately thirty-five feet wide, six feet deep to an alley." By the terms of the lease the tenant covenanted and agreed that the landlord should not be liable or accountable for "any damage arising from any act or neglect of any co-tenant or other occupants of the same building, or of any owners or occupants of adjacent or contiguous property."

These facts, omitting certain conclusions of law embodied in the findings, are, in substance, as follows: That underneath the premises covered by the lease, and forming a part of the building owned by plaintiff and under his control, was at all of the times mentioned a covered driveway, extending from a public alley in the rear of the building into and under the leased premises for a distance of about 50 feet; that said covered driveway was covered by the floor of a portion of the premises leased to Raymond; that abutting on and opening into said driveway were several storerooms forming a part of the same building so owned by plaintiff, and fronting on Fifth street; that at all of said times one of said storerooms was occupied as a meat market and butcher shop, the occupant thereof holding as a tenant of plaintiff under a lease of the same; that for a considerable period of time prior to January 1, 1907, and continuing to July 10, 1907, the lessee discovered that said leased storeroom was filled and permeated with a stench, foul odors and offensive smoke, which came from said covered driveway, seeping through the floor of said leased storeroom into said premises; that up to April 1, 1907, said odors and offensive smoke were caused by the acts of the tenant of said butcher shop due to the killing of poultry in the driveway and the trying out of lard in the room occupied as a meat market and butcher shop; that about April 1, 1907, upon complaint being made to the landlord, said butcher tenant, under instructions from the landlord, discontinued the killing of chickens in said driveway and the rendering of lard upon his premises, but from said date to the date of the abandonment of the premises by the lessee the tenant of said butcher shop "continued the smoking of meat on his own premises, erecting certain hoods and smoke pipes and vent pipes extending into and through said private alley or driveway; * * * that from time to time smoke and smells escaped therefrom into said driveway and continued to exude and go through the floor of said leased premises involved herein"; that said condition was reported to and known by plaintiff, who failed to remedy the evil conditions when he could reasonably have remedied them; that at the time of the execution of the lease the lessee, Raymond, examined the premises and found no foul odors or offensive smoke therein; that by reason of said offensive smoke and smells permeating the leased premises the same were rendered unfit for the uses specified in the lease and were, early in July, 1907, abandoned by the lessee, who removed his property therefrom.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Not only was there no covenant on the part of the landlord that the premises were fit and suitable for the purpose for which they were leased, but the storeroom was in use as a butcher shop and meat market at the time the lease was executed to Raymond, and he must be deemed to have accepted the lease with full knowledge of the conditions existing by reason of conducting a meat market and butcher shop in close proximity to the premises so leased by him. The lease imposed no duty upon the landlord to keep and maintain either the leased or other premises in a condition fit and suitable for carrying on the business of a physicians' institute. On the contrary, it expressly provided that, in so far as other tenants and occupants of the building were concerned, the landlord should not be accountable for any damages sustained by the lessee by reason of the acts of such other tenants and occupants. Hence, the finding that the leased premises were rendered unfit for the purposes for which they were leased did not in itself constitute an ouster. Kistler v. Wilson et al., 77 Ill. App. 149; Cougle v. Densmore, 57 Ill. App. 591. "The mere fact that the landlord rents premises to a tenant who carries on a business there incompatible with the convenient occupation of adjoining premises, also rented by the same landlord, does not amount to an eviction, and, in the absence of a provision to that effect in the lease, does not relieve the tenant who suffers from the nuisance from the obligation of paying rent under his lease." Gray v. Gaff, 8 Mo. App. 329. Clearly, the landlord was not responsible for the acts of the tenant smoking meat upon his own premises. If such acts of the butcher tenant constituted a substantial grievance, redress should have been had against the offending tenant, and not against the landlord. Seaboard Realty Co. v. Fuller, 33 Misc. Rep. 109, 67 N. Y. Supp. 146.

The court found that the private driveway extending under the leased premises was in the control of plaintiff. A fair interpretation of this finding is that plaintiff exercised like dominion over this private driveway that he did over one of the storerooms of the building. It was not appurtenant to the leased premises and was no part thereof. As against the lessor, in the absence of any express covenant in the lease touching the subject, the lessee had no right other than to insist that the landlord should not maintain a nuisance therein himself, nor let the same for some business which, notwithstanding the exercise of reasonable care on the part of the tenant in the conduct thereof, would, nevertheless, constitute a nuisance. Gray v. Gaff, supra; French v. Pettingill, 128 Mo. App. 156, 106 S. W. 575; McKinny v. Browning, 126 App. Div. 370, 110 N. Y. Supp. 562. Obviously, offensive smoke and odors could not have escaped from a properly constructed line of pipe extending through this driveway. That they did escape is conceded by appellant to have been due to the fact that the pipes and appliances were defective. It does not appear, however, that the landlord authorized the use of such defective means for carrying off the smoke and odors.

The facts as disclosed by the record fail to show that plaintiff was responsible for the evil conditions found to exist. "A constructive eviction from a leasehold cannot be claimed by a tenant because of the acts of another tenant of a portion of the premises, unless the landlord is responsible for what the tenant does." French v. Pettingill, supra. If not responsible, then the fact, as found by the court, that the lessor could reasonably have remedied the evil, is immaterial, for the reason that neither the law nor the covenants of the lease imposed upon him any duty to remedy it.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

14 Cal. App. 359

WOLFE v. LANGFORD et al. (Civ. 844.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 19, 1910.)

1. Adverse Possession (§ 12*)—Sufficiency to Give Title—Actual Possession.

Actual possession of land under a claim of ownership without any paper title is sufficient to give title as against one having no right or title in himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 65, 66; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. Mortgages (§ 304*) — Release — Effect — Release by Absolute Deed.

A deed executed by a grantee in a prior deed, which was in fact a mortgage, to the grantor therein, and intended to operate as a release of the mortgage, conveys no title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 872; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

3. Attachment (§ 180*)—Judgment (§ 788*)—Priorities — Unrecorded Deed — "Instrument."

Neither an attachment nor a judgment is an "instrument," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1107, making a grant conclusive against the grantor and all subsequently claiming under him except a purchaser or incumbrancer, who in good faith and for value acquired a title or lien by an instrument that is first duly recorded, so that one taking under an unrecorded deed held by a title superior to the right of one claiming under a subsequent attachment and judgment against the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 563–575; Dec. Dig. § 180;* Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1368, 1369; Dec. Dig. § 788.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3665–3668.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by H. M. Wolfe against Arthur B. Langford and another, in which the unnamed defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff and against cross-complainant, and from an order denying their motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Will M. Beggs and R. C. McComish, for appellants. Wm. A. Bowden, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action to obtain a decree, enjoining defendants from enforcing a writ of execution against a certain piece of real estate alleged to belong to plaintiff. Defendant, Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, besides answering the complaint, filed a cross-complaint for a decree establishing that a certain judgment obtained by it against one George T. Dunlap is a valid lien against the said property. Plaintiff obtained judgment as prayed for, and the court denied any relief to defendants, who have appealed from the judgment and order denying their motion for a new trial.

Appellants insist that their general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint should have been sustained. It is insisted that although plaintiff alleges ownership in fee of the land from which it is sought to remove a cloud, yet as the complaint shows the specific facts showing the chain of plaintiff's title, the general allegation of ownership must be considered only as a conclusion of law, and the specific facts alleged must be looked to only. In this connection it is claimed that plaintiff, by the allegations of his complaint, deraigns title from George T. Dunlap, but does not allege any title in said Dunlap. But if we concede everything claimed by appellants as to want of title in Dunlap the complaint otherwise states facts to show a good title in plaintiff. Besides stating a chain of title from Dunlap, plaintiff also pleads facts that make a good title in him by prescription. The demurrer was properly overruled.

The defendant, the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, obtained a money judgment against George T. Dunlap, which was duly docketed on the 3d day of June, 1903. It is by virtue of this judgment that said defendant claims a lien against the land described in the complaint, and it is the cloud caused by the levy of execution under such judgment that plaintiff seeks to have removed.

In regard to the title of plaintiff the court found that on the 3d day of June, 1905, said plaintiff entered into the exclusive possession of the said premises in said complaint described and of all thereof, and from said date up to the present time has continuously held and yet holds the open, notorious, continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive possession of the said premises and of all thereof, claiming the same and all thereof in good faith and in his own right, and exclusive and adverse to the said defendant and to all the world. This finding is supported by the evidence, and is the only finding as to the title of plaintiff. According to the findings of the court plaintiff did not connect himself with any paper title at all. He simply had actual possession under claim of ownership. But such is a sufficient showing of title in a plaintiff as against one who establishes no title or right in himself. Morris v. Clarkin, 156 Cal. 16, 103 Pac. 180. As before stated, the only claim defendant asserts against the premises is by virtue of a judgment obtained and docketed against George T. Dunlap June 3, 1903. The court, however, found that defendant had no such lien.

The property in question was conveyed to Dunlap by one Godfrey May 15, 1897, and the deed duly recorded. On December 31, 1898, Dunlap, by deed of grant, bargain, and sale in terms conveyed to one Friant, who in turn by a similar deed, dated February 14, 1899, conveyed to the Bank of Gilroy, which in turn, on April 6, 1903, conveyed to Dunlap. The deed from Dunlap to Friant and the deed from Friant to the Bank of Gilroy were given as security for money loaned to

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Dunlap, and the deed from the bank to Dunlap was the result of the payment of such loans by Dunlap. These deeds were all duly recorded, but as the deeds from Dunlap to Friant and from Friant to the bank were in fact mortgages no legal title passed thereby. Likewise the deed from the bank to Dunlap, though in form a conveyance, in fact operated simply as a release of the mortgage. It conveyed no title to Dunlap.

On October 15, 1901, Dunlap, for a valuable consideration, conveyed the premises to one House, who went into possession under the deed, but the deed was never recorded. Defendant's judgment against Dunlap was docketed June 3, 1903, over two years after Dunlap had conveyed to House by the unrecorded deed. At the time of the docketing of the judgment Dunlap did not own the property in question. He had conveyed it by a grant perfectly good as against the grantor and every one subsequently claiming under him except a purchaser or incumbrancer who, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, acquires a title or lien by an instrument that is first duly recorded. Section 1107, Civ. Code. Neither an attachment nor a judgment is an instrument within the meaning of the section, and an unrecorded deed takes precedence over an attachment or judgment. Hoag v. Howard, 55 Cal. 564; Bank of Ukiah v. Petaluma S. B., 100 Cal. 590, 35 Pac. 170. The judgment only becomes a lien upon the real property of the judgment debtor owned by him at the time of the docketing of the judgment, or afterwards and before expiration of the lien acquired. Code Civ. Proc. § 671. Dunlap did not own the premises in question when the judgment was docketed, for he had previously conveyed them to House. Neither did he afterwards acquire title by the deed from the Bank of Gilroy, for this deed was but a release of a mortgage and conveyed no title. The court thus correctly found that the defendant, Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, had no lien or claim upon the property described in the complaint.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(158 Cal. 690)

CALIFORNIA SAFE DEPOSIT & TRUST CO. et al. v. SIERRA VALLEYS RY. CO. et al. (Sac. 1,759.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1910.)

1. Limitation of Actions (§ 48*)—Coupons—Detachment from Bonds—Limitations Applicable.

In the absence of any provision to the contrary in bonds or the instruments securing them, interest coupons, consisting of a simple promise to pay to bearer at a given date and place a specified amount of interest, when detached from the bonds and transferred by the bondholder to others, are independent obligations, subject to the four-year statute of limitations, which commences to run from the date of their maturity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 259–265; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. Limitation of Actions (§ 15*)—Waiver—Provisions of Mortgage.

A provision of a railroad mortgage securing bonds that the railroad company, for itself, its successors, etc., waived the benefit of all valuation, stay, appraisement, or redemption laws respecting liens and mortgages to be foreclosed by action or suit, and all laws which, but for such provision, would prevent the absolute and unconditional sale of the premises conveyed, by a court or the trustee without suit, was not a waiver of the defense of limitations to interest coupons detached from the bonds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 62–65; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. Railroads (§ 180*)—Mortgages—Default—Foreclosure—Rights of Bondholders.

In the absence of any provision to the contrary in a railroad mortgage securing bonds, default may be taken advantage of by the holder of a single bond or coupon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 605–609; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

4. Railroads (§ 180*)—Mortgages—Foreclosure—Rights of Bondholders.

A provision of a railroad mortgage on default in the payment of any bond or interest coupon, continuing for six months after demand and presentation for payment, the whole principal sum mentioned for payment in all and each of the bonds should at the option of the holders of a majority in interest of the bonds then outstanding, or at the option of the trustee, forthwith become due and the lien foreclosed, was effective merely to authorize the acceleration of maturity of the bonds, and did not prevent the holder of detached interest coupons from collecting the same by suit or by foreclosing the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 605–609; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

5. Railroads (§ 180*)—Mortgages—Interest Coupons—Default—Right to Sue.

A provision in a railroad mortgage securing bonds that no action should be prosecuted against the railroad company on any of the coupons annexed to the bonds, at law or otherwise, except by the trustee, unless the trustee after having been duly requested in writing, and having been fully indemnified, should fail and neglect for three months so to do, did not prevent the holder of matured and unpaid interest coupons from suing to enforce the same by foreclosure of the mortgage, or otherwise, since after the expiration of three months after demand such holder was entitled to sue in his own name, making the trustee a defendant in case of the latter's refusal to sue.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 605–609; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 166*) — SECURITIES — MORTGAGE OR TRUST DEED.

Where an instrument, executed by a railroad company to secure bonds, was described as a mortgage in the bonds; contained no provision for reconveyance; required neither notice of sale by the trustee nor prescribed the manner thereof, and referred to "the lien or incumbrance thereby created," and in various references to its own terms and effects used the expression "this mortgage," it would be held to be a mortgage and not a trust deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 516–518; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 180*)—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

Though the defense of the statute of limitations may be raised by demurrer, where it appears on the face of the complaint that the claim is barred, the demurrer must specially state that the claim is barred; an allegation that the complaint is defective for want of facts being insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 670–675; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 180*)—WAIVER OF DEFENSE—FAILURE TO DEMUR.

Since the only ground of demurrer under which the defense of the statute of limitations may be raised by demurrer is "failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," and such ground, by the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 434, is not waived by a failure to demur, where defendants did not demur, but answered the complaint at once, pleading limitations, they did not waive it by failing to demur.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 670–675; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; F. A. Kelley, Judge.

Action by the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, continued in the name of T. F. Dunaway, substituted trustee, against the Sierra Valleys Railway Company and others, in which C. R. Bowen filed a cross-complaint. From a decree dismissing the cross-complaint Bowen appeals. Affirmed.

Snook & Church and John W. Stetson, for appellant. E. D. Knight, E. R. Dodge, Warren Olney, Jr., L. N. Peter, and J. V. De Laveaga, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. In April, 1895, the Sierra Valleys Railway Company, a California corporation, having taken the statutory steps for the authorization by its stockholders of a bonded indebtedness, caused 1000 bonds of $1000 each, falling due in 20 years, with interest coupons attached, to be signed by its president and secretary. It also executed and delivered to the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, as trustee, a mortgage or deed of trust of all its property to secure said bonds and coupons. Three hundred of the bonds were duly issued to Henry A. Bowen.

This action was commenced by the trustee to foreclose the security, it being claimed that the said trustee had exercised the option granted to it by the mortgage or deed of trust to declare the principal sum due in advance of maturity upon default, continuing for six months, in the payment of interest. Other breaches of the conditions of the instrument securing the bonds were alleged. The Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company and Cora Chambers Pool were made defendants, and were alleged to claim an interest in the property. It is alleged that Bowen, also named as a defendant, was the owner and holder of a number of overdue interest coupons, which had been detached from the bonds originally owned by him, said bonds having passed into the ownership of the Nevada-California-Oregon Railway, a corporation. Bowen answered and cross-complained, seeking a foreclosure and the payment to him of the amount due on his coupons.

The court found that certain coupons including those held by Bowen had matured more than four years prior to the commencement of the action, and that any claim thereon was barred by sections 335 and 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The material allegations of the complaint were found to be true, and a decree of foreclosure providing for payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the amount due on all bonds and coupons, except those found to be barred by limitation, was entered. From this judgment Bowen appeals. The only question presented is whether the court below was correct in holding that he had lost his right to relief by lapse of time.

The coupons in question were in the usual form, each consisting of a simple promise to pay to bearer, at a given date and place, the sum of $30, being six months' interest on one of the bonds. In the absence of any provision to the contrary in the bonds, or in the instrument securing them, it is undoubtedly the general rule that such coupons are independent obligations, and that, at least when they have been detached from the bonds and transferred to others than the holders of the bonds, the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of their maturity. Short on Law of Railway Bonds, § 75; Jones on Corp. Bonds and Mort. § 267; Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 25 L. Ed. 228; Clark v. Iowa City, 20 Wall. 585, 22 L. Ed. 427; Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 668, 26 L. Ed. 886; Nash v. El Dorado County (C. C.) 24 Fed. 252; Huey v. Macon Co. (C. C.) 35 Fed. 481; Galveston v. Loonie, 54 Tex. 517; Threadgill v. Com'rs, 116 N. C. 616, 21 S. E. 425. The appellant claims, however, that a different rule has been established in this state by the decision in Meyer v. Porter, 65 Cal. 67, 2 Pac. 884, and the two companion cases of Roeding v. Porter, 2 Pac. 888, and Haysmeister v. Porter, 3 Pac. 123, decided in the same month as the Meyer Case, and based upon its authority alone. Meyer v. Porter was an appeal from a judgment denying a writ of mandate to compel the treasurer of the city of Sacramento to pay certain coupons out of funds in his possession. The trial court had sustained a demurrer to the petition for the writ. In the Supreme Court various objections to the granting of the relief sought were considered and overruled. The opinion concludes with these words: "And as the coupons partake of the nature of the bonds to which they belong, and against which the statute of limitations had not run, they were not barred by the statute." There is no further discussion of the point, nor is there, in the report of the case, any showing of the facts upon which the bar of the statute was claimed to have arisen. We are not informed whether the coupons were independent obligations, negotiable and enforceable by others than holders of the bonds, nor whether, if so enforceable, a right of action had in fact accrued at such time as to make the bar of the statute applicable. Under these circumstances, we do not regard the isolated expression above quoted as binding this court to the doctrine that an action upon interest coupons is never barred by lapse of time until a right of action on the bond itself would be barred. On the contrary, we are inclined to take the view expressed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth circuit in Mather v. City and County of San Francisco, 115 Fed. 37, 43, 52 C. C. A. 631, 639, where the following language was used in reference to the foregoing statement of this court in Meyer v. Porter: "It is claimed for this utterance of the court that it announces the rule that an action upon coupons is not barred until the statute of limitations has run against the bonds to which they were attached. We do not so understand the decision, although it is impossible, from the meager statement of the case, to determine the precise bearing of the remarks of the court. We are inclined to think that by the use of the language so quoted it was intended only to affirm the well-settled rule that in the application of the statute of limitations the coupon, although it may not be in form the same kind of instrument as the bond to which it belongs, will partake of the contractual nature of the latter, and both will be governed by the same statute of limitations; that is to say, if the bond be a specialty, the coupon, which may be a simple promise to pay, will be considered a specialty, and be governed by the statute of limitations applicable to specialties. City of Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. 282 [20 L. Ed. 809]." Although the distinction between specialties and writings not under seal had been abolished in this state, it is probable that the writer of the opinion in Meyer v. Porter had in mind the rule just referred to. To this extent, it is quite true that "the coupons partake of the nature of the bonds to which they belong," and the question whether an action on the coupons is barred must accordingly be answered by reference to the statute prescribing the period of limitation for an action on the bonds. This is all that was decided in Lexington v. Butler, supra, and City of Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. 483, 19 L. Ed. 725, although the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States in these cases contained expressions which, taken alone, might have been, and, indeed, were by some, interpreted to mean that an action on the coupons was not barred until an action on the bonds would be. Such was not, however, the true meaning of the decisions, as is clearly pointed out in Clark v. Iowa City, supra, and other cases. In view of all this, we think there is nothing in Meyer v. Porter to prevent this court from applying the rule supported by reason, as well as by overwhelming authority, viz., that, in the absence of some special circumstance to the contrary, the period of limitation of an action on coupons begins to run from the date of the maturity of the coupons.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

But, says the appellant, if this be the true doctrine, there are provisions in the mortgage or deed of trust taking the present case out of the general rule. He points in the first place to article 10, reading as follows: "It is further provided and agreed that the party of the first part (Sierra Valleys Railway Company), for itself, its successors and assigns, doth hereby absolutely and irrevocably waive the benefit or advantage of any and all valuation, stay, appraisement or redemption law or laws, respecting liens or mortgages to be foreclosed by action or suit, and of all laws now existing or hereafter passed, which but for this provision would prevent the absolute and unconditional sale of the premises hereby conveyed, by a court or by the trustee, without suit. * * *" This is claimed to constitute a waiver on the part of the debtor of the right to plead the statute of limitations. Assuming the effectiveness of such waiver, if the railway company had undertaken to make one, we do not find in the language quoted anything which purports to waive the defense in question. The provision is quite plain and has reference to matters not connected in any way with the statute of limitations.

The further point is made that under the terms of the instrument securing the bonds and coupons, the holder of coupons had no independent right to proceed by action to collect the amount of his coupons or to foreclose the security therefor. If this be so, the defense of the statute of limitations would, of course, not be applicable, since a claim cannot be barred by limitation until the lapse of the statutory time after the claimant had a right to proceed by action to enforce his demand. Swamp Land Dist. v. Glide, 112 Cal. 85, 44 Pac. 451. But we cannot agree with the contention of appellant that the instrument does prevent the holder of an overdue coupon from proceeding to enforce his right to payment by an action of foreclosure.

In the absence of any provision to the contrary, default may be taken advantage of by the holder of a single bond or coupon. Short on Law of Ry. Bonds, etc., §§ 376, 398; C. & V. R. R. Co. v. Fosdick, 106 U. S. 47, 27 L. Ed. 47. The provision principally relied on by the appellant to show that such right did not exist here is found in article 2, and is to the effect that in case of default in the payment of any bonds or interest coupons, and if such default shall continue for six months after demand and presentation for payment, "the whole principal sum mentioned for payment in all and each of said bonds shall at the option of the holders of a majority in interest of said bonds then outstanding, or at the option of the party of the second part (the trustee), forthwith become and be immediately due and payable, and the lien or incumbrance hereby created may be at once enforced. * * *" It is argued that this provision prevents a foreclosure except upon the motion of the trustee or of a majority of the bondholders. But this is not the true meaning of the clause. The purpose of this provision is to enable a majority in interest of the holders of bonds then outstanding, or the trustee itself, in case of default in the payment of interest for six months, to accelerate the maturity of the bonds, and to enforce the payment of the principal sum due, although the time provided in the bonds for their payment shall not have arrived. It is true that a holder of coupons alone or of less than one-half of the bonds could not so advance the time of maturity of the principal, but there is nothing in this clause to prevent the holder of an overdue coupon from proceeding by appropriate action (in the name of the trustee, or, in case the trustee should decline to act, by bill in equity making the trustee a party defendant) to realize upon the security. "The right of a coupon holder to foreclose for default in the payment of interest is not affected by a provision in the mortgage that, if the interest shall remain unpaid for a given period, the principal shall become due, and that the trustees may, and upon the written request of a majority in amount of the bonds shall * * * within a reasonable time proceed to foreclose the mortgage. Such a clause is operative as a restriction upon the coupon holder's right to bring suit, only when it is sought to take advantage of the waiver as advancing the date when the principal becomes due." Short on Law of Ry. Bonds, etc., § 398; Beekman v. Hudson R. & W. S. R. Co. (C. C.) 35 Fed. 3. Van Loo v. Van Aken, 104 Cal. 269, 37 Pac. 925, is not in conflict with these views. In that case, the court held that the mortgage involved showed affirmatively that the parties intended that there should be no foreclosure until the maturity of the principal.

The appellant relies also upon the provision of article 8 as follows: "It is hereby further provided and agreed that no action shall be commenced or prosecuted against said Sierra Valleys Railway Company, party of the first part, upon any of the coupons annexed to said bonds or otherwise, at law or otherwise, except by the said trustee, unless the said trustee, after having been duly requested in writing, and having been fully indemnified as hereinafter provided, shall fail or neglect for three months so to do. * * *" It is apparent that this clause does not prevent the coupon holder from bringing an action. It expressly protects his right to do so in the event that the trustee shall, after proper demand made, fail for three months to bring an action. It is always in the power of the coupon holder to make such demand and he cannot by failure to make it extend indefinitely the period of limitation. It is true that his right of action is by this clause deferred for three months, after demand, and the statute should therefore not be held to run against him for this period after the maturity of the coupon. But allowing to the appellant the period of four years and three months after the maturity of each of the coupons sued upon, he would still, at the date of the commencement of this suit, have been too late to institute his action.

The appellant claims that the instrument providing security for the bonds and coupons is a deed of trust, rather than a mortgage, and from this promise draws the conclusion that the only sale that could be had was one by the trustee, rather than, as directed by the decree, one by a commissioner appointed by the court. We need not inquire whether this conclusion would follow, since we have no doubt that the instrument is to be construed as a mortgage. It is described in the bonds as a mortgage. The instrument itself has no provision for reconveyance; it prescribes neither manner of nor notice for a sale by the trustee; it refers to "the lien or incumbrance hereby created"; and, in various references to its own terms and effects, used the expression "this mortgage." There appears to be no good reason for holding that the instrument was not a mortgage, as it purported to be. See Earle v. Sunnyside Land Co., 150 Cal. 214, 227, 88 Pac. 920.

Finally, the appellant raises the point that the defense of limitation was waived by reason of the fact that the various cross-defendants did not raise this defense by demurrer, but set up the bar of the statute by answer.

The contention is that, under sections 433 and 434 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an objection specified in section 430 as ground of demurrer (except want of jurisdiction or failure to state facts), must, if it appears on the face of the complaint, be taken by demurrer, or be deemed to be waived. Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 1, 13, 89 Pac. 1097. If this be the rule, it is clear that the defense of limitation does not come within it. This defense is not specified in section 430 as a ground of demurrer. While defendants have been permitted to demur on the ground that the action was barred, the only subdivision of section 430 under which this ground of demurrer could be brought was that "the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." But, inasmuch as the statute of limitations is a special defense, personal in its nature, which may be waived or asserted, the party relying upon it must affirmatively set it up in his pleading. A demurrer merely stating that there is a want of facts will not suffice. Brown v. Martin, 25 Cal. 82; Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 51 Pac. 848. Accordingly, there has grown up a practice, difficult, perhaps, to defend on logical grounds, of permitting a defendant to demur to a complaint on the ground that "it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this, that the alleged cause of action appears to be barred by the provisions of * * *." This is an exception to the general rule that no particular specification is required in a demurrer for want of facts. Kent v. Snyder, 30 Cal. 666, 672. But, notwithstanding the necessity for such particularity, the only ground of demurrer applicable is the failure to state facts sufficient, and this ground is, by the express provision of section 434, not waived by failure to demur. The true rule, under our practice, is, we think, that the defendant may, if the defect appears on the face of the complaint, set up the bar of the statute either by demurrer or by answer. If the complaint does not show that the statute has run, the defendant must plead his right by answer. In the present case, it appears that the cross-defendants did not demur at all, but came in at once and filed answers setting up the bar of the statute. It would be a harsh ruling to hold that, merely because they had claimed their privilege by answer rather than by demurrer, they had waived a defense which they had asserted at the earliest opportunity. We shall not so hold, inasmuch as the Code sections relied on by appellant do not require it.

The record presents no other points requiring notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

---

158 Cal. 646

In re CLAIBORNE'S ESTATE. (Sac. 1,864.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1910.)

1. Wills (§ 577*)—Provisions—Effect.

If a will is ineffectual to dispose of property, a provision thereof that testator desired his property should be considered and treated as community property could not be carried out; but the property would be regarded as community or separate property, according to the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1257; Dec. Dig. § 577.*]

2. Wills (§ 577*)—Validity—Effect.

Testator, after revoking prior wills, provided that in the administration of his estate he wished all of his property to be treated and considered as community property, adding the clause, "So much of my will I make and declare this day to protect my wife, not yet having been fully advised of my further purposes," and then nominated executors. Held, that such will should be construed as a valid disposition of testator's property, giving to the wife such portion thereof as she would take under the law of succession, if the property was community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1257; Dec. Dig. § 577.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Gilbert B. Claiborne, deceased. From a decree of final distribution, certain heirs appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. F. Buck and J. M. Kile, for appellants. D. M. Young and J. P. Langhorne, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from the decree of final distribution in the matter of the estate of Gilbert B. Claiborne, deceased. The deceased died testate, his will being as follows:

"I, Gilbert B. Claiborne, of the city of Stockton, California, do hereby make and declare this my last will and testament, hereby revoking and declaring void all wills and codicils to the same by me heretofore made. In the administration of my estate it is my wish that all property shall be considered and treated as community property.

"So much of my will I make and declare this day to protect my wife, not yet having been fully advised of my further purposes.

"I nominate and appoint Richard C. Minor, together with my wife, as executors and request that no bonds or undertakings be required of them or either of them.

"In witness whereof, I have written this wholly with my own hand and signed the same this 24th day of February, A. D. 1905, at Stockton, California.

"Gilbert B. Claiborne."

He left no descendants, and his only heirs at law were Marian F. Claiborne, his surviving wife, and the children of several deceased brothers. All the property left by deceased was his separate property. The lower court determined that under the terms of the will the surviving wife was entitled to have distributed to her an undivided three-fourths of all the property, and that the children of the deceased brothers were entitled to the remaining one-fourth. From the decree made in conformity with this determination, some of said children have appealed, claiming that the surviving wife is entitled to only one-half of the property and that the children of the deceased brothers of deceased are entitled to one-half of the property.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The theory of appellants is that deceased died intestate so far as any distribution of his property by will was concerned; the claim being that the only effectual part of his will was the provision appointing executors, and that the property passed under the law of succession as separate property, one-half to the widow and one-half to the children of his deceased brothers. It is clear that, if the will was not effectual to dispose of the property, the claim of appellants must be held to be well founded; for, despite the declaration in the will of the wish of the testator that his property should be considered and treated as community property, such property would have to be regarded and treated by the courts as separate property if found to be such (Estate of Learned, 156 Cal. 309, 104 Pac. 315; Estate of Granniss, 142 Cal. 4, 75 Pac. 324), and under the law of succession the separate property of deceased would pass as claimed by appellants (Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 2).

It appears very clear to us, however, that the will should be construed as giving to the wife such portion of the property as she would take under the law of succession if the property was community property, which would be, under the circumstances of this case, the death of the husband without descendants, three-fourths of all the property. Estate of Boody, 113 Cal. 682, 688, 45 Pac. 858; section 1402, Civ. Code. It is an elementary rule in the construction of wills that no particular words are essential to create a legacy or devise, and that the essential thing is that the intention of the testator to thereby make a testamentary disposition clearly appears. Where the will clearly shows such an intention, the courts will carry it into effect, if this can be done consistently with the rules of law applicable. For instance, in Estate of Barclay, 152 Cal. 753, 93 Pac. 1012, a provision devising the residue of real estate to certain named parties "after my son * * * has been paid what he has paid for me at various times" was held to clearly show a legacy to the son to the extent of the amount of money he had paid out for the testator. In the will before us the testator, after declaring that he is making his will, declares: "In the administration of my estate it is my wish that all property shall be considered and treated as community property So much of my will I make and declare this day to protect my wife, not yet having been fully advised of my further purposes." These are the only provisions of the will referring in any way to his property, and unless they are to be considered a testamentary disposition we have a case of total intestacy, a construction not to be favored if any other construction is reasonably possible. Civ. Code, § 1326; Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 410, 416, 45 Pac. 552. The theory of an intended testamentary disposition in favor of the wife is, in our judgment, the only reasonable theory that can be based on the language used. It cannot reasonably be denied, and learned counsel for appellants do not deny, that the will clearly shows the intention of the testator that his wife should be given on distribution such portion of his property as she would have taken if it were community property and he had died intestate.

This intention being made clearly to appear in the document which testator declares to be his will, we do not see that there is anything left to be said on behalf of appellants. The provision is as effectual as a testamentary disposition as it would have been had it read: "I give, bequeath, and devise to my wife so much of my property as she would have received if all my property was community property and I had died intestate." Learned counsel rely on the language, "So much of my will I make and declare this day to protect my wife, not yet having been fully advised of my further purposes," as showing lack of intent on the part of the testator to then fully dispose of his property; but, if we concede this to be so, the language certainly shows no lack of intent so far as disposition to the wife is concerned. It may be that, as to the one-fourth that was not to go to the wife, it could reasonably be held that there was no testamentary disposition. But as to the wife and the share she shall take there is no room for doubt as to the intention of the testator. Whatever might ultimately be done with the remainder, she was to have the portion already specified. Any other construction would make the act of the testator in executing the will an absolutely idle one so far as any protection to the wife was concerned. She would take under the will exactly what she would take without the will. But the will clearly shows the intention that she shall have something more than the portion she would take of the separate estate under the law of succession, and the amount that she shall take is clearly defined.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

158 Cal. 699

BRODE et al. v. GOSLIN et al. (L. A. 2,677.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 494*) — RECORD — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

On appeal from orders denying a new trial and refusing to vacate a judgment, the orders need not be contained in any bill of exceptions or statement, as, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 951, 952, copies of the orders certified by the clerk, together with a copy of the notice of appeal, are sufficient to sustain the appeal, though appellant may not succeed without a bill of exceptions or statement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 494.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 339*)—TIME TO APPEAL.

An appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment, taken within 60 days after the making of the order, as allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3, is in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1887; Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 351*)—TIME TO APPEAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a, 941b, authorizing, as an alternative mode of appeal, a notice of appeal, to be filed within 60 days after notice of entry of the judgment or order, and providing that if no notice of entry is given, the notice of appeal must, under any circumstances, be filed within six months after entry of the judgment or order, an appeal taken April 6th, from an order denying a new trial made January 10th preceding, where a notice of entry of the order was not served, was taken in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 117*)—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

An appeal does not lie from the refusal of the trial judge to settle a bill of exceptions, on the ground that the same has not been presented within the time allowed by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 117*)—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

An order denying an application by a party who has failed to comply with the law in the presentation of his bill of exceptions, for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve one from proceedings taken against him through his mistake, etc., is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

6. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 53*)—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—PROCEEDINGS.

A party who has not complied with the law regulating the presentation of proposed bills of exceptions is not entitled to have his proposed bill settled, unless he is relieved by the court from his default, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

7. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 53*)—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—MANDAMUS.

Where a party has complied with the law regulating the presentation of bills of exceptions, and the court erroneously concludes that he has not, and refuses to settle the bill proposed, on that ground, the exclusive remedy is mandamus to compel the settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-88; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 655*) — RECORD — STRIKING MATTER FROM TRANSCRIPT—HEARING ON MERITS.

The court will not strike out matters from the transcript on the ground that the same are not contained in any bill of exceptions or statement, or authenticated in any manner allowed by statute or rules of the court, in advance of a hearing of the appeal on the merits; but if, on a consideration of the appeal, the matters are found to have no proper place in the record, they will be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 655.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by A. W. Brode and others against William G. Goslin, and others. From orders denying a motion for a new trial, and a motion to vacate the judgment, and refusing to settle the bill of exceptions, defendant, John G. Ritter, appealed. Respondents move to strike out certain matters contained in the transcript on appeal, and to dismiss the appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal from order refusing to settle bill of exceptions granted, and the other motions denied.

Randall & Gaines, for appellant. George H. Moore, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Motion by respondents for an order striking out certain matters contained in the transcript on appeal, and also to dismiss appeals taken by defendant Ritter from an order denying his motion for a new trial, from an order denying his motion to vacate the judgment in said action, and from an order refusing to settle a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal.

The only grounds urged for the dismissal of the appeals from the order denying a new trial and the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment are that the appeals were not taken in time, and that the orders appealed from are not contained in any bill of exceptions or statement.

As to the latter ground. It is not necessary that the orders appealed from should be contained in any bill of exceptions or statement. Copies of the orders appealed from, certified by the clerk, together with a copy of the notice of appeal, are all that are requisite to sustain the appeal from such orders. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 951, 952. It may be that without a bill of exceptions or statement showing facts upon which error in making the orders is apparent, the appellant is not likely to succeed upon his appeal, but this goes to the question of the merits of the appeal and does not warrant a dismissal.

The order denying the motion to vacate the judgment was made February 21, 1910, and the appeal therefrom was taken April 6, 1910. This was within the 60 days allowed by subdivision 3, § 939, Code of Civil Procedure. The order denying a new trial was made January 10, 1910, and the appeal therefrom was not taken until April 6, 191 which was more than 60 days from the making of the order. The record does not show, however, that notice of entry of said order was ever served on appellant's attorneys of record (see Foss v. Johnstone, 110 Pac. 294, 296), and it was expressly admitted at the argument of this motion that no such notice had ever been given. In view of the provisions relating to an alternative method of taking appeals, appellant had 60 days from the giving of such a notice within which to take an appeal, provided that the appeal must in any event be taken within 6 months. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a and 941b. The appeal therefore was in time.

The settlement of a proposed bill of exceptions was refused by the judge of the trial court on the ground that the same had not been presented within the time allowed by law. It is claimed that appeal is not the remedy for such a refusal, and, in view of the now well-established rule in this state, this claim must be held good. We are not dealing with the case of a denial of a party's motion for relief under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, where he has failed to comply with the law in the matter of presenting his proposed bill of exceptions. It appears to be well settled that an order denying such an application is appealable. There was no such application for relief in this case, but only a mere refusal of the trial judge to settle the proposed bill. If appellant had not complied with the requirements of the law in the matter of the presentation of his proposed bill of exceptions, he was not entitled to have the same settled, unless relieved by the court from his default, under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. If he had complied with the law, and the trial judge erroneously concluded that he had not so complied, and therefore refused to settle the bill, such wrongful refusal is not the subject of an appeal, and the proper and exclusive remedy for such wrongful refusal is mandamus to compel the settlement. Murphy v. Stelling, 138 Cal. 641, 72 Pac. 176; Whipple v. Hopkins, 119 Cal. 349, 51 Pac. 535; Machado v. Kinney, 135 Cal. 354, 67 Pac. 331; Hudson v. Hudson, 129 Cal. 141, 61 Pac. 773; Miller v. American, etc., Co., 2 Cal. App. 271, 274, 83 Pac. 289. See, also, Landers v. Landers, 82 Cal. 480, 23 Pac. 126; Pendergrass v. Cross, 73 Cal. 475, 15 Pac. 63; Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 78 Pac. 540.

Respondents also move for an order striking out and expunging from the transcript on appeal certain matters contained therein, which it is claimed cannot be considered on the appeal, because not contained in any bill of exceptions or statement, or authenticated in any manner allowed by statute or the rules of this court. This court cannot well entertain and consider motions of this character in advance of a hearing of the appeal on its merits. If upon a consideration of the appeal it be found that the matters referred to have no proper place in the record, they will be disregarded.

The appeal from the refusal of the trial judge to settle appellant's proposed bill of exceptions is dismissed. In all other respects, respondents' motion is denied.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

158 Cal. 650

PEOPLE v. GLASS. (Cr. 1,535.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1910.)

1. Indictment and Information (§ 154*) — Defects—Waiver—Failure to Demur.

Under Pen. Code, § 1012, all defects appearing on the face of the indictment, save want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense, are waived, unless the indictment be attacked for such defects by demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 501; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 970*)—Mode of Objection—Motions—Arrest of Judgment.

While, under Pen. Code, § 1185, defects in the indictment waived by failure to demur cannot be made a ground for arrest of judgment, the same objections that may be raised by demurrer may also be raised on motion in arrest of judgment if not waived by failure to demur.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2445–2462; Dec. Dig. § 970.*]

3. Criminal Law (§ 1088*)—Appeal—Record—Demurrer—Statutes—Construction.

Pen. Code, § 1207, provides that when judgment on a conviction is rendered the clerk must enter the same in the minutes, and must, within five days, annex together and file the following papers, which constitute a record of the action: "The indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer. Held that, there being no such thing as a minute of the demurrer, the word "and" must be substituted for "or," the statute meaning that the record must contain the indictment or information, the demurrer and a copy of the minutes of the plea, etc., therefore, on such judgment the demurrer need not be contained in a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1088.*]

4. Bribery (§ 6*)—Indictment—Sufficiency.

Under Pen. Code, § 165, punishing one offering a bribe to any member of any board of supervisors, etc., with intent to corruptly influence such member, etc., an indictment charging defendant with giving one L. a bribe, with intent to corruptly influence said L. as such member of said board of supervisors in his action, etc., as such member of said board, etc., necessarily carried with it the fact of knowledge in defendant that L. was a member of the board, and an express allegation that defendant knew that L. was a member of the board was unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Cent. Dig. §§ 5–8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

5. Indictment and Information (§ 110*) — Sufficiency — Following Statute — "Bribe"—"Unlawfully"—"Corruptly."

Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 6, defines the word "bribe" as anything of value or advantage, etc., given with a corrupt intent to influence "unlawfully" the person to whom it is given in his action, vote, etc., in any public or official capacity. Section 165 punishes one giving a bribe to any member of any board of supervisors with intent to "corruptly" influence such member in his action on any matters, etc. Held, that the use of the word "unlawfully" as qualifying "to influence" in section 7, adds nothing to the meaning of section 165, and hence an indictment for bribery charging an intent to "corruptly" influence, etc., by giving money, etc., was sufficient, though the word "unlawfully" was not used.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 110.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 867; vol. 2, p. 1630; vol. 8, pp. 7191–7193.]

6. Bribery (§ 6*)—Indictment—Sufficiency.

Under Pen. Code, § 950, subd. 2, requiring an indictment to contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary language so that a person of common understanding could know what was intended, and section 959, subd. 6, substantially to the same effect, an indictment for bribery charging that on a certain day one L. was a member of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco; that there was then pending before said board a matter relating to a franchise for constructing, etc., a telephone system in said city and county, and an application made by the H. Telephone Company, and a bill and ordinance relating to the same, etc.; that on said day defendant did unlawfully, etc., give said L. as a bribe $5,000 with the corrupt intent to corruptly influence said L. as such member, etc., in his action and in his official vote in the aforesaid matter, etc.—was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Cent. Dig. §§ 5–8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

7. Bribery (§ 6*)—Indictment—Sufficiency.

Under Pen. Code, § 165, punishing one who bribes, etc., a member of certain boards with intent to corruptly influence such member in his action on any matter before such board, an indictment showing that defendant gave a bribe with intent to influence L. in his vote and action as a member of the board of supervisors of, etc., on an application for a telephone franchise, sufficiently showed that the act intended to be influenced was an official one, the court knowing as a matter of law that such board may grant such franchises, and a vote by a member of the board on such an application being therefore necessarily an official act, though it did not specifically state what acts L. was to do or not to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Cent. Dig. §§ 5–8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

8. Criminal Law (§ 369*)—Evidence—Other Offenses—Collateral Facts.

The rule that evidence of the commission of a different offense cannot be admitted in proof of the offense for which defendant is on trial excludes all evidence of collateral facts or matters which are incapable of offering a reasonable presumption or logical inference as to the principal fact or matter in dispute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

9. Bribery (§ 10*) — Evidence—Motive—Intent.

In a trial of defendant for bribing one L., a member of the board of supervisors, with intent to influence his official action in the matter of granting a franchise to the H. Telephone Company, evidence that defendant or the company of which he was general manager attempted to prevent a rival company from obtaining a franchise in another city, and attempted to forestall competition in such city, tended only to degrade defendant and was inadmissible for the purpose of showing motive or intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

10. Criminal Law (§ 371*)—Evidence—Other Offenses—Motive.

While evidence as to offenses other than the one for which defendant is on trial may be given to show motive, the motive must grow out of the collateral crime, it not sufficing that both crimes spring from the same motive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830–832; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

11. Criminal Law (§ 1169*)—Appeal—Harmless Error.

Error, if any, in the admission of evidence was harmless, where accused was not prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137–3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

12. Criminal Law (§ 338*)—Evidence—Circumstantial Evidence.

Where circumstantial evidence is relied on to connect a defendant with a crime, much must be left to the discretion of the trial court in admitting it, and it is not necessary that each circumstance of itself would to every person appear to connect defendant with the offense, it sufficing if such circumstances, considered in relation to other facts and circumstances in evidence, may fairly tend to such result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 753; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

13. Bribery (§ 7*)—Issues, Proof, and Variance.

Under an indictment charging the payment of $5,000 as a bribe, proof of the payment of such sum in two payments under an agreement to pay and to receive $5,000 presents no question of variance as to the thing paid as a bribe.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

14. Criminal Law (§ 369*)—Evidence—Collateral Matters — Other Offenses—Evidence Tending to Degrade.

The rule excluding evidence as to other offenses in criminal trials also exclude all evidence tending to degrade defendant, to arouse the prejudice of the jury, to divert their minds from the real issues in the case, or to persuade them by matters not judicially cognizable that defendant for reasons other than those contained in legitimate evidence was more likely to have committed the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

15. Bribery (§ 10*)—Evidence.

In a trial for bribing one L., a member of the board of supervisors, with intent to influence his official action in an application for a franchise for the H. Telephone Company, a witness testified that one R. was the boss of the board of supervisors, with a representative thereon who had distributed money to members of the board with reference to another ordinance, but it appeared that R. was not employed by defendant in furtherance of the conspiracy to bribe the supervisors regarding the H. Company, that he took no part in the matter of their bribery, and that his services were actually enlisted in behalf of an opposition company, testimony tending to show that defendant was responsible for the employment of R. by such company was inadmissible, its purpose being to degrade defendant and prejudice him in the eyes of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

16. Criminal Law (§ 372*)—Evidence—Other Offenses.

In a trial for bribing one L., a member of the board of supervisors, with intent to influence his official vote on an application for a franchise, evidence that 10 of L.'s fellow members of the board were bribed in the same manner and by the same person as L. was admissible, to show that the specific act of bribery charged was but a part execution of a scheme contemplating the bribery of a sufficient number of supervisors to prevent the granting of the franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 833; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

17. Criminal Law (§ 673*)—Trial—Instructions—Limitation of Evidence.

In a bribery case, where certain evidence was admissible only to show that the specific act of bribery charged was but a part execution of one conspiracy, it was error to refuse to instruct that the evidence was received for such purpose only, and that it could not be considered to show that defendant probably committed the crime charged by showing that at other times he had committed like crimes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1597, 1872–1876; Dec. Dig. § 673.*]

18. Criminal Law (§ 673*)—Evidence—Other Offenses — Instructions — Limiting Purpose for Which Received.

When evidence of other crimes is admitted it should be carefully guarded by instructions so that its operation may be confined to the legitimate purposes for which it is competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1597, 1872–1876; Dec. Dig. § 673.*]

19. Criminal Law (§ 788*) — Trial — Witnesses — Refusal to Testify — Instructions.

In a bribery trial, where the closing argument of the prosecuting attorney was calculated to impress on the jury that the evidence a witness refused to give would have tended to convict defendant, and that the witness' refusal to tell what he knew was to protect crime, it was error to refuse instructions that the jury could not indulge in any presumption unfavorable to defendant because of the refusal of any witness to testify, and that the refusal of an alleged co-conspirator or agent of the conspiracy to testify should not be considered in determining the guilt or innocence of defendant, and the jury should not presume from such refusal that the testimony of the witness, if given, would be against the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1855; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

20. Criminal Law (§ 785*)—Trial—Instructions—"Fears or Hopes."

In a criminal case, where the court read to the jury Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, providing that the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies, etc., or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives, etc., it was not error to refuse an instruction that in passing on the credibility of witnesses the jury may consider their motives, fears or hopes, if any have been proved, "fears or hopes," but expressing a modification of "motives," and adding nothing to the meaning of the section.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1774–1781, 1889–1894; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

Shaw and Angellotti, JJ., dissenting. Sloss, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Louis Glass was convicted of bribery, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, he appealed to the District Court of Appeal. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for new trial, and on rehearing in the Supreme Court in bank, the same disposition of the case was made.

See, also, 99 Pac. 553.[1]

The opinion of Hall, J. (concurred in by Cooper, P. J., and Kerrigan, J.), in the District Court of Appeal, was as follows:

Defendant was charged by indictment with the crime of bribery, under section 165 of the Penal Code, and having been convicted of the charge he has appealed to this court from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. After his conviction, and before judgment was pronounced, the defendant made a motion in arrest of judgment, which was by the court denied. As this motion attacked the sufficiency of the indictment, it is proper that the ruling of the court thereon be first considered on this appeal.

The motion was based upon certain defects or alleged defects in the indictment. In this connection it is insisted by respondent that in the condition of the record in this case, this court can only consider whether or not the court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the indictment, and whether or not the indictment states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. Sections 1012, 1185, Pen. Code. No demurrer is contained in the bill of exceptions, and the transcript as originally filed in this court did not, in the judgment roll, or "record of the action," as it is denominated in the statute (section 1207, Pen. Code) contain the demurrer. Upon suggestion of diminution of the record, this court permitted appellant to file a certified copy of the demurrer, reserving, however, for determination at the final hearing the question as to whether or not such demurrer may be properly considered as a part of the record on this appeal. All defects appearing upon the face of the indictment, save want of jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the indictment, and that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense, are waived unless the indictment be attacked, for such defects, by demurrer. Section 1012, Pen. Code. Defects, waived by failure to demur, cannot be made a ground for arrest of judgment, but the same objections that may be raised by demurrer may also be raised on motion in arrest of judgment if not waived by a failure to demur. Section 1185. It is thus apparent that it is important for this court to be informed as to the contents of the demurrer, in order to determine whether or not the court erred in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment. The proper scope of the motion depends upon what objections were raised by the demurrer.

---

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 9 Cal. App. xiii.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Respondent contends that the demurrer is no part of the record on appeal, and cannot be considered by this court unless contained in a bill of exceptions; citing People v. Long, 121 Cal. 494, 53 Pac. 1097, People v. Druffel, 3 Cal. App. 731, 86 Pac. 907, and sections 1172 and 1174, Pen. Code. On the other hand, appellant insists that the cases cited have no application to a case where a judgment on conviction is rendered, and that under section 1207, Pen. Code, the demurrer in such case is a part of the record of the case, and as such must be transmitted to the appellate court after the taking of the appeal. Section 1246, Pen. Code.

In People v. Long, supra, the appeal was by the people from an order sustaining defendant's demurrer, and ordering that the case be resubmitted to the grand jury. There had been no judgment of conviction rendered, and the court pointed out that the minute entry of the order sustaining a demurrer could get into and become a part of the record on appeal only by virtue of section 1207. The court simply held that where there has been no judgment of conviction "the statute does not provide for a judgment roll or a record of any kind, except through a bill of exceptions." (Italics are ours.) The court did not attempt to determine in the Long Case what shall constitute the "record of the case," or the "judgment roll," as it is usually called by the profession, when a judgment of conviction has been rendered.

The case of People v. Druffel, supra, decided by this court, was, like the Long Case, an appeal by the people upon demurrer sustained, and perforce this court simply followed the doctrine of the Long Case.

On the other hand, People v. McPherson, 6 Cal. App. 266, 91 Pac. 1098, was an appeal by defendant after judgment rendered on a conviction, and the court there pointed out that the doctrine of People v. Long, supra, has no application to such a case, and proceeded to examine and pass upon the ruling upon the demurrer, although the same was not contained in any bill of exceptions, but appeared in the judgment roll only.

Section 1207 of the Penal Code provides that: "When judgment upon a conviction is rendered, the clerk must enter the same in the minutes, * * * and must within five days annex together and file the following papers, which constitute a record of the action:

"1. The indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer;

"2. A copy of the minutes of the trial;

"3. The written instructions given, modified or refused, with the indorsements thereon, and the certified transcript of the charge of the court; and

"4. A copy of the judgment."

It is the meaning of the language of subdivision 1 that is involved in this matter. It is contended by respondent that the word "demurrer" should be read as qualified by "a copy of the minutes of the." In other words, that the subdivision may be properly paraphrased thus: "The indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or (and) a copy of the minutes of the demurrer." It may be that this meaning does conform most nearly to the strict grammatical construction of the clause, and yet we do not think it correctly gives the meaning of the clause as intended by the Legislature. It is perfectly obvious, we think, that the word "and" must be substituted for the word "or." It is hardly conceivable that the Legislature intended to invest a clerk, a ministerial officer of the court, with a discretion to select either a copy of the minutes of the plea, or "a copy of the minutes of the demurrer," as making a part of the record of the action. And yet this conforms strictly to the grammatical construction of the clause. "And" must be substituted for "or." What is meant by the word "demurrer," and by what, if any, words it is qualified, must be determined by the entire section, read in the light of its manifest purpose, and other provisions of the law bearing upon the subject.

The primary purpose of this section is evidently to cause to be annexed together, and thus preserved in the form of a judgment roll, such papers as shall show what issues were presented for determination, and the result of such determination. The first pleading in a criminal action, brought in the superior court, is the indictment or information, which must be in writing. The original indictment under section 1207, Pen. Code, clearly becomes part of the judgment roll. The next pleading is the demurrer, and this also must be in writing. The demurrer must be in writing and filed. Section 1005, Pen. Code. Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as a minute of the demurrer. It speaks for itself. Doubtless the clerk must enter in his minutes the fact of its presentation and filing and the action of the court thereon. Section 1007, Pen. Code. But none of these minute entries can in strictness be properly called a minute of the demurrer. There is no such thing as a minute of the demurrer. The demurrer speaks for itself.

The next pleading is the "plea," and may be of four kinds (section 1016, Pen. Code), and is not in writing, but must be oral, and entered upon the minutes of the court in certain prescribed forms. Section 1017, Pen. Code. The form of each plea that may be made to an indictment being given by the statute, the clerk can have no difficulty in making the proper minute entries. The pleas being oral, the only way they can become a part of the judgment roll is by putting into the judgment roll a copy of such minutes. These in connection with the indictment or information, show what issues of fact were presented for determination. On the other hand, as the demurrer, like the indictment, must be in writing and filed with the clerk, there is no reason why it may not be, like the original indictment, put into the judgment roll as an original document, and thus, in connection with the indictment, show what issues of law were presented for determination. We think that such is the meaning and purpose of the section under discussion. To so hold does not entail any great departure from the strict grammatical meaning of the language employed, and produces a result reasonable and consistent with the manifest purpose of the section read as a whole. Certain it is that when the Legislature provided that the clerk should annex together and file "The indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or (and) demurrer," it intended that some document relating to the demurrer should be annexed and filed as a part of the judgment roll. It could not have meant "a copy of the minutes of" the demurrer, for, as we have seen, the law makes no provision for any minutes of the demurrer. There are minutes of the plea expressly required to be entered, but there are, properly speaking, no minutes of the demurrer provided for. The demurrer must, like the indictment, be in writing and filed. The minute entry of the action of the court allowing or disallowing the demurrer (section 1007, Pen. Code), is in no proper sense a minute of the demurrer.

While the legislative purpose is clumsily expressed, we are satisfied that it is sufficiently clear that the record of the action, or judgment roll, as it is commonly called, should contain the indictment or information, the demurrer, and a copy of the minutes of the plea, together with the other papers provided for in subdivisions 2, 3 and 4 of section 1207, Pen. Code. To read the word "demurrer" in section 1207 as qualified by "a copy of the minutes of the" would be to convict the Legislature of requiring the clerk to put something into the judgment roll that has no existence under the law, for, as we have before said, there can be no "minutes of the demurrer." There may, however, be a demurrer, and it is this that the law intends shall be annexed to the indictment, and form a part of the record of the action.

We do not think there is anything in sections 1172, 1173, and 1174, Pen. Code, that militates against the conclusion we have reached as to the scope of section 1207, Pen. Code. Sections 1172 and 1173 enumerate seven classes of decisions of the court to which exceptions may be reserved, among which are the decision of the court in allowing or disallowing a demurrer, or in granting or refusing a motion in arrest of judgment. Section 1174 fixes the time and the procedure for the settlement of a bill of exceptions upon any of these decisions, but throw no light upon what matters become a part of the "record of the case" without being included in the bill of exceptions. This is provided for by section 1207, under which, as we have shown, the indictment, the demurrer, and the plea, as set forth in the copy of the minutes of the plea, are a part of the record of the case.

This brings us to the consideration of the action of the court in denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment. This motion is set forth in the bill of exceptions, and was based upon the same objections to the indictment as were made by the demurrer appearing in the judgment roll. It thus appears that none of the objections raised on the motion had been waived by a failure to raise such objections by demurrer. Section 1185, Pen. Code.

The indictment is framed under section 165 of the Penal Code, and, omitting the formal parts, is as follows: "That on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1906, one Thomas F. Lonergan was, and at all times herein mentioned has been, a duly elected, qualified and acting member of the board of supervisors of the said city and county of San Francisco, state of California; that there was then and there pending before the said board of supervisors a matter and subject relating to a franchise for constructing, maintaining and operating a telephone system in the said city and county of San Francisco, and an application made June 12, 1905, by the Home Telephone Company of San Francisco, a corporation, for such franchise, and a bill and ordinance relating to the same, which said ordinance was on the 1st day of October, 1906, passed and adopted by the said board of supervisors, and was entitled an Ordinance 'Granting to the Home Telephone Company of San Francisco a franchise to construct, maintain and operate a telephone system in the city and county of San Francisco, and to construct, maintain and operate through, along, under and in the public streets, alleys and highways of said city and county poles, wires, cables, underground conduits and other appliances for the purpose of transmitting sound, signals and conversation by means of electricity or otherwise;' that on the said 15th day of March, A. D. 1906, at the said city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and while the said matter and subject were pending before the said board of supervisors, the said Louis Glass did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and corruptly give to said Thomas F. Lonergan, while the said Lonergan was such member of the said board of supervisors, a bribe, to wit, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, in lawful money of the United States of America, as a bribe, with the willful, unlawful, felonious and corrupt intent in him, the said Louis Glass, to corruptly influence said Thomas F. Lonergan as such member of said board of supervisors, in his action, and in his official vote, opinion, judgment and action, as such member of said board of supervisors, in and upon the aforesaid matter and subject then pending before said board of supervisors as aforesaid, and which was afterward to be considered, and was considered, by said board of supervisors," etc.

It is first objected that it is not alleged that defendant knew that Lonergan was a member of the board of supervisors. The statute under which the indictment was drawn (section 165, Pen. Code) does not expressly require that the defendant know the person bribed to be a member of any board of supervisors. The language of the statute in this regard is "with intent to corruptly influence such member in his action on any matter or subject pending before, or which is afterward to be considered by, the body of which he is a member." The language of the indictment carefully follows this language of the statute, and we think is all that is required in this respect.

The allegation of the indictment that the bribe was given to Lonergan by defendant "with intent in him, the said Louis Glass, to corruptly influence said Thomas F. Lonergan, as such member of said board of supervisors, in his action, and in his official vote, opinion, judgment and action, as such member of said board of supervisors," necessarily carries with it the fact of knowledge in Glass that Lonergan was a member of such board. To a person of common understanding, when it is charged that a defendant gave money to a member of a board of supervisors with intent to influence him as such member of said board of supervisors in his official vote, judgment, and action as such member of said board of supervisors, it clearly appears that said defendant knew such person to be a member of said board. This is the view taken of a similar allegation, drawn under a similar statute, in State v. Dankwardt, 107 Iowa, 704, 77 N. W. 495. The case of State v. Howard, 66 Minn. 309, 68 N. W. 1096, 34 L. R. A. 178, 61 Am. St. Rep. 403, does support the contention of defendant, but though it was cited in State v. Dankwardt, supra, it was not there followed. Neither do we think it should be followed. The other cases cited by defendant on this point are cases for uttering forged instruments, assaults on public officers, and the like, where there was nothing in the indictment that necessarily or at all imported knowledge on the part of the defendant of the forged character of the instrument, or the official character of the person assaulted. In the case at bar the language of the indictment not only follows the language of the statute, but, to a person of common understanding, necessarily imports knowledge on the part of the defendant of the official character of the person bribed.

It is next urged that the indictment fails to state an offense because it is not alleged that the money was given to influence "unlawfully" said Lonergan as such member of said board. The language of the indictment is "with the willful, unlawful, felonious and corrupt intent in him, the said Louis Glass, to corruptly influence said Thomas F. Lonergan," etc. This fully covers the language of section 165, Pen. Code, which is: "Every person who gives or offers a bribe to any member of any * * * board of supervisors * * * with intent to corruptly influence such member in his action on any matter," etc. The word "unlawfully" is not used in this section to qualify the verb "to influence," but the word "corruptly" is used instead. But this section does not specify of what the bribe may consist, and appellant points to subdivision 6 of section 7, Pen. Code, as defining "bribe." It is there said: "The word 'bribe' signifies anything of value or advantage, present or prospective, or any promise or undertaking to give any, asked, given or accepted with a corrupt intent to influence, unlawfully, the person to whom it is given, in his action, vote or opinion, in any public or official capacity." It is manifest that the principal and particular purpose of this provision of the statute was to define the word "bribe" used as a noun, and to indicate what things may be given or accepted as a bribe. Section 165 relates particularly to the bribery of members of boards of supervisors and similar boards. The use of the word "unlawfully" as qualifying "to influence" in subdivision 6 of section 7, adds nothing to the meaning of section 165. It is inconceivable that any officer may be corruptly influenced in his official action by the giving to him of money without unlawfully influencing him. If defendant had the intent to corruptly influence Lonergan, as a member of the board of supervisors, by giving him money, he had the intent to unlawfully influence him in so doing. There can be no corrupt influencing of a member of a board of supervisors in his official action, by the giving to him of money, which is not an unlawful influencing of such member. There can be no intent to corruptly influence an officer in his official capacity, by giving to him money, that is not an intent to unlawfully influence such officer in such action. The contention of appellant upon this point cannot be sustained.

The indictment is also attacked for uncertainty in several particulars. Under this head it is claimed that it does not state with certainty what matter and subject was then pending before the board of supervisors, or with what intent the bribe is alleged to have been given. While the indictment in this regard is not a model to be commended, we think that from the language of the indictment any person of common understanding would know that an application, made June 12, 1905, by the Home Telephone Company of San Francisco, a corporation, for a franchise for constructing, maintaining, and operating a telephone system in the said city and county of San Francisco, was pending before said board, and that the bribe was given with intent to influence said Lonergan in his action as a member of said board on said application, and in this respect the indictment is sufficient. Section 950, subd. 2, Pen. Code; section 959, subd. 6, Pen. Code; People v. King, 125 Cal. 370, 58 Pac. 19. It is equally clear that the indictment charges that the matter in regard to which the offense was committed was not only then pending, but was afterwards to be considered. A matter may be "to be afterwards considered" that is pending at a given time.

It is next urged that the indictment fails to state what acts Lonergan was to do or omit to do. In considering this objection it may be well to examine the statute with care. It is divided into two parts—the first is directed against a person who bribes or offers a bribe to a member of certain designated boards, with intent "to corruptly influence such member in his action on any matter or subject pending before, or which is afterwards to be considered by, the body of which he is a member." It appears from the indictment that the bribe was given with the intent to influence Lonergan in his vote and action as a member of said board of supervisors on the described application for the described franchise, and, we think, sufficiently shows that the act intended to be influenced was an official act. We know as a matter of law that the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco has jurisdiction to grant franchises to maintain and operate telephone systems in said city and county. A vote by a member of said board as such on an application therefor would necessarily be an official act. To require the pleader to state with extreme particularity the manner in which it was intended that the person bribed should act or vote in such cases as this would often defeat the purposes of the act. In the case of People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 42 Pac. 894, cited by appellant, the defect in the indictment was that it charged that defendant did give a "bribe," without in any way specifying in what the bribe consisted. The indictment thus failed to state the facts as to the bribe, in accordance with subdivision 6 of section 7, and it was for this defect that the indictment was held to be bad. No such defect appears in the indictment in the case at bar. The motion in arrest of judgment was properly denied.

Over the objections of appellant the court permitted the prosecution to introduce evidence as to acts and doings of the Home Telephone Company of Oakland and its officers and agents. The effect of this evidence was to show that in 1902 one Mr. Beasley, an attorney of San Jose, acquired a franchise to operate and maintain a telephone system in the city of Oakland, where the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, of which defendant was vice president and general manager, had a telephone system, operated in connection with its system throughout the state; that Beasley was induced to procure such franchise by one Halsey, who was a general agent of said Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company. This franchise was eventually assigned to the Home Telephone Company of Oakland. All the expenses of this telephone company, amounting to from $12,000 to $15,000, were furnished by Mr. Halsey. The evidence tended to show that the purpose of organizing this company, and procuring such franchise, was to forestall competition and opposition to the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company.

Also, over the objection of appellant, the court permitted the prosecution to introduce a large amount of evidence in regard to proceedings had before the city council of the city of Oakland in the matter of the application of the Home Telephone Company of Alameda county to obtain a franchise for a telephone system in the city of Oakland. This evidence tended to show that the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, through its employés and an attorney employed for that purpose, opposed such application, and that its president, Mr. Sabin, who died before the bribery charged in this case occurred, signed a statement, which was read before the city council of Oakland, objecting and protesting against the granting of a franchise to the Home Telephone Company of Alameda county. At the instance of the local attorneys of the two companies a visit was made by certain members of the city council of Oakland to the city of Los Angeles, to examine the operations and workings of the different systems used in that city, and the expenses of such trip were borne equally by the two companies. It was shown that Mr. Glass met two of the councilmen of the city of Oakland at a lunch, arranged by the attorney of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, and explained to them the merits of the system of his company (the manual system) over the system of the other company (the automatic system). Much other testimony concerning the Oakland proceedings was given over the objection of appellant. It is not suggested by any one that any of the proceedings in Oakland involved any criminal act by any person. Appellant does contend, however, that it was all irrelevant to the offense charged against defendant, and for which he was on trial, to wit, the bribery of Lonergan, as a member of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, and for that reason should not have been permitted. It appears to us to be so. As a general rule, evidence of the commission of a different offense cannot be admitted in proof of the offense for which the defendant is on trial, and this rule excludes all evidence of collateral facts or matters which are incapable of offering a reasonable presumption or logical inference as to the principal fact or matter in dispute. People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379, 34 Pac. 856; People v. Hurley, 126 Cal. 351, 58 Pac. 814; People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 14 N. E. 319, 1 Am.

St. Rep. 851; People v. Tucker, 104 Cal. 440, 38 Pac. 195.

People v. Sharp, supra, is a very pertinent case in support of the contention of appellant. In that case the defendant was on trial for giving a bribe to a member of the common council of the city of New York, with intent to influence him as such member regarding an application for a franchise to construct a street railway desired by defendant. The trial court allowed evidence of an attempt to bribe an attaché of the Legislature concerning a bill that would eventually aid him in procuring the franchise concerning which he was charged with bribing the New York councilman, or, as stated in the argument addressed to the court: "Jacob Sharp was accused and brought to trial for bribing the aldermen of the city of New York, and by that means procuring the grant of a valuable right. Evidence was offered to show that not long before he had attempted to bribe another official person to do an act which, as he thought, would promote the scheme which he had so long pursued." The court held the action of the trial court to be error.

The case of People v. Hurley, 126 Cal. 351, 58 Pac. 814, is also a bribery case. Defendant was a member of a nominating convention, and was charged with offering to receive a bribe from one Imrie to vote for him for the nomination for school superintendent. The court allowed evidence that he offered to accept a bribe as a member of the same convention from another candidate for the same office, and for this error alone the judgment was reversed. The court said: "The court erred in receiving the testimony. There was no connection between the interview with Miss Thompson and that with Mr. Imrie. The only effect would be to show that he was likely to ask other candidates for a consideration for his vote or influence, or, as said by the district attorney, 'it will tend to show whether or not he approached this other candidate'; but if it had that tendency it was only because he had shown himself capable of perpetrating such offenses. There is no necessary or logical connection between the two cases." So in the case at bar, there is no necessary or logical connection between the fact that defendant, or the company of which he was general manager, attempted to prevent a rival company from obtaining a franchise in Oakland, and that he or his company attempted to forestall competition in Oakland, and the offense charged that he bribed a member of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to prevent a rival company from getting a franchise in the city and county of San Francisco.

The attorneys for the prosecution concede that the evidence did not tend to show that the defendant committed any crime in connection with the attempt to forestall and prevent competition in Oakland, but they claim that the evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing defendant's motive. To this we cannot agree. By no reasonable hypothesis can it be said that the proceedings in Oakland furnish or prove a motive for the bribery of Lonergan. There was no causal connection between the two proceedings. Undoubtedly the primary motive for the several different proceedings was the same, to wit, the advancement of the interests of defendant's company by preventing competition. But the connection between such motives is no different from the connection that exists between the motives for several distinct larcenies committed by the same person, the motive in each case being pecuniary gain for the perpetrator of the larcenies. The defendant had the right to be tried upon the issue made by the indictment and his plea of "Not guilty," and to have all irrelevant and immaterial matters excluded from the jury, as its only effect would be to cloud the issue and injure defendant. The rule that the evidence shall be confined to the point in issue is elementary even in civil cases. In criminal cases, where the liberty of the defendant is involved, and where collateral matters often influence the jury, the necessity for the rule is much stronger. The defendant is expected to come into court prepared to meet the charge in the indictment, but cannot expect to be prepared with evidence as to any collateral matter. The rule is well established that such evidence is not admissible unless it conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis which, if sustained, would logically influence the issue. To admit evidence of collateral matters that do not tend to prove either the issue, the motive, the guilty knowledge, or the probability of a theory, or the identity of the defendant, would be but to oppress the defendant by trying him on a case as to which he has not been notified, and for the trial of which he is not prepared. The indictment charges the defendant with giving a bribe in March, 1906, to a supervisor in the city and county of San Francisco. Any person of ordinary understanding would at once say that defendant had no notice by the indictment as to the many acts and the conduct of the Home Telephone Company of Oakland, in another county, which took place in 1902.

That evidence as to offenses, other than the one for which defendant is being tried, may be given to show a motive for the commission of the crime is not doubted. But the motive for the commission of the crime charged must grow out of the collateral crime. Such are People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 341, 83 Pac. 43; People v. Brown, 130 Cal. 594, 62 Pac. 1072. It is not sufficient that both crimes spring from the same motive. If so, one charged with a particular larceny might be proved guilty of many other larcenies, for all spring from the same motive—the desire for gain. So, too, a collateral crime may be proved against a defendant which shows the intent with which he did the act under investigation (People v. Wilson, 117 Cal. 688, 49 Pac. 1054; People v. Valliere, 123 Cal. 576, 56 Pac. 433), or that directly tends to show that the defendant committed the crime of which he stood charged (People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 565, 12 Pac. 679).

There is nothing in People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186, that supports the contention of respondent that this evidence was admissible. In the Craig Case defendant had testified that the killing of his wife, for which he was being tried, was accidental. To rebut this the people were allowed to prove that immediately after killing his wife he drove to the house of her father and mother, and at once deliberately killed them both. It was held that this, in connection with evidence of previous threats made by him against his wife and her family, tended to show that the killing of his wife was not accidental, but was in pursuance of a previous plan. The facts of the Craig Case bear no similarity to the conditions of this case in the matter now under discussion. The evidence as to the Oakland proceedings was clearly irrelevant to the charge upon which defendant was being tried, and the rulings permitting its introduction were clearly erroneous.

Upon the trial, evidence was given that 10 of Lonergan's fellow members of the board of supervisors were bribed in the same manner, for the same purpose, at about the same time, and by the same person, as Lonergan. Appellant insists that the court erred in allowing this evidence over his objections.

We have before stated that, as a general rule, evidence of a different offense may not be given against a person charged with a particular crime; but, as we have also before stated, there are exceptions to this rule. Where facts concerning the other offense tend in themselves to prove the defendant guilty of the offense for which he is being tried, they may be proven. The mere fact that such evidence tends to prove defendant also guilty of another crime does not exclude it, if relevant to the charge for which he is on trial. The evidence as to the bribery of the other supervisors, we think, is well within this exception to the general rule. It is not claimed by the people that defendant personally bribed Lonergan, or any other member of the board. Any money that was paid for such purpose was paid by one Halsey, who was shown to be a general agent of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, with the special duty of attending to matters pertaining to opposition to the company. It was the theory of the people that the bribery of Lonergan was in pursuance of a conspiracy on the part of defendant and Halsey and one Zimmer, auditor of the company, to defeat the application of the Home Company by bribing the board of supervisors; that is, a working majority thereof. The bribery of Lonergan was but a part of the whole—was one step in a proceeding having one purpose and object. It was shown that checks of the company aggregating between $40,000 and $50,000 were drawn at the request of Zimmer about the latter part of February, 1906. To whom they were payable was not shown. No vouchers were furnished for these checks, and they were simply carried on tags. These tags, as well as the checks, were destroyed in the great fire of the following April. Statements of banks, however, showed that checks of the company aggregating $50,000 were paid, or the amounts thereof withdrawn from the accounts of the company as follows: Feb. 23, 1906, $5,000, $5,000, $10,000; Feb. 24, 1906, $10,000, $10,000; and Feb. 26, 1906, $10,000.

The statements from the banks show many other withdrawals, but these items are significant as being in round thousands, and as corresponding in the total to the amounts paid the supervisors. The evidence shows that for a few days only, but covering the 23d and 24th days of February, 1906, Halsey engaged three rooms in the Mills building. The application of the Home Telephone Company was to come up for action before the board of supervisors on Monday, the 26th day of February, 1906. (The board consisted of 18 members, and it required at least 10 to constitute a majority.) Lonergan testified that on Saturday, February 24, 1906, he visited Halsey at the rooms in the Mills building, found one Kraus, an assistant to Halsey, there in one room, scantily furnished, and was by him shown into an adjoining room, also scantily furnished, where he met Halsey, who gave him $4,000 in currency, and told him to vote to defeat the ordinance granting the Home Telephone Company a franchise. He took the money home and gave it to his wife, who testified that about that time her husband handed her $4,000 in currency. Eight of the other supervisors testified to going singly to Halsey's rooms in the Mills building a few days before the 26th day of February, 1906, and receiving money in currency to vote against the application of the Home Telephone Company for a franchise. Each went into Halsey's room alone, and was paid by Halsey in currency to oppose the application of the Home Telephone Company, and took his departure. No other person other than Halsey and the supervisor being paid was present at any payment. Two other supervisors were paid $5,000 in currency, each a little later, by Halsey for their friendship to his company, in the matter of the application of the Home Telephone Company. The total of the payments was $50,000, exclusive of $1,000 paid Lonergan some days prior to his visit to the Mills building. These payments were all made to carry out one plan and purpose—to secure a majority of the votes of the board of supervisors to defeat the application of the opposition company. Several of the bribed supervisors returned to Halsey in currency a part of their bribes, aggregating $7,500. It was shown that a similar amount ($7,500 or $10,000), also in currency, was returned to the cashier of the company by Halsey, and credited in reduction of the amounts charged on the tags above referred to. No rational person, with knowledge of the facts concerning the visits of, and payments to, the supervisors other than Lonergan, on learning that Lonergan also visited Halsey at the time he did, and where he did, and about the same time handed his wife $4,000 in currency, but would be impressed with the belief that Lonergan also obtained such currency from Halsey, and for the same purpose as his fellows; and this belief would be engendered without any direct evidence of any payment to Lonergan.

The facts testified to by these witnesses, in connection with other facts above mentioned, tended to show that Lonergan was bribed, and with money drawn from the funds of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, by Halsey. "If several and distinct offenses do intermix and blend themselves with each other, the details of the party's whole conduct must be pursued." Lord Ellenborough in The King v. Whiley, 1 Lead. Crim. Cas. 185. The several briberies were to secure one result, and were part and parcel of one scheme. That the testimony in question was properly admitted is amply sustained by the following authorities: People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 565, 12 Pac. 679; People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 341, 83 Pac. 43; People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186; People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193; People v. Wood, 3 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 681; People v. Murphy, 135 N. Y. 455, 32 N. E. 138. The theory of the prosecution in offering said evidence, and of the court in receiving it, was that the evidence is sufficient to charge defendant with criminal responsibility for the various acts of Halsey; and the views we have expressed are based upon such theory, but we do not intimate our views as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support it.

Appellant urges that error was committed in overruling his objection to a question put to the witness King, a director of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, as to whether he knew that a salary of $1,200 or $1,250 a month was paid to Abraham Ruef during the period covering the pendency of the application of the Home Telephone Company for a franchise, but as the answer was in the negative no harm was done by the ruling, even if it be conceded to have been erroneous.

The court did not err in allowing the district attorney, over the objection of defendant, to prove by Mr. Pillsbury the conversation held between him and the defendant concerning the employment of Mr. Ruef. Mr. Pillsbury was the head of the law department of the company; and in answer to the question objected to testified: "I called Mr. Glass' attention to something I had seen in the papers to the effect that Mr. Ruef was employed, or was to be employed, as attorney for the company, and asked him what there was in it, and he told me that Mr. Ruef was employed. That was about November, 1905. * * * I asked him if Mr. Ruef was employed. He said he was. I told him if Mr. Ruef was to be a member of the law department of the company that it would eliminate me from it, or to that effect, and he said Mr. Ruef was not employed to represent the company in connection with my department, and had nothing to do with it. That was the substance of it."

The evidence relied upon by the prosecution to connect defendant with the bribery of Lonergan was entirely circumstantial, and depended largely upon showing that he was connected with and a party to a scheme to bribe a working majority of the board of supervisors in relation to the application for the franchise which had been pending before the board for several months before the bribery was consummated.

Defendant had already drawn out from the witness Boxton evidence to the effect that Mr. Ruef was the boss of the board of supervisors, with a representative thereon who had distributed bribe money to the members of the board in reference to another ordinance. Another witness, Supervisor Phillips, testified that he had been offered a bribe by Halsey to stand by his company. Phillips answered that he could not do so unless released by the administration, or Mr. Ruef, and then left Mr. Halsey. Later in the day Halsey telephoned to him to come to the Mills building, which he did. Halsey then stated to him that from what he knew Ruef was favorable, and Phillips then agreed to stand with him, and received $2,500 in currency, and a promise of $5,000 when the Home Telephone ordinance was defeated. The prosecution had the right to contend that, from the conversation testified to by Mr. Pillsbury, the defendant was responsible for the employment of Ruef. Where circumstantial evidence is relied on to connect a defendant with a given crime, much must be left to the discretion of the trial court in admitting it. It is not necessary that each circumstance, of itself, would to every person appear to connect the defendant with the offense. It is sufficient if such circumstance, considered in relation to other facts and circumstances in evidence, may fairly tend to such result.

We do not think there is any merit in the contention made by appellant of variance between the crime charged and the crime proved. The claim of a variance as to the subject-matter for which the money was paid to influence Lonergan, is sufficiently answered by what we have said as to the sufficiency of the indictment.

As to the amount of money paid, the indictment charges a payment of $5,000. The proof showed a payment to Lonergan of $1,000 on one day, with a promise of $4,000 more, for Lonergan's friendship for the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, which was in fact paid a few days later. Proof of the payment of either $1,000 or $4,000 would have supported the substance of the charge in this regard. Proof of the larceny of $4,000 or $1,000 would sustain a charge of the larceny of $5,000. So it is perfectly clear to us that under a charge of paying $5,000 as a bribe, proof of the payment of such sum in two payments under an agreement to pay and to receive $5,000, as a bribe to do a certain thing, presents no question of variance as to the thing paid as the bribe.

Defendant requested the court to give to the jury certain instructions, numbered 4 and 5, as follows:

"(4) You have no right to indulge in any presumption or inference unfavorable to the defendant because of the refusal of any witness to testify, or the failure of any witness to testify for the prosecution."

"(5) The refusal of an alleged co-conspirator, or agent of the conspiracy, who has been placed on the witness stand, and refused to testify, should not be considered by the jury in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and the jury should not presume from such refusal to testify that the testimony of the witness, if given, would be against defendant."

Both of these instructions state a correct rule of law; and that they were pertinent to the case is shown by the following circumstances: The case was submitted to the jury on the evidence introduced by the prosecution, no evidence being introduced by defendant. Evidence had been introduced tending to show that one E. J. Zimmer was the auditor of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company; that the checks, aggregating between $40,000 and $50,000, upon which the prosecution claimed the money had been drawn, with which Lonergan and his fellows had been bribed, were drawn by order of said Zimmer, and were delivered to him. When delivered to him the checks bore the signature of the treasurer of the company, but required to be further signed, by any one of the following names: "Henry T. Scott, President," "E. J. Zimmer, for the President," or "Louis Glass, Vice President." The prosecution called E. J. Zimmer as a witness, and put to him the following questions: "What were your duties as auditor?" "You testified fully before the grand jury in this matter, did you not, Mr. Zimmer?" "Mr. Zimmer, did you answer that question before the grand jury, that I have just asked you here, to wit, as to what your duties were as auditor of that company?" Mr. Zimmer refused to answer each of these questions, upon the ground that it would have a tendency to subject him to punishment for a felony. He was not compelled to answer.

In the closing argument the attorney of the people claimed that the evidence showed that Zimmer, Glass, and Halsey were each guilty of bribing Lonergan; and with reference to Zimmer he used this language: "Mr. Zimmer's name appears on the indictment as a witness before the grand jury. You have not heard what he testified to. You have not received any intimation of what he testified to, although I would have been justified, in making my opening statement in this case, to have said to you what I expected to prove by E. J. Zimmer, whom I called as a witness in this case. I did not do it, because I want to play the game square. I would have had a right to say what I expected to prove, because I had a right to expect that every citizen in the state of California would perform his duty and comply with the social compact by which he receives protection to his life, his property, his wife and his children. I had a right to expect that when Mr. Zimmer was called upon this stand as a witness, he would tell what he knew, and not protect crime by the claim that it might tend to incriminate himself. But, as I say, out of a spirit of fairness, I did not say anything in my opening statement as to what I did expect to prove by Mr. Zimmer, and therefore there is nothing before you." This language was well calculated to impress upon the jury that the evidence that Zimmer refused to give would have tended to prove the defendant guilty; that his refusal to tell what he knew was to "protect crime." No objection appears to have been made to these remarks of the district attorney, and we only advert to them because they emphasize the necessity that the requested instructions should have been given. In refusing to testify Zimmer was in the exercise of a clear right given to him by the Constitution of the state and the statute, for which under the law no inference against the defendant may be drawn.

The precise point involved in the refusal to give the instructions now under discussion was decided in People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494, 20 Pac. 60, where the court said: "The court also erred in refusing to instruct the jury that the refusal of the alleged conspirators, who had been placed on the witness stand and declined to testify, should not be considered by the jury in determining the question of guilt or innocence, and that the jury should not presume from such refusal to testify that the testimony, if given, would be against the defendant."

The language of the refused instruction numbered 5 is taken almost literally from the language above quoted. It contains a correct statement of the rule of law applicable to the condition of this case, irrespective of the remarks made by the district attorney, and these remarks made it all the more necessary that the requested instructions, or one embodying the rule stated, should have been given. The court erred in refusing to give the requested instructions. People v. Irwin, supra. See, also, People v. Opie, 123 Cal. 294, 55 Pac. 989; Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 354; Beach v. U. S. (C. C.) 46 Fed. 754.

The court did not err in refusing an instruction requested by the defendant, to the effect that, in passing upon the credibility of witnesses, the jury have the right to take into consideration their motives, fears, or hopes, if any have been proved. This was sufficiently given by the court in reading to the jury section 1847 of the Code of Civil Procedure. "Fears or hopes" but express an amplification of "motives," and really add nothing to the meaning of section 1847.

In addition to the points discussed in this opinion, appellant has urged that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict of guilty. Inasmuch as the judgment and order must be reversed for the errors above noted, and the case remanded for another trial, we do not deem it necessary to pass upon this question.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

D. M. Delmas, T. C. Coogan, H. C. McPike, and C. W. Cross, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., William H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., Francis J. Heney, Asst. Dist. Atty., John O'Gara, Asst. Dist. Atty., and Wm. Hoff Cook, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. A hearing before this court was granted from the decision rendered by the Court of Appeal of the First appellate district. Upon due consideration we adopt the opinion and views of the Court of Appeal saving upon two propositions which will hereinafter be noted. Amplification of certain of the propositions discussed and decided by the Court of Appeal is called for in answer to the considerations pressed upon this court in the petition for rehearing.

1. A vast mass of evidence was introduced in this case which, for brevity, may be designated evidence touching the Oakland franchise. Admittedly, the transactions covered by this evidence, in point of time, long antedated any of the occurrences properly embraced within the charge of bribery. Admittedly, also, the transactions were entirely separate and distinct, the earlier one having no causal connection with the latter. By the Oakland evidence it was sought to be shown that the telephone company with which defendant Glass was connected, in an endeavor to prevent competition in the city of Oakland, and to exclude from that territory the Home Telephone Company, its competitor, and an applicant for a franchise, had itself, through a third person—"a dummy"—secured a franchise, and had aided and abetted in the organization of a corporation which did not enter the field of competition, and was not designed to enter the field of competition, but was organized and kept in existence for the purpose of holding the franchise and raising objection to the issuance of a third franchise to the Home Telephone Company, upon the ground that two companies were already in the field and that it was useless and injurious to them that a franchise should be issued to a third corporation. Most of what was done in this regard was done not by Mr. Glass but by Mr. Sabin, the then president of the company. To the repeated objections of the defendant's counsel to the introduction of this vast mass of testimony, the only reason assigned by the court for its admission is found in the statement that "it (the evidence) was all addressed to the question of the activities of this defendant in the corporation during the period that is material here." This language lacks in lucidity much to be desired. The only "activities" of the defendant which could be legitimately inquired into under this charge of bribery were activities having a bearing thereon and a connection therewith. The only "period that is material here" is the period from the formation of the alleged conspiracy to bribe the San Francisco supervisors down to and including the criminal accomplishment of the conspiracy upon which this charge of felony is based. It should seem unnecessary to state—but apparently it is not—that a multitude of acts, facts and happenings upon which men base their opinions and judgments of their fellow men do not come within the definition and scope of evidence as known to our law. If a man is informed, and believes his informant, that another man is dissolute, is a gambler, is an associate of known thieves, is a petty larcenist, and makes his home in a house of prostitution, he will justly look upon such a person with suspicion, will properly govern his dealings and relations with that person by this information, and would most naturally say, if he learned that the man had been arrested for burglary, that "it was to be expected." Yet, upon the trial of that man for burglary, no word of these matters would be admissible against him. Not because they would not have a tendency to show that a man of such character would be much more likely to commit the given offense than would a man of proven upright and honorable life, but because the law, for reasons good and sufficient unto itself, has declared that a man shall be put upon trial for but one offense, and that he shall not be embarrassed by being called upon to defend or exculpate himself, or to explain any damaging act or fact which is not embraced within the charge he is called upon to meet. The law will not even permit a defendant's reputation to be assailed unless he shall himself have made that reputation an issue in the case. This, perhaps undue tenderness, goes to the extent that his guilt of petty offenses may not even be shown, and in his impeachment it may be established against him only that he has been previously convicted of a felony. It would, no doubt, have made most potently against this defendant in the minds of the jurors if, for example, it could have been shown that in this separate and distinct Oakland transaction he had bribed the councilmen there. But no one has been bold enough to assert that such evidence would be admissible, and the decisions of every court, including our own, are against its admissibility. Not only is the prosecution thus forbidden to prove another crime, but the law does not sanction the introduction of evidence falling short of crime and designed merely to degrade and prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jury. Commonwealth v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16; People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193. As has been said, the language of the court holding that it was permissible to show "the activities of the defendant during the period that is material here" is not illuminating, nor is it adopted by the people in their briefs. By the people it is contended, first, that the evidence is admissible as showing identity of plan; second, as showing motive; and, third, if inadmissible, still, as the evidence did not tend to prove any other crime against the defendant, its admission was without injury. The people's brief declares it to be admissible as showing "identity and plan." We construe this to mean identity "of" plan, because, of course, the identity of the defendant was never for a moment in question. Identity of plan must mean a desire and effort upon the part of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company to exclude competition in Oakland, and the same desire and effort displayed to exclude competition in San Francisco. But indisputably there was no identity of plan. It is not contended that in any of the Oakland transactions any crime was committed, while the contention is that in the San Francisco transaction crime, and nothing but crime, was contemplated and perpetrated.

As to the second reason assigned—that of motive—there never was any doubt, never any question, never any suggestion from any source whatsoever, but that if this crime was committed, it was committed for the sole and single purpose of preventing competition. Indeed, the uncontradicted evidence of the supervisors, if direct evidence upon so plain a proposition was needed, was all to this effect. A boy of ten years might justly be regarded as gravely deficient in intellect who would need any enlightenment upon so plain a proposition. In fact, so far from the question of the motive ever having been in doubt, it would call for the acutest ingenuity to conceive of any other motive than this most obvious one. Yet, nevertheless, it is said that this vast mass of evidence, dealing with transactions wholly detached in time and place, is admissible as establishing the motive which prompted the defendant to commit an alleged crime, separate and distinct from the Oakland transactions in time, in place, and in methods. The real reason why the evidence was offered is most obvious. It was not offered to show motive. It was not offered to show identity and plan or identity of plan. These are the veriest pretences. It was designed to besmirch and degrade the defendant and to be made use of in argument, to show that the defendant had gone to the length of organizing a fraudulent corporation, and by secret device and artful chicane had endeavored to prevent honest competition; that the defendant had gone to the border line of crime in the Oakland transaction and found, that stopping there, his efforts to prevent competition were without success. What more natural, therefore, than that when the same problem arose in San Francisco, the defendant, finding even the efforts of fraud and trickery unavailable, should have stepped over the line and became a lawbreaker and a criminal? Such, we say, was the obvious purpose for which the evidence was introduced, and this the briefs of the people here on file establish. For in those briefs, while endeavoring to support the admissibility of the evidence on the grounds above stated, it is said that if "the evidence also casts suspicion on defendant he cannot be heard to complain." In the history of the transactions Glass is charged with having organized this "bogus" company. There is described the policy of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company employing political bosses and paying salaries to supervisors. It is directly stated that "the history of the contest waged against the Home Company in Oakland shows so clearly Glass' activity in his company's behalf; * * * these and many other circumstances lead irresistibly to the conclusion that Louis Glass, vice president, acting president, and general manager of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, aided, abetted, advised, directed, and encouraged Halsey to pay the bribe to Lonergan." And, finally, again, quoting from the people's brief it is said, "To Glass, this experience in Oakland must have taught a bitter lesson. For one thing, Beasley's 'bogus' company had proved a losing investment—no small consideration, for the executive committee had listened very reluctantly when Glass had personally pleaded for its succor. But the lesson stamped indelibly on his mind must have been that the Home Telephone Company could not be kept out of San Francisco except by drastic measures." That this evidence was potent for the purpose of degrading the defendant in the eyes of the jurors will at once be conceded. That it had a tendency to inflame the mind of the jurors against the defendant by showing that in the past he had resorted to the arts of trickery and fraud to prevent honest competition, is quite apparent. That men in the everyday affairs of life would have been influenced by such evidence is unquestionably true. But these things go to establish merely the wrong which its admission worked upon the defendant, and not its admissibility. It was not admissible. Clearly, in the everyday affairs of life, if it should be established to the satisfaction of a jury that upon another and distinct occasion a defendant had offered or solicited a bribe, it would have great weight with a jury in determining whether in the instance charged he had been guilty of the offense. It would establish, at least, that he was the sort of man who would be willing to do this criminal act. Such was the line of reason and argument here employed. Yet such matters are never legal evidence. In discussing precisely such a case, where evidence had been admitted against the defendant charged with bribery, of a former act of like character, the court of appeals of New York says: "The mental ability and disposition of the defendant to commit a crime of this sort, while it might persuade a jury, raises no legal presumption. * * * Yet the inference drawn by the prosecuting officer, and permitted by the court, left it for the jury to say that the desire of Sharp, manifested by the offer of a bribe in one instance, was the same desire which led to the actual giving of a bribe in the other; hence that the two crimes had the same origin. * * * It was put in near the beginning of the trial, and the impression then made must have continued with the jury, and in their minds colored and deepened, if it did not distort, the subsequent evidence. It did indeed cast a dark shadow upon the defendant's character. It not only tended very strongly to prove the defendant guilty; it was absolute proof, but it was of a different crime from that charged. It was offered and received directly on the main issue, and was of great and persuasive force against him. Such evidence is uniformly condemned, as tending to draw away the minds of the jurors from the real point on which their verdict is sought, and to excite prejudice, and to mislead them. It was improperly received, and the exception to its admission well taken." People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 14 N. E. 319, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851.

Of the third proposition that the evidence, even if erroneously admitted, was without prejudice to the defendant, the argument of the people adverted to in this brief should be sufficient to show the untenableness. But, moreover, the rule does not limit the exclusion of such evidence only to transactions which amount to crime. It includes all evidence which, as here, would have a tendency to degrade the defendant, to arouse the prejudice of the jury, to divert their minds from the real issues in the case, or to persuade them by matters not judicially cognizable, that the defendant, for reasons other than those contained in legitimate evidence, was more likely to have committed the offense. People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193. Quite apposite in this connection is the following language of the Circuit Court of the United States in Miller v. Territory of Oklahoma, 149 Fed. 330, 79 C. C. A. 268, where that court says: "The foregoing incident strikingly illustrates where the responsibility for the miscarriage of justice in criminal prosecutions should sometimes be placed, instead of imputing the reversal of convictions by the appellate courts to what is properly termed 'mere technicalities.' The zeal, unrestrained by legal barriers, of some prosecuting attorneys, tempts to an insistence upon the admission of incompetent evidence, or getting before the jury some extraneous facts supposed to be helpful in securing a verdict of guilty, where they have prestige enough to induce the trial court to give them latitude. When the error is exposed on appeal, it is met with the stereotyped argument that it is not apparent it in any wise influenced the minds of the jury. The reply the law makes to such suggestion is that, after injecting it into the case to influence the jury, the prosecutor ought not to be heard to say, after he has secured a conviction, it was harmless. As the appellate court has not insight into the deliberations of the jury room, the presumption is to be indulged, in favor of the liberty of the citizen, that whatever the prosecutor, against the protest of the defendant, has laid before the jury, helped to make up the weight of the prosecution which resulted in the verdict of guilty."

2. Upon the question of the admissibility of the testimony touching the employment of Ruef and the salary paid to him by the company of which defendant was manager, the Court of Appeal goes no further than to hold that the prosecution "had the right to contend that from the conversation testified to by Mr. Pillsbury the defendant was responsible for the employment of Ruef." It does not, however, saving in this inferential way, discuss or pass upon the admissibility of the evidence itself. It was clearly inadmissible, and the purpose of its offer was, of course, identical with the offer of the Oakland testimony—to degrade the defendant and prejudice him in the eyes of the jury. By the people it is argued that the evidence was admissible because "the defendant was the first to make Abraham Ruef a circumstance in the case"; that "the evidence was therefore admissible as tending to show preparation." It is further stated that the evidence was admissible because it tended to show a connection between Halsey and Glass, and, finally, that it was admissible as tending to show the motive of the defendant in the bribery of Lonergan. "Ruef, being the boss of the board of supervisors, and the application of the Home Telephone Company being before the board, it is not believable that the desire of defeating that ordinance did not enter into the payment of that large salary to Ruef." But it is not contended even by the prosecution that Ruef was in any way employed in the bribery of the supervisors, or that the salary was paid to him for any such purpose. Not only is this so, but it is affirmatively made to appear that Ruef opposed the desires of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company and was actively instrumental in seeing that its rival, the Home Telephone Company, secured its franchise. Thus, it is said in respondent's brief: "It must have been clear to any observer, long before the caucus, that Ruef, despite his liberal monthly salary, was not favorable to the Pacific States. It seems from the record that the Home Telephone Company also spent money very freely."

It being therefore in evidence, and, indeed, asserted by the prosecution that Ruef was not employed by defendant in furtherance of the conspiracy to bribe the supervisors, that he took no part in the matter of their bribery, that his services were actively enlisted on behalf of the opposition company, what of bearing upon this case could this evidence of his employment establish, what could have been its purpose other than as has been said, the purpose of degrading defendant and inflaming the minds of the jurors against him? The reasons assigned for the admissibility of this evidence were without substantiality. Respondent asserts that the evidence was admissible because "defendant was the first to make Abraham Ruef a circumstance in this case." All that there is in this regard is that in the cross-examination of one of the people's witnesses, Supervisor Boxton, his testimony appears to the following effect: "The Republican boss of the board, Boss Ruef, and James L. Gallagher distributed money to the members of the board—a certain gratuity—with reference to the passage of that ordinance." The ordinance here referred to had nothing to do with telephone matters. It scarcely merits the reply that such a statement elicited upon cross-examination of a witness for the people is no justification for the introduction of the evidence to show that "Boss Ruef" was employed by defendant's company, and inferentially by defendant upon matters and things wholly disconnected with the charge under investigation. Nor can it be perceived why the evidence was admissible as tending to show any connection between Halsey and Glass, nor how it can show such connection. As to its being admissible to show the "motive of the defendant in the bribery of Lonergan," as has been said, it was never contended by the people that Ruef was employed by the defendant or by his company to bribe these officers, or that he took any part in such bribery, and how, therefore, evidence of the employment of Ruef could by any possibility show "the motive of defendant in the bribery of Lonergan" cannot be comprehended. The record itself, however, resolves all these questions and establishes that the real purpose was that indicated. When objection was made to the introduction of this evidence the following colloquy took place: "The Court: What is the purpose of that, Mr. Heney? Mr. Heney: The purpose is to show that Mr. Glass informed this witness that Abraham Ruef was employed by the company during that period of time." Here was the purpose of the offer, stated in simple and direct terms. It was to show the employment under the indicated circumstances as the "foundation of an argument" against the character of Glass, and to prejudice the jury against him by showing that he had taken Ruef into the employ of the company.

3. Under objection and exceptions of defendant, evidence was introduced of the bribery and the payment of moneys by Halsey to certain other supervisors. This evidence as to each of these transactions was admittedly evidence of a separate and distinct crime. It is so declared by the respondent. It was admissible, as contended for by respondent, and as discussed in the opinion of the Court of Appeal, not as proving separate and distinct crimes, but as showing that the specific act of bribery charged was but a part execution of one conspiracy, a scheme which contemplated the bribery of a sufficient number of supervisors to prevent the granting of the franchise. Indisputably the evidence was not admissible generally, nor was it admissible to show that the defendant probably committed the crime with which he was charged, by showing that at other times he had committed like crimes. The court itself upon this evidence declared as follows: "Evidence of alleged payments to other supervisors received as tending to show identity of plan and motive and to trace the alleged bribe fund of fifty thousand dollars, of which the five thousand dollar bribe alleged in the indictment herein was claimed to be a part." The reasons thus given are sound in point of law. They themselves establish that the evidence was before the jury for consideration for these limited purposes only. Being before the jury for these limited purposes, the evidence was of course not before the jury for any other purpose. Yet, when defendant proposed instructions directing the jury as to the limits within which the evidence could be considered by them, one and all, the court refused these instructions. The first was in the following language: "It is not proper to show that the defendant was guilty of some other offense, for the purpose of raising a presumption, either of law or of fact, of his guilt in the case under consideration." The court refused to give this instruction upon the ground that it was "not justified by the evidence; no evidence received for such purpose." The instruction is unimpeachable in point of law. It is the exact language of this court in People v. Sears, 119 Cal. 267, 51 Pac. 325. The evidence, though admissible for but the limited purpose indicated, was by the court admitted generally. It was most proper, therefore, for the defendant's counsel to seek to have the jury instructed as to the sole purpose or purposes for which it could be considered. One of the purposes for which it could not be considered was undoubtedly the purpose embraced in the instruction. And yet the court refused to give it solely on the ground that, in its own mind, it had not received the evidence for that purpose. But how, unless the court informed the jury that it had not received it for that purpose, was the jury to know that it was not to be considered for that purpose? Surely, when the court confines its ruling to a general declaration that "the objection is overruled," the jury is not in a position to know, unless informed in terms by the court, that it is not to consider the evidence generally. Neither jury nor counsel thus being enlightened by the court as to the purpose for which it considered the evidence admissible, defendant's counsel proposed several other instructions upon the same subject. For instance, the following: "Testimony has been introduced by the prosecution which it is claimed tends to show the commission of other acts or offenses by the defendant similar to those charged in the indictment. I charge you that this evidence was admitted for the sole purpose of proving guilty intent, motive, or guilty knowledge of the defendant, and that it can be considered by you for no other purpose." This instruction was refused by the court under its statement that "it was not warranted by any claim, theory, or evidence presented during the trial as to other offenses. Evidence not so limited or admitted to prove guilty intent." And yet, when we turn to the brief of the people, we find vigorous argument that the evidence was offered and was properly admitted to prove motive and guilty intent. In various other ways counsel for defendant, left groping in the dark, endeavored by pertinent instructions to have the court limit the consideration of this evidence of other crimes to specific purposes. One and all the court refused to give these instructions, and of its own initiative gave no instruction whatsoever limiting the purpose for which the evidence should be considered by the jury, notwithstanding that the court by its indorsement on the refused instructions declared that it was received only as tending to show identity of plan and motive and to trace the alleged bribe fund of fifty thousand dollars. On this appeal it is not contended that evidence of the other crimes was generally admissible to prove the crime charged, but the people rest upon the proposition that the refusal of the first instruction quoted was justified because it was upon a "mere abstract question of law," and that the refusal to give the other instructions was justified "because the evidence was not admitted for the sole purpose of proving guilty intent, motive or guilty knowledge," but was admitted "also to show a single design, purpose and plan, and to identify and connect the defendant with the bribery of Lonergan by means of the fifty thousand dollar bribe fund." As has been said, defendant's counsel could not know, and were not able to find out the specific purposes for which the court admitted the evidence, since it was by the court admitted generally. The court alone knew the limited purposes which, in its own mind, it believed justified the admission of the evidence. It became the plain duty of the court under these circumstances to have instructed the jury, and to have limited its consideration of the evidence to these specific purposes, and this duty became the more imperative when defendant's counsel were seeking, with all the knowledge they possessed, to have the consideration of the evidence so properly limited. "When evidence of other crimes is admitted, it should be carefully limited and guarded by instructions to the jury, so that its operation and effect may be confined to the legitimate purposes for which it is competent." 12 Cyc. 631. In Commonwealth v. Shepard, 1 Allen (Mass.) 575, Bigelow, Chief Justice, says, speaking upon the admission of evidence of other offenses: "It is a dangerous species of evidence not only because it requires a defendant to meet and explain other acts than those charged against him and for which he is on trial, but also because it may lead the jury to violate the great principle that a party is not to be convicted of one crime by proof that he is guilty of another. For this reason, it is essential to the rights of the accused that when such evidence is admitted it should be carefully limited and guarded by instructions to the jury, so that its operation and effect may be confined to the single and legitimate purpose for which it is competent." In our state, in People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 Pac. 43, it is said: "It was of the highest importance to the defendant in this case, as it always is to any defendant in any case in which evidence of a distinct offense has been admitted for the purpose of showing motive to commit the crime charged that the jury should be cautioned not to consider such evidence for any but the limited purpose for which it has been admitted, and we cannot see that the instruction as presented contained a single word beyond what the defendant had a right to request. The court, however, refused the instruction, and its refusal is justified on the ground that another instruction framed by the judge on the same point was given. It is true that the instruction given stated the law correctly; but it was brief, general, and colorless in comparison with the instruction asked, and had the effect of minimizing the importance of a consideration which could not have been stated with too much emphasis. This instruction as asked should have been given." The distinction between the Cook Case and the case at bar is that in the Cook Case the court did give an instruction, though it was characterized by this court as being "brief, general, and colorless." In the case at bar the court refused to instruct the jury upon the subject at all.

4. In addition to what the Court of Appeal says in its discussion touching the error of the trial court in refusing to give instructions proposed by defendant, to the effect that the jury had no right to indulge in any presumption or inference unfavorable to the defendant because of the refusal of any witness to testify, or the failure of any witness to testify for the prosecution, it is to be borne in mind that the argument of the prosecuting attorney against the defendant for the refusal of Zimmer to testify, contained not only a severe arraignment of the defendant, but implication and insinuation that the testimony if given would have been unfavorable to the defendant. The method which the defendant's counsel took to set the jury right upon this matter was the approved method—of proposing timely instructions to the jury to disregard the objectionable remarks. Johnson v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 35 Utah, 285, 100 Pac. 390. It will be remembered that Zimmer refused to testify upon the ground that his testimony would incriminate, not Glass, but himself. Says the Supreme Court of the United States: "No inference should have been permitted to be drawn against the defendant because of the assertion by the witness of this right to protect himself. He was called by the government. If he had testified, his testimony might have been in favor of the defendant, though criminating himself. It might have entirely exonerated the defendant. To infer that the very opposite would have been or might have been the effect of his testimony, had it been given, was unwarranted." Beach v. United States (C. C.) 46 Fed. 754. That the principles of law contained in the proposed instructions were unimpeachable is not questioned. In justification or excuse of the court's refusal, it is said only that injury was not worked to the defendant, because the substance of the instructions was contained in instructions which the court actually gave. But when reference is had to these instructions, the giving of which it is asserted saves the error, it is found that they amount to no more than this, that in varying form the jury is told that it is to consider only the evidence in the case, and is not to consider evidence which has been excluded or ordered stricken out by the court, and that the jury is cautioned to distinguish carefully between the facts testified to by the witnesses and the statements made by counsel as to what facts have been proved. It is inconceivable that any one can assert that such colorless and characterless instructions containing no direct reference to this subject, meet a case where the attorney for the people has been arguing, in violation of the law, as to what the witness would have testified to, if he had testified, and that the testimony would have been hostile to the defendant. If this, indeed, be the rule, then all antecedent authority and precedent must be cast aside, and notwithstanding the mandatory declaration of the Code that judges must instruct the jury on all pertinent matters of law, when requested so to do, and notwithstanding the concession here made that these were pertinent and important principles of law, it will suffice in the future to say that if the judge tells the jury that they are to consider the evidence, and only the evidence, admitted in the case, his full duty to a defendant has been performed. Let one instance of the working of such a rule as is here contended for suffice. The defendant exercising his constitutional right does not testify in his own behalf. The prosecuting officer argues vehemently that he fails to take the witness stand because he knows he is guilty, and that if he did take the witness stand, on cross-examination he would prove that he was guilty, and that the jury is therefore justified in finding him guilty, from the fact that he has failed to testify. Defendant's counsel proposes an instruction to the effect that no inference adverse to the defendant is to be drawn from his failure to testify. The court refuses to give this instruction, and this court, following the rule here contended for, would have to hold that the instruction of the court to the jury that it was to consider only the evidence adduced in the case embraced the matter of the proposed rejected instruction, and was therefore all that the defendant was entitled to. If justification for the court's refusal may be found in the one case, it may equally be found in the other. The illustration is no more extreme than is the matter at bar.

For these reasons, in addition to those given in the opinion of the Court of Appeal, the judgment and order are reversed and the cause remanded.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment of reversal and in most particulars in the opinion of Justice HENSHAW. I shall, if other pressing duties permit, present my views in a separate opinion.

SLOSS, J. I concur in the judgment of reversal upon the ground, solely, that the court erred in admitting testimony concerning the Oakland transactions in 1902. This testimony related to matters extraneous and collateral to the main charge, and having, so far as I am able to see, no reasonably direct tendency to show the commission by the defendant of the offense charged, or a motive on his part for its commission. Nor can it be said that this testimony, if its admission was error, did not harm the defendant. Even though his conduct with regard to the Oakland franchise did not constitute a crime, it included acts which might well be regarded as discreditable. The natural effect of such testimony would be to prejudice his case in the minds of the jury.

On each of the other points discussed in the opinion of Mr. Justice HENSHAW, I agree with the dissenting members of the court that no prejudicial error was committed.

SHAW, J. I dissent from the judgment of reversal. The evidence of the conversation between Pillsbury and Glass showed the familiarity of the latter with the inside doings of the company, and was competent for that purpose, as was fully shown in Justice Hall's opinion. The evidence of the bribery of the other supervisors, as Justice Hall shows, tended directly to prove the giving of money to Lonergan, which was the specific crime charged. This takes it out of the rule requiring cautionary instructions as to evidence admitted for a limited purpose. The refusal to instruct specially as to the Zimmer episode was fully covered by the instructions given. Any intelligent juror would know therefrom that Zimmer's refusal to testify could not be considered. The misconduct and ulterior purposes of counsel for the prosecution, about which so much is said, is foreign to the case, so far as this court is concerned. Misconduct is not assigned as error.

With regard to the Oakland franchise, a mass of evidence was given concerning the previous course of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company toward the rival concern. Large quasi public corporations operating over an entire state are more like governmental bodies than like natural persons. They act in accordance with fixed, permanent rules and orders, akin to laws. Their methods cannot be judged by the same standards as those of individuals. The evidence as to the Oakland matters showed a settled policy and design by said company to vigorously oppose the competing company at all points, justifying an inference that there were rules and orders to that effect which its officers were expected to follow. Glass must have been aware of this, and it would naturally incite him to more than ordinary zeal in endeavoring to stamp out the beginnings of competition in his own company's most valuable territory, the city of San Francisco. It had a direct legal tendency to prove the motive to bribe the supervisors, if he was willing to resort to such practices, and it was admissible for that purpose. The fact that such motive would be obvious would not render proof of it incompetent.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.

158 Cal. 721

BLAIR v. HAZZARD. (L. A. 2,147.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1910.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 191*)—WILLS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where real estate was devised to trustees with power to sell, and directions to apply the proceeds to certain valid trusts, the trustees took the legal title with power to convey, subject only to administration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 200*)—CONVEYANCE BY TRUSTEE —DEEDS—UNTRUTHFUL RECITAL.

Where trustees had legal title to real estate, with power to convey subject only to administration, the fact that a deed untruthfully recited that the superior court had authorized them to sell the property, and that they were selling pursuant to and "in accordance with the authority, power, and discretion in the aforesaid decree and order" of the court, did not impair the validity of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 271*)—ADMINISTRATION EXPENSES—PROPERTY LIABLE—LAND CONVEYED BY TRUSTEES—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Where trustees with power of sale under a will conveyed the property before the administration was closed, the grantee took title subject to administration to the same extent as the grantee of a devisee, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1452, 1581; and hence could not acquire title by adverse possession as against the administrator with the will annexed, so as to relieve the property from the demands of administration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 4*)—PROPERTY OF ESTATE.

Title by adverse possession cannot be acquired against administrators or executors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 21, 22; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*)—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION — MUNIMENT OF TITLE.

A decree of distribution of property belonging to a decedent's estate, and passing to an heir or devisee, is a muniment of title of the highest value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Robert Blair against George W. Hazzard, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of S. S. Clark, deceased, to quiet title. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified.

Haines & Haines, for appellant. Collier, Smith & Hoff, for respondent.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

HENSHAW, J. This is an action to quiet title.

In 1873 S. S. Clark died testate leaving real estate situated in the county of San Diego. His will was originally admitted to probate in Hamilton county, Ohio, and subsequently ancillary letters of administration with the will annexed issued from the probate court of San Diego county to Henry Pearce as sole executor. Henry Pearce continued so to act as the executor until his death in 1888. The land here in controversy was a part of the property of Clark's estate and by his will was devised to Henry Pearce, Christopher Cockrill, and Mary Clark, as cotrustees with the power of sale. Subsequent to the death of Pearce the surviving trustees sold the property to plaintiff for full value. At the time of their sale the property had not been distributed to them as trustees, nor has it since been distributed to them or to Blair as their grantee. In fact, upon the death of Pearce, administration of the estate was suspended until March, 1905, some 17 years after this sale, when appellant was appointed administrator. This administrator concedes the validity of the deed by the trustees to carry title to Blair, but insists that the title and right of possession were subordinate to the requirements of administration, that the title was taken subject to administration, and that thus the estate controls the title for the purposes of distributing the property and subjecting it to its proper share of the expenses of administration which, in this case, there admittedly being no creditors' claims, means merely administrator's fees, attorney's fees, and necessary probate fees. Thereupon plaintiff brought this action to quiet title, charging in two counts, first, title under the deed, second, by adverse possession. The defendant joined issued upon the asserted title by adverse possession, admitting legal title by virtue of the trustees' deed and alleging, as above set forth, that such title was taken in subordination to the statutory right of administration. The court found that the superior court of San Diego had never appointed Christopher Cockrill or Mary Clark, or either of them, trustees of the estate of Clark, and that it never made an order or decree authorizing or empowering them, or either of them, to make the conveyance, but that Blair paid for the property full value, believing that he was acquiring good and complete title thereto, that he entered under a claim of right based upon his deed and continued in possession of it, paying all taxes thereon and holding it under his claim of title adversely to the whole world. It concluded that Hazzard, as administrator, had no right, title, or claim upon the property for the purposes of administration, or for any other purpose whatsoever, and the decree followed accordingly. Upon this appeal, it is insisted that the trustees who executed the deed to Blair were devisees of the fee of the property, and they took the legal title thereto upon valid trusts and with power to sell, and that their sale carried title, notwithstanding it was not preceded by an authorizing order or followed by a confirmatory order of the court of probate. Over these propositions there is no controversy; the question in dispute being simply this: Did the title which plaintiff thus acquired, or his asserted title by adverse possession, relieve the land from its share of the burdens of administration?

By the bill of exceptions it is declared that the real property here in question "was devised * * * to Henry Pearce, Christopher Cockrill, and Mary Alnette Clark, as cotrustees with power to sell and with directions to apply the proceeds of said sale to certain valid trusts." The questions of the validity of the trusts and of the power to sell being thus eliminated, the trustees unquestionably took legal title with power to convey that title subject to administration. Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 264, 33 Pac. 95; Martinovich v. Marsicano, 137 Cal. 354, 70 Pac. 459. The deed, it is true, recites that the superior court of San Diego made its order authorizing the trustees to sell, and further recites that they are selling "pursuant to and in accordance with the authority, power, and discretion, in the aforesaid decree and order of the superior court," and these recitals the court found to be untrue, but, nevertheless, that would not impair the validity of the trustees' deed which, in terms, is a deed, by the trustees of the estate of Sydney S. Clark, deceased, under the last will and testament of Sydney S. Clark, deceased, and which they could validly execute without order of court. Estate of Delaney, 49 Cal. 76; Estate of Williams, 92 Cal. 183, 28 Pac. 227, 679; Morffew v. S. F. & S. R. R. R. Co., 107 Cal. 587, 40 Pac. 810; Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 Pac. 825; Estate of O'Conner, 2 Cal. App. 475, 84 Pac. 317. The deed is executed by the grantors as trustees and conveys the title which as devisees they took under the will of Clark. It will not be disputed that a grantee of a devisee under a will takes title subject to administration. Code Civ. Proc §§ 1452, 1581.

The case thus presented is one where the grantee believed he acquired absolute title to real property, since he would not have paid its full value otherwise, and where, in fact, he did acquire the title of the estate thereto, including the right of possession with the one statutory reservation, that the property was still subject to the demands of the estate and of its representatives for the purposes of the administration. The grantee enters under this deed; exercises the fullest dominion and control over it. He probably was in ignorance of the liabilities which the statute imposed upon his title, namely, that it was subject to the demands of administration, and thought that he was holding adversely to the whole world, including the estate from which his title was deraigned.

The question is, Can a devisee of an estate or a grantee of a devisee entering into possession of realty by virtue of title actually or colorably derived from the estate, and asserting title from no other independent source, acquire, under these circumstances, a title against the estate by adverse possession so as to relieve the property from the statutory requirement that it shall be subject to the demands of administration? This question must be answered in the negative. First, because to answer it otherwise would be to repudiate, indeed, to obliterate, the provisions of the Code which contemplate and declare that throughout administration and until the close thereof, whether the real property be in the possession of the executor or administrator or in the possession of devisees or heirs, it shall be subject to administration and chargeable with its proportionate share of the expenses of administration. If a sale becomes necessary, it may even be retaken from the heir or devisee and sold to the extinguishment of his title. It is to be remembered that it is merely through the indulgence of the present law that the heir or devisee is entitled to possession at all until after distribution (Meeks v. Hahn, 20 Cal. 628), and it was never in the contemplation of the law that by granting the favor to the heir or devisee of possession during administration, it should be made possible to set up in hostility to the estate a title by adverse possession which would thus defeat one of the primary objects of probate, namely, that all the property of the deceased, saving such as is exempt from execution, should be first chargeable with his debts.

From the very nature of the case, title by adverse possession cannot be acquired against the administrator or executor. Such a title would be as foreign to our law as would be the claim of a tenant that he had acquired title by adverse possession against his landlord while holding under strict tenancy. The entry of a devisee or heir under such circumstances and his holding after, as matter of law, cannot be in hostility to the estate's rights. By the very language of the law it is in subordination to those rights. The administrator's or executor's possession never has been and never will be construed as possession in hostility to the heir or devisee, per contra, the possession of the heir or devisee, while the estate is in the course of administration, can never be construed to be in hostility to the rights over that property with which the law clothes the estate. And from practical considerations it becomes also apparent that title by adverse possession cannot thus arise. Everything which the devisee in possession does by way of dominion, ownership, and exclusive control he has a perfect right to do, so far as the estate is concerned, and in the doing of these things he does not trench upon or interfere with any of the rights which the statute has reserved to the estate. There is nothing therefore, and can be nothing, to put the administrator upon notice that the devisee is claiming in hostility to him. The devisee may, as in this case, honestly believe that he is holding against all the world, including the estate, but in truth he is holding against all the world except the estate, since under the law his whole title is subordinate to the estate's rights. There is therefore, and can be in the nature of things, no such hostility between the legal rights of the devisee or heir in possession and the administrator or executor which can start the statute of limitations to running in favor of or against either. A decree of distribution is a muniment of title of the highest value. Through such decrees, and through such decrees only, can the titles of land be justly established. This court has upon many occasions countenanced and approved the completion of the administration of estates when that administration, after suspension, has been resumed for no other purpose than to enter a decree of distribution giving peace and security to title. Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 518; Estate of Pina, 112 Cal. 14, 44 Pac. 332; Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 Pac. 1078; Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 51 Pac. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; Toland v. Earle, 129 Cal. 148, 61 Pac. 914, 79 Am. St. Rep. 100.

For these reasons the trial court is directed to modify its judgment in accordance with the foregoing, by holding that the property in the complaint set forth is still subject to the legal requirements of the estate of Clark, for the purposes of and in due course of administration.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

158 Cal. 727

RANDOLPH v. LINDSAY. (L. A. 2,336.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 31, 1910.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 83*)—CONTRACTS.

Plaintiff, defendant, and another, in order to develop certain mines which they had acquired and conveyed to a corporation, erected a stampmill and, when the ore proved insufficient, plaintiff and defendant agreed that the company should work other mining territory in the vicinity of the mill, and that to enable it to do so, plaintiff and defendant would advance money from time to time, and that either would pay to the other any sums necessary to equalize between them the advances so made. On December 4th, plaintiff wrote defendant stating that he had advanced a certain amount over that advanced by defendant and requesting the latter to make payment equalizing such excess, or give notes therefor, to which defendant replied on December 6th, stating that he was not paying the company's debts without security and a plain understanding with the stockholders, and that he was surprised that plaintiff should assume to advance money on his account without his consent, as he was able to do his own advancing, and that he did not care to go any further with the deal looking to the purchase of a mine which plaintiff had stated in his letter, in connection with his request for payment by defendant, that he was contemplating purchasing for the company, without some thorough understanding. Held, that defendant's letter was a repudiation of any agreement made between him and plaintiff to equalize the advances made by them, and a refusal by defendant to be bound thereby in the future.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 83*)—RESCISSION —EFFECT.

While defendant was not bound to continue the agreement for the equalization of advances between himself and plaintiff longer than he desired, he was bound thereby as to advances made after his letter rescinding the contract, which were incurred on account of obligations assumed before his repudiation thereof, or for the purpose of completing the transaction begun theretofore, which could not be abandoned without substantial loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Epes Randolph against Lycurgus Lindsay. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Harris & Swanwick and Hunsker & Britt, for appellant. Eugene S. Ives and Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeals by defendant from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff sued to recover $26,784.62 alleged to be due for money paid by plaintiff for the defendant under two special contracts. It is contended by the appellant that the findings as to the amount due plaintiff are not sustained by the evidence.

Randolph, Lindsay, and one Mackay, acquired certain gold mines in Mexico, which they conveyed to a corporation organized by them named the Llanos de Oro Mining & Milling Company, with a capital stock of $4,000,000, divided into 400,000 shares of the par value of $10 each. In consideration of the conveyance of the mines, the three parties received the entire capital stock of the company in equal shares. In order to get the gold from the mines, it was necessary to expend a large amount of money in the erection of a stampmill and in development work. Randolph and Lindsay, as managers of the company, undertook to raise the required funds by means of notes of the company. It was agreed between the three that in placing these loans each payee was to receive, as a bonus, four dollars in stock for each dollar loaned, the stock required for that purpose being contributed in equal amounts by the three interested parties. Mackay, however, was not expected to, and did not, procure any loans or otherwise aid in financing the concern. The sum of $446,300 was raised in this manner and expended on the mines prior to April 21, 1906. The stampmill was not finished, and it was necessary to raise more money to carry the enterprise to completion and fruition. Randolph had already advanced for the company sums amounting to $20,250. The complaint alleges, and the court finds, that on or about April 21, 1906, the plaintiff and defendant agreed with each other that the corporation should continue to carry on its business and plans of development and equipment, and that to enable it to do so they would advance for it the necessary funds, share and share alike, and would pay, share and share alike, any and all debts of the company incurred by reason of carrying on its business and plans aforesaid, and that each would pay to the other whatever sum of money was necessary to equalize their respective advances. It is claimed by the appellant that this does not cover the amounts previously advanced by Randolph, as aforesaid, which amounts were included in the judgment. As we have concluded that the judgment and order must be reversed for other reasons to be presently stated, we need not consider this point. We state the facts aforesaid because they tend to explain the subsequent transactions.

In July or August, 1906, the mill was completed and upon a thorough milling test of the ore it turned out to be too poor to be worth working. In other words, the enterprise proved to be a failure. The mines were shut down. It is alleged, and the court, in effect, finds that to meet this emergency and retrieve the disaster as far as might be, the plaintiff and defendant, in October, 1906, agreed with each other that the company should explore and seek for mines or mining territory in the vicinity of the mill, which could be treated profitably by the mill, or which could be purchased, leased, or used in connection therewith, and that they would advance to the company, from time to time, such money as might be required therefor, share and share alike, would pay, equally, all debts of the company incurred in so doing, and that either would pay to the other whatever sums were necessary to equalize between them the advances so made for the company.

The findings as to the amounts advanced by Randolph included the sum of $23,294.82, composed of numerous items of advances made by Randolph from December 24, 1906, to July 16, 1907. It is contended by the appellant that the agreement of October, 1906, was abrogated by him on December 6, 1906, and that he is therefore not bound to equalize the advances of Randolph made after the said date. This claim appears to be well founded. On December 4, 1906, Randolph sent a letter to Lindsay containing a statement showing that he, Randolph, had advanced for the company to that date, under both agreements, a total sum of $69,812.87, and that Lindsay had advanced only $31,230, Randolph's excess being $38,582.87, and asking Lindsay to advance immediately as much to equalize them as he could spare, or to make a 12-months' note for the difference, so that the money could be raised on it for the company's use. He also said he was taking steps to procure the Cerro Colorado mine for the Llanos Company. On December 6, 1906, Lindsay answered by letter, saying, "I am not paying Llanos debts without some security and a plain, fair understanding with the stockholders. * * * I am surprised that you should assume to advance money on my account and without my consent. I am able to do my own advancing * * * Referring to the Sierra Colorado mine, would say, after your letter to-day, I do not care to go any further with the deal, or any other deal, without some thorough understanding." This was a repudiation of the agreement which Randolph claimed to exist and upon the faith of which he had been acting. It implied a denial of the making of such agreement, and it was, in effect, a refusal to be bound by it in the future. In his testimony Randolph refers to the letter of December 6th as a letter "repudiating all our arrangements." Randolph replied by letter on December 14, 1906, to the effect that he had been of the opinion that a kind of copartnership was developing between them, but that if Lindsay's idea of the relations between them was different, as his letter indicated, the various matters could be readily adjusted. There were no further negotiations between them on the subject and Lindsay did not thereafter consent to be bound for any further advancements.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

There is nothing in the evidence to explain the purpose for which the subsequent advances by Randolph were made, except his general statement that the money was expended by him in pursuance of the agreement of October, 1906, and for the benefit of the Llanos Company, and that in paying out the several sums he relied on the promise of Lindsay to reimburse him to the extent necessary to make their advances equal. If any of the subsequent advances were made on account of obligations incurred before Lindsay's repudiation of the agreement, or in the completion of enterprises or transactions begun before, and which could not be stopped or abandoned without substantial loss, perhaps Lindsay would be liable to Randolph for one-half thereof, under the agreement, notwithstanding his withdrawal therefrom. As to such matters, he could not withdraw without a rescission. No rescission is pleaded in the answer and the evidence does not show an attempt to rescind. But there was nothing in the agreement that bound Lindsay to continue its existence longer than he chose. He could terminate it any time and thereupon he would be exempt from liability for future advances by Randolph for new deals or transactions. It was for Randolph to prove, if he could, that the advances subsequent to December 6th were made on account of previous obligations or previous uncompleted transactions or enterprises. The evidence is silent on the subject. The finding, so far as these items are concerned, is not sustained by the evidence.

Inasmuch as there must be a new trial, we consider it unnecessary to discuss or determine the other questions presented. They may not arise upon a second trial, and the issues may be changed.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

---

158 Cal. 740

In re CHAPMAN'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,301.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 3, 1910.)

1. Executors and Administrators (§ 178*)—Rights of Widow—Monthly Allowances.

The court in probate proceedings ordered the payment of $40 a month to the widow as a family allowance, beginning March 6, 1907. The administratrix filed her final account on October 4, 1907, and on February 7, 1908, the court made a final order discontinuing the family allowance, after October 4, 1907, the date of the order settling the final account, and on October 9, 1908, the administratrix filed a supplemental account including an item for family allowance accruing from September 6, 1907, to October 6, 1908. Held, that the widow was entitled to the monthly allowance for the month ending October 6, 1907.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

2. Executors and Administrators (§ 510*)—Presumptions—Insufficiency of Record.

Where the record on appeal from orders settling an administratrix's supplemental final account and directing distribution does not contain the evidence upon which the court acted in discontinuing a family allowance to the widow after October 4, 1907, the date of the order settling the administratrix's final account, the Supreme Court will presume that the family allowance for the month ending October 6, 1907, to which the widow was legally entitled, was included in the final account settled on October 4, 1907.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 510.*]

3. Executors and Administrators (§ 194*)—Orders Appealable.

An order made by the court in probate proceedings after the administratrix's final account was settled, discontinuing a monthly family allowance to the widow, was appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 723; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

4. Executors and Administrators (§ 510*)—Presumptions.

Since under Code Civ. Proc. § 1704, orders in probate proceedings need not recite the existence of the facts upon which the jurisdiction to make them depends, where the order discontinuing a monthly allowance to a widow recited that it was made upon good cause, and the record on appeal from orders settling the administratrix's supplemental final account and directing distribution does not show whether notice was given the widow of the order discontinuing the allowance, the rule which presumes on collateral attack that the court had jurisdiction to make an order unless the contrary appears from the record, applies, so that the Supreme Court will presume that notice of such order was given the widow.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 510.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. B. Welch, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John Chapman, deceased. From orders settling the supplemental final account, and directing distribution of the estate, the widow appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Russell and E. L. Rhodes, for appellant. Henry French, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the widow of the deceased, who is also the administratrix of the estate, from orders settling the supplemental final account and directing distribution. The only ruling complained of is the refusal to allow credit in the supplemental account for the amount of the monthly family allowance which accrued during the period intervening between the date of the settlement of the final account filed with the petition for distribution and the date of the supplemental final account.

The deceased died on March 6, 1907, leaving surviving as heirs at law, besides his widow, a sister and the descendants of a deceased sister. The widow was duly appointed administratrix of his estate. On May 31, 1907, the court made an order for the payment of $40 a month to the widow, as a family allowance, beginning on March 6, 1907. On September 23, 1907, the administratrix filed her final account, and a petition for the distribution of the estate, alleging that the deceased left no children or surviving collateral relatives and that she, as his widow, was the only heir. On October 4, 1907, the final account was settled showing a balance of $2,741.95 for distribution, consisting entirely of money. The sister and descendants of the deceased sister appeared and contested the petition for distribution, and a delay of one year ensued before the matter of the contested heirship was decided. On February 7, 1908, the court made an order that the family allowance be discontinued from and after October 4, 1907, the date of the order settling the final account. On October 9, 1908, the widow, as administratrix, filed a supplemental account showing the expenditure of $73.52 in costs of administration and claiming credit for $520, on account of the family allowance accruing from September 6, 1907, to October 6, 1908. The order of October 9, 1908, appealed from, settled this account as presented, "with the exception of the item for family allowance," leaving a balance of $2,668.43 which was ordered distributed to the heirs.

On the facts as above stated it would appear that the widow was entitled, in any event, to the $40 for the month extending from September 6, 1907, to October 6, 1907. But, as no bill of exceptions showing the evidence upon which the court acted is presented, we must presume that the allowance for that month was included in the final account settled on October 4, 1907.

The appeal is based on the proposition that the order of February 7, 1908, discontinuing the family allowance from and after October 4, 1907, was absolutely void because the court had no power to make it. This contention is founded on the assertion that it was made ex parte, and without any notice to the widow. The record contains nothing to that effect. The order recites that it was made upon good cause, but neither the recital, nor anything else in the record before us, states anything at all on the question whether or not notice thereof was given. Orders in probate proceedings need not recite the existence of the facts upon which jurisdiction to make them depend. Code Civ. Proc. § 1704. The order was appealable and it has become final. The attack upon it was and is wholly collateral. The presumption in regard to such orders, upon such collateral attack, is the same as in other cases; the jurisdiction of the court to make them is presumed, unless the contrary appears from the record, or from competent evidence in a proper attack. Upon this record we must presume that the necessary notice was given, and that the order discontinuing the family allowance was valid and binding. That item was therefore properly rejected.

The orders are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

158 Cal. 731

POTRERO NUEVO LAND CO. v. ALL PERSONS CLAIMING ANY INTEREST IN OR LIEN UPON THE REAL PROPERTY HEREIN DESCRIBED, OR ANY PART THEREOF. (S. F. 5,130.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1910.)

1. Records (§ 18*)—Lost Records—Actions—Affidavits.

St. Ex. Sess. 1906, c. 59 (McEnerney act), creates a system of procedure to establish title to real property where the public records have been destroyed, requiring an affidavit to be attached to the complaint containing a full and explicit showing of the period during which plaintiff has enjoyed his estate, and concerning the person or persons "from whom obtained," etc. Held, that an affidavit merely declaring that the title to the property was conveyed by the state to P. in 1855, and by him through divers mesne conveyances to plaintiff who was the owner and holder thereof, and has been for the last 10 years or more, did not fully show how long plaintiff had owned and enjoyed the property, nor describe or characterize the person from whom the title was obtained.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-43; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. RECORDS (§ 18*) — POSSESSION — ACTION — LANDLORD AND TENANT—RELATION.

St. Ex. Sess. 1906, c. 59 (McEnerney act), creates a system of procedure to establish title to real property, where the public records have been destroyed, by any person who claims an estate of inheritance, or for life in, and who is by himself or other person, holding under him in actual or peaceable possession of any real property. Held that, where certain land in controversy was granted to the city of San Francisco for 99 years by Act March 26, 1851 (St. 1851, c. 41), and thereafter the state's reversion in fee was conveyed to plaintiff's prior grantor subject to the remainder of the 99-year term as authorized by Act May 18, 1853 (St. 1853, c. 160), plaintiff held such an estate in the land as entitled him to sue to establish his title, though the technical relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between plaintiff and those in possession holding under the term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-43; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Melvin, Henshaw, and Lorigan, JJ., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Potrero Nuevo Land Company against all persons claiming any interest in or lien on certain lands described in the complaint. From a judgment dismissing the complaint, plaintiff appealed. The judgment was reversed in department, after which a rehearing was had in bank, where the department's opinion was disproved, and the judgment affirmed.

See, also, 155 Cal. 371, 101 Pac. 12.

The following is the opinion in department of Melvin, J. (concurred in by Henshaw and Lorigan, JJ.):

"An action was commenced under the so-called McEnerney act to establish plaintiff's title to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco; to determine adverse claims to said realty; and for general relief. Upon motion the complaint was dismissed, and this appeal is taken from the order of dismissal. The grounds of the motion were: First, that the estate claimed by plaintiff is not an estate for the establishment of title to which an action of this kind may be brought; second, that plaintiff does not appear to be in the actual and peaceable possession by itself or its tenants holding under it, of the premises to which plaintiff seeks to establish its title; third, that the affidavit of plaintiff does not set forth or show when or from whom the Potrero Nuevo Land Company acquired its title to the described premises. The asserted title of plaintiff derived by mesne conveyances from one John Bensley was to an estate of inheritance in certain 'Beach and Water Lots,' the complaint alleging that the corporation plaintiff succeeded to such title after its sale by commissioners to Bensley under the act of May 18, 1853, and the supplemental statute of May 1, 1855.

"By the act of March 26, 1851 (St. 1851, p. 307), the state granted to the city of San Francisco the 'use and occupation' of certain 'Beach and Water Lots' for a period of 99 years from and after the passage of the act. By a subsequent statute of May 18, 1853 (St. 1853, p. 219), it was provided that commissioners to be appointed by the Governor should sell the remaining interest of the state in these lots 'after the expiration of the estate or term granted or mentioned' in said act of March 26, 1851. The act of 1855 (St. 1855, c. 181) wrought a change in the personnel of the board of commissioners. Plaintiff asserts title to the fee formerly held by the state subject to the tenancy for 99 years of the city and those deriving title under it. Defendants claim the right to the 'use and occupation' of various parcels of the property founded upon the act of 1851, and some of them also declare that they hold their portions of the land in fee.

"The lower court in granting the motion to dismiss held that, while plaintiff's estate was one of inheritance, it could not maintain the suit; that in addition to such an interest it must be in the actual and peaceable possession of the property; that the grantees of the city are not tenants of the state nor grantees of the state; and that, as no one will have possession under the reversionary right of the state until 1950, the plaintiff cannot now be in occupation of the property by its tenants or otherwise.

"We find ourselves unable to agree with these conclusions. The state having disposed of the fee, subject to the use and occupation for 99 years, its grantees or their ultimate successors in interest occupy the exact position of ownership formerly held by the state. Undoubtedly, the city and its successors to the estate for years hold the property subject to this reversionary interest. It makes no difference that their term is a very long one. They hold the land subject to the title in fee, precisely as they would possess it under a lease for a year or any other short term, because an estate for years is a leasehold interest, and is personal property. Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 352, 45 Pac. 680; Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 142 Cal. 529, 76 Pac. 243. To be sure there was no contract of rental between plaintiff and defendant, but the sale of the term for years under the act of March 26, 1851, was in itself a contract of rental, and the state (the landlord) was entitled under the act to 25 per cent. of the money realized from such sale; but aside from this the relation of landlord and tenant may arise without rent reserved. Taylor in his work on Landlord and Tenant, § 14, says: 'The relation of landlord and tenant subsists by virtue of a contract express or implied, between two or more persons for the possession of lands or tenements.' And Martindale on Conveyancing, § 293, says: 'The relation of landlord and tenant may arise by implication or by the act or operation of law.' Section 1 of the McEnerney act provides that, 'Any person who claims an estate of inheritance or for life in, and who is by himself or his tenant or other person holding under him in the actual or peaceable possession of any real property' may bring an action of this kind. St. Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 78. We see no logical escape from the doctrine that the relation of landlord and tenant exists; that the possession of the latter is that of the former; and that appellant has the right to maintain this action.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"There is no merit in respondents' contention that the motion to dismiss was properly granted because appellant failed to disclose by its affidavit fully and explicitly 'the character of his estate, right, title, interest or claim in, and possession of property, during what period the same has existed and from whom obtained.' Section 5, McEnerney Act. The affidavit did show 'that said title to said property was sold and conveyed by the state of California to one John Bensley in 1855, and by him, through divers mesne conveyances, conveyed to said plaintiff, who is now the owner and holder thereof, and has been for the last ten years.' This, we think, was amply sufficient for the purposes of the remedial act here considered.

"The order from which this appeal is taken is reversed."

A. Everett Ball, for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Knight, C. Irving Wright, Thomas, Gerstle, Frick & Beedy, Stoney, Rouleau & Stoney, and F. J. Castelhun, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Appellant brought its action under the McEnerney act to establish its title to certain beach and water lots in the city and county of San Francisco. By the act of March 26, 1851, the Legislature granted to the city of San Francisco the use and occupation of said land for the term of 99 years from the date of the act. Under the statute of May 18, 1853 (St. 1853, p. 219), commissioners were appointed who should sell, and did sell, the remaining interest of the state in these lots "after the expiration of the estate or term granted or mentioned in the act of 1851." Plaintiff is the purchaser of the fee disposed of by the state in subordination to the 99-year term, tenancy or estate, and will not be entitled to actual possession as contradistinguished from any constructive possession, through the tenants of the 99-year term, until March 26, 1950. The court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint and dismissed the action. Plaintiff appeals, and there are presented for consideration two questions: (1) Whether under the facts stated plaintiff had a possession sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the McEnerney act (Lofstad v. Murasky, 152 Cal. 64, 91 Pac. 1008), and so to entitle it to prosecute this action; and (2) whether the affidavit required to be filed with the complaint satisfies the act, which exacts that such affidavit shall fully and explicitly set forth "the character of his (plaintiff's) estate, right, title, interest or claim in and possession of the property during what period the same has existed and from whom obtained."

The McEnerney act was emergency legislation, containing certain novel features. It is not, of course, to be condemned for these reasons, but they are sufficient to demand of the court scrupulous care in considering the provisions when the provisions themselves are attacked, or request is made that construction should be given to them. For these reasons a rehearing was granted from the department decision.

1. A fundamental provision of the act is that it is available only to such person as "by himself or his tenant or any other person holding under him is in the actual and peaceable possession of the land." Can it be said that the relation of landlord and tenant, within the meaning of the McEnerney act, exists between the owner of the reversionary fee and the owner of the 99-year term? In the very broadest acceptation of the meaning of the phrase "landlord and tenant" that relationship may be said to exist. But the question is whether it exists within the purview of the act. Thus Smith in "Landlord and Tenant," after mention of the fact that under the common law every one is a tenant, since there is no allodial property, proceeds as follows: "I need not, however, tell you who must be all familiar with the use of those terms, that when we speak of 'landlord and tenant,' even among lawyers, we use these words in a much narrower sense than that which I have just described. For instance, when we use the words 'landlord and tenant' we do not mean to express the species of relation which subsists between the sovereign and a subject, for instance, the Duke of Wellington, who holds his estates of her Majesty by the service of presenting yearly a banner in lieu of all other rents and services; nor do we, I think, ever intend to express the sort of relation that exists between the reversioner and the particular tenants under a settlement where no rent is reserved or any service rendered, although a tenancy doubtless exists between them. For instance, if I convey lands to A. in tail, keeping the reversion myself, there is no doubt that A. becomes my tenant, though I reserve not a sixpence of rent, nor ask for any covenant on his part to perform any of the ordinary duties of a tenant, and though he might destroy my interest the next day if so minded. But though, as I have said, he is my tenant in strict law, this is not the sort of tenancy we mean when we use the words 'landlord and tenant.' It is very difficult to express in terms the precise idea which we attribute to those words. But I think I am not far wrong in saying that, when we speak of 'landlord and tenant' we have the notion in our minds of a tenancy limited in point of duration within some bounds not so extensive as to render the landlord's interest practically worthless and accompanied by some remunerating incidents to the reversion, such as a rent, or at all events a fine in lieu of one, and also by certain obligations such as covenants, or, where the tenancy is not evidenced by some instrument under seal, agreements for the performance of the duties usually required from persons taking the description of property demised; and as these are the sort of tenancies which give rise to the great mass of practical questions involved in the law of landlord and tenant, it is to these that I intend almost exclusively to direct my remarks." And, says Washburn (Real Property [4th Ed.] 315): "This relation of landlord and tenant does not embrace that between sovereign and subject, nor between the reversioner and him who enjoys the particular estate on which the reversion depends, where no rent is reserved, although a kind of tenancy subsists between them."

A consideration of the acts of the Legislature in disposing of these beach and water lots and of the decisions of this court in relation thereto make plain, we think, the fact that the relation of landlord and tenant in its true sense, even as used "among lawyers" does not exist. By the act of 1851 the state granted the use and occupation of these lands to the city and county of San Francisco for the term of 99 years, with authorization to the city to sell and dispose of its holdings, requiring only that, upon so doing, it should pay into the state treasury 25 per cent. of the moneys received from such sales. Clearly in this there was no design of establishing between the state and the city the relation of landlord and tenant, and less design than that relation should exist between the state and any person to whom the city in turn might convey its interest. The subsequent act of 1853 merely empowered commissioners to sell the state's interest at public auction. And still less apparent is any intent or design to create such a relationship by substitution of the purchaser at the auction for the state of California. In Holladay v. Frisbie, 15 Cal. 635, a creditor of the city had attached the city's interest in certain beach and water lots, and the question arose as to how the city's title to the 99-year term was affected by the provision that it should pay one-fourth of the proceeds of the property to the state. It was declared that this provision created a mere contractual obligation upon the part of the city, and was not a condition to the grant, and that "the interest of the city in the beach and water lot property is a legal estate for ninety-nine years." Such a decision is foreign to the conception that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the state and the city. It is concluded, therefore, that the relation of landlord and tenant, within the meaning of the McEnerney act, does not exist between the holder of the reversionary fee and the holder of the 99-year term in the beach and water lots of the city and county of San Francisco. And as the McEnerney act contemplates "actual possession" either by plaintiff, by his tenant, or by some person holding under him, and as plaintiff's possession is based wholly upon that of his asserted tenant for years, since such tenancy does not exist, it necessarily follows that plaintiff does not come within the purview of the act, and is not entitled, therefore, to maintain this action.

2. The affidavit accompanying the complaint in this instance declared merely "that said title to said property was sold and conveyed by the state of California to one John Bensley in 1855, and by him through divers mesne conveyances conveyed to said plaintiff, who is now the owner and holder thereof and has been for the last ten years and more." A requirement of a full and explicit showing of the period during which a plaintiff has enjoyed his estate, and a full and explicit showing of the person or persons "from whom obtained" is not met by the affidavit here presented. To say that one has owned an estate for 10 years and more is not fully and explicitly showing how long in fact he has owned and enjoyed it. And a statement that one acquired title by "divers mesne conveyances" from one John Bensley, to whom the state conveyed the property in 1855, is not a full and explicit showing, description or characterization of the person "from whom obtained." The provision of the statute requiring a full and complete statement in these particulars is manifestly designed for the benefit of the defendants, in enabling them, by verifying plaintiff's claim, to prevent fraud and safeguard their own rights. For these reasons a full and fair compliance with the provisions is a just exaction from every plaintiff.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

I concur: LORIGAN, J.

SHAW, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment solely on the ground that the affidavit accompanying the complaint is defective as stated in the second part of the foregoing opinion.

Upon the question first considered in the opinion, I am unable to agree with the conclusion there reached. The act is entitled: "An act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of the loss or destruction of public records." The first section limits its application to instances where the public records of titles have been lost or destroyed by "flood, fire, or earthquake." Section 18 limits its application, in point of time, to proceedings begun under it before July 1, 1909, afterwards extended to January 1, 1911. It is well known that it was enacted to enable persons owning lands in San Francisco, where all the public records had been destroyed by the great fire of April, 1906, to obtain title of record, which would serve as a substitute for the destroyed record of the instruments on which the title depended. By its precise terms, a part only of which is quoted in the foregoing opinion, it declares that the relief provided therein may be obtained by "any person who claims an estate of inheritance, or for life in, and who is by himself or his tenant, or other person, holding under him, in the actual and peaceable possession of any real property" in the county. I agree that the procedure prescribed in the act should be followed closely. But with respect to the persons who may obtain its benefits, I believe that it should receive a broad and liberal construction, one that would include every person who might be benefited by the relief provided, rather than one which would exclude any such person or class of persons. The above language makes it applicable to the case of any person who claims an estate of inheritance and who, by himself or by another holding under him, is in actual and peaceable possession. The relation of landlord and tenant, in its narrow meaning, is not essential. One may be in actual possession by another holding under him, without that other person being his tenant in the ordinary sense and without the technical relation of landlord and tenant existing between them. One who holds a particular estate for years by grant, is, by a very common use of language, said to be holding under his grantor, although there is no obligation to pay rent in any form. In like manner, he would be holding under the grantee of the remainder. Such remainderman would be entitled to take advantage of the act to establish a record title to the remainder. If this were not so, then every landowner who may have conveyed to another an estate for years running beyond the time to which the act is extended, and who has not reserved any rent in the conveyance, is deprived of the benefits of the act.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

MELVIN, J. (dissenting). I dissent and adhere to the department opinion previously prepared by me.

158 Cal. 702

SMITH v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

(L. A. 2,240.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1910. On Rehearing, Dec. 31, 1910.)

1. TAXATION (§ 421*)—ASSESSMENT—VALIDITY —NONCOMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

An assessment is void which does not conform to Pol. Code, § 3650, requiring land to be listed by the assessor by township, range, section, or fractional section, and when it is not a congressional division or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it, giving an estimate of the number of acres, not exceeding 640 acres in each tract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 720-735; Dec. Dig. § 421.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 24*)—SURVEY.

Rev. St. § 2395 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1471) requires public lands to be divided by north and south meridian lines, and by others crossing them at right angles so as to form townships of six miles square, and requires the townships to be subdivided into sections containing 640 acres each, by running each way parallel lines at the end of every two miles and by marking on each of such lines at the end of every mile, requires the sections to be numbered from 1 to 36 respectively, and also requires the plat to be made of the township and the fractional part thereof, and the subdivisions thereof. Held that, even after a principal meridian and a base line are established and the exterior lines of the township surveyed, the sections or subsections do not have a legal existence, until they are established by an approved survey under authority of Congress.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 31, 32; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 421*)—ASSESSMENT—IDENTIFICATION OF LAND ASSESSED—SUFFICIENCY OF ASSESSOR'S MAP.

Pol. Code, § 3658, requires the board of supervisors to furnish the assessor with maps, plat books, etc., for the use of his office which shall show the private land owned in the county, and, if surveyed under the authority of the United States, the divisions and subdivisions thereof. Section 3634 provides that if the owner fails to make a statement when requested, describing his land in parcels and subdivisions, the assessor may obtain an order for the survey of such land, defining the subdivisions. Section 3654 requires the map, books, etc., to be returned to the county assessor's office and kept there for future reference after delivery to the clerk of the board of supervisors for equalizing assessments, and provides that in the meantime the map, books, etc., must be left in his office for the inspection of persons interested. Section 3650 requires land to be listed by the assessor by township, range, section, or fractional section, and when it is not a congressional division or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it. The assessor's map of land assessed, which was a part of a ranch, shows the outlines of only a part of the ranch, which were crossed by north and south and east and west lines, dividing the part platted into equal sections inside such outlines and into fractional sections adjacent to the exterior boundaries thereof, but such sectional lines were not founded on a survey by the owner, assessor, or otherwise, nor did it appear that they corresponded with the section lines outside the ranch, or to be located by any visible mark, being merely arbitrary lines drawn thereon, but the number of acres inclosed within some of the lines were marked on the map. Held, that the assessor's map did not identify the land assessed by sectional lines, metes or bounds, or otherwise, the sectional lines shown not representing an actual survey; and hence the assessment was void.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 720-735; Dec. Dig. § 421.*]

4. Taxation (§ 810*) — Action—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an action to quiet title to realty based upon title under a tax sale, evidence held to sustain a finding that the property assessed was not sufficiently identified by extrinsic evidence to enable the owner to determine from an inspection of the map what part of his land was attempted to be assessed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 810.*]

5. Taxation (§ 805*) — Sale — Redemption—Limitation.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 315, prohibiting a suit by the people in respect to realty by reason of the right or title of the people thereto, unless such right or title accrued within 10 years before the action was begun, an action against a city to quiet title to land, claimed to have been sold under a void tax sale, was not void where less than five years had elapsed from the date of the sale to the state up to the commencement of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 805.*]

6. Taxation (§ 627*) — Assessment—Irregularities—Effect.

Under Pol. Code, § 3885, providing that no assessment or act relating to the assessment or collection of taxes shall be illegal for informality, or because it was not completed within the time required by law, a sale of land for taxes was not invalid because the delinquent tax list was published one day after the date required by section 3764, or because a statement attached to the published delinquent list was not verified by affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1280; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

7. Taxation (§ 627*)—Sale—Invalidity.

That the delinquent list did not comply with the form prescribed by Pol. Code, § 3764, did not render the tax sale invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1280; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. H. Smith against the City of Los Angeles and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. S. McKelvey and Smith, Miller & Phelps, for appellant. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., and Emmet H. Wilson, Chief Deputy City Atty., for respondent city. J. W. McKinley, for respondent Griffiths.

PER CURIAM. The decision of the District Court of Appeal for the Second district, in this cause, was vacated and the cause transferred to this court, mainly for the purpose of further considering the sufficiency of the assessor's map, made under the provisions of section 3658 of the Political Code, as a means of identification to supply the defects in the descriptions of land in the assessment and the tax deeds. The trial court found that it was not sufficient and we are satisfied that we cannot disturb that finding. The opinion of Justice Allen, in the District Court of Appeal, is appended hereto and adopted as the opinion of this court.

Concerning the assessor's map we add the following: The section provides that the board of supervisors "must provide and furnish the assessor with the proper books, blanks, maps and plat-books for the use of his office. Such maps and plat-books shall show the private lands owned or claimed in the county, and if surveyed under the authority of the United States, the divisions and subdivisions thereof, with their acreage, according to such survey; if held under Spanish grant, the exterior boundaries of such grants, the divisions and subdivisions, and number of acres claimed." It also provides that the state board of equalization "may require such map and plat-books to be indexed to show owner's names, give correct description for assessment, show improvements and assessed value."

There is no evidence nor claim that the state board ever required any of these things. The copy of the map contained in the transcript shows that it does not comply with such requirements, if they were made, except that the number of acres inclosed by some of the lines marked thereon are indicated by figures followed by the letter "A." The map shows the outlines of a part of the Rancho Los Feliz, but not all of it. These are crossed by north and south lines and east and west lines, dividing the portion platted into squares of equal size inside and fractional parts of squares next to the exterior bounds. There is no evidence that these lines are founded on any survey or that the rancho was ever surveyed and subdivided into lots corresponding to these squares by the owner, or by the assessor, or at all. Section 3629 of said Code authorizes the assessor to exact a statement from each landowner containing an exact description of his lands in parcels and subdivisions, not exceeding 640 acres each. Section 3634 provides that if the owner fails to do this, or fails to give a sufficient description, the assessor may obtain from the superior court an order requiring the county surveyor to survey the land and define the subdivisions for the assessor. There is no evidence that this was done or that the assessor's map represents any such survey. The maps and plat books provided for by section 3654 were not intended to represent any actual survey or surveys. The owners are not consulted in their preparation nor allowed any opportunity to see that they are correct, and they are not binding upon him. They are mere compilations embracing the entire county made under the direction of the board of supervisors, or by the assessor, upon such information as may be at hand. They are designed merely to facilitate the business of the office, as a convenient exhibition of all the lands in the county to which the officers can refer in the daily routine of business. It is not shown that the subdivisions indicated on the map by the parallel lines have ever been marked on the ground, or that they coincide with the section lines outside the rancho, or that they can be located by any visible marks or monuments or at all. They are mere arbitrary lines drawn on paper in some office without any reference whatever to actual conditions on the premises. Some one has copied a part of the map of the rancho attached to the record of the patent, and has drawn these lines across his copy, so as to make a picture such as might be shown by a map of a part of the congressional townships in which the rancho lies, if such townships had ever been surveyed, subdivided, and mapped through said rancho. As a matter of fact, they never were so surveyed. The picture has no counterpart on the surface of the land. It cannot serve to identify the land, for the location of the tracts indicated cannot be ascertained.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Opinion of the District Court of Appeal.

The action was one instituted by plaintiff against defendants to quiet title to certain described real estate, plaintiff's title resting upon sales of the premises on account of the nonpayment of delinquent taxes, the validity of which is the sole matter in controversy.

The court finds that plaintiff had no right, title, or interest in said property, and rendered judgment against plaintiff for costs. From this judgment, plaintiff appeals upon a bill of exceptions.

The facts as presented by the record are these: The Rancho Los Feliz was granted by the Mexican government in 1843 to one Verdugo, which grant in 1854 was by the land commissioners confirmed, and upon appeal from such confirmation the District Court of the United States for the Southern district of California, in its December term in 1856, affirmed the decree of said commissioners to the extent of 1½ leagues, the exterior boundaries whereof were defined by the record of juridical possession on file in said case, and the title of said Verdugo was decreed good and valid. Thereafter, in 1871, a patent was issued by the government of the United States to the said Verdugo to the premises so included in said grant and subsequently confirmed, which patent certified that a plat and survey of said lands had been deposited in the general land office, whereby it appears that said claim had been designated as lot No. 38, in township 1, north of range 13 west, lot No. 38 in township 1, north of range 14 west, lot No. 38 in township 1, south of range 13 west, and lot No. 37 in township 1, south of range 14 west, San Bernardino meridian, containing 6,647.46 acres of land. A copy of such plat and survey was attached to such patent and made part thereof. An examination of such plat shows that the lots No. 38 north of the base line, and being the portion of the rancho in which is situated the property in dispute, were not surveyed or divided into sections. The only lines of survey marked thereon affecting the property in controversy being the base line, a line marking the southerly boundary of sections 13 and 14, a line extending southerly from the southerly line of sections 13 and 14 along the westerly line of rancho to a point at and below the southerly limit, and the township line extending north and south dividing township 13 west from township 14 west. No lines marked or corners appear on the map indicating any survey of east and west lines through any of the territory lying between the base line and the southerly line of sections 13 and 14, which, if the sections were full, would be a distance of three miles. It is true that there appears upon the profile in that portion marked "lot 38" in township 14 west in the southerly part thereof, the word and figures "section 36," and near the center thereof "section 25," and north of the northerly line of the rancho the word and figures marked "section 24," but nothing appears as indicating the dividing line between the respective sections. Again, lot 38 in township 1, north of range 13 west, which extends from the base line northerly at least 2½ miles, and is almost equal in width with the other lot 38, has only one section marked thereon, being designated "section 31," the area of which it is obvious from the profile must exceed in extent two congressional sections. It further appears from the record that under these conditions the lands in question were by the assessor listed for taxation, and described in such assessment and in all proceedings thereafter leading up to and including the deeds to plaintiff as "Ro Los Feliz, 265 acs. being fractional sec. 24 T. 1. N. R. 14, W." in one deed, and in the other deed, "Ro Los Feliz 599 acs. being fractional sec. 25, T. 1. N. R. 14 W." there having been a separate deed for each parcel. The taxpayer named in the assessment owned at the time thereof the whole of the Los Feliz rancho. After the assessment for taxation, the taxpayer conveyed a large part of such rancho, including the premises in controversy, to defendant city, the same to be used for park purposes, which conveyance was made March 5, 1898, and the defendant city has ever since been in possession thereof, claiming ownership and making improvements thereon. The attempted sales to the state, on account of delinquent taxes, were made on July 2, 1898, and the time for redemption expired July 3, 1903. No redemption being made, the state sold the property to plaintiff on June 30, 1905. This action was commenced January 3, 1907, and the judgment herein rendered January 7, 1908.

The principal question involved upon this appeal is, Was the land assessed for the purpose of taxation under a description sufficient for its identification? Section 3650 of the Political Code of this state provides that property shall be listed by the assessor in accordance with the following method: Land, by township, range, section, or fractional section, and when such land is not a congressional division or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it, giving an estimate of the number of acres, not exceeding in each and every tract 640 acres. Any assessment not in conformity with this section is wholly void. Palomares Land Company v. Los Angeles County, 146 Cal. 536, 80 Pac. 931.

It is insisted by appellant, that, fairly considered, the map and profile attached to the patent literally divided these premises into congressional subdivisions, and therefore the description in the assessment is technically correct. With this we cannot agree. Assuming that, notwithstanding the particular description in the decree of confirmation, the record of juridical possession on file in said case and the intendments in favor of every judgment, section 8 of the act of July 23, 1866 (Zabriske's Land Laws of the United States, page 571), and not sections 6 and 7 of the act of 1864, apply to this grant, and that it was the duty of the Surveyor General to cause the lines of the public surveys to be extended through such lands, nevertheless, we think it clear from the plat and profile that such survey as provided by the act of 1866 was never in fact made.

Section 2395, Rev. St. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1471) provides: "The public lands shall be divided by north and south lines run according to the true meridian, and by others crossing them at right angles so as to form townships of six miles square. * * * Third. The township shall be subdivided into sections containing as nearly as may be 640 acres each, by running through the same each way parallel lines at the end of every two miles; and by marking on each of such lines at the end of every mile. The sections shall be numbered respectively, beginning with the No. 1 in the northeast sections and proceeding west and east alternately through the township with progressive numbers until the 36 be completed. * * * Eighth. * * * He shall also cause a fair plat to be made of the townships and fractional parts of townships contained in the lands described, the subdivisions thereof, and the mark of the corner."

It is said by our Supreme Court in Bullock v. Rouse, 81 Cal. 594, 22 Pac. 920: "Even after a principal meridian and a base line have been established, and the exterior lines of the township have been surveyed, neither the sections nor their subdivisions can be said to have any existence until the township is divided into sections and quarter sections by an approved survey. The lines are not ascertained by the surveyor, but they are created. * * * The tract has no separate legal identity until the survey is made and approved under the authority of Congress."

Appellant further contends that, conceding that no such division into congressional subdivisions was ever had, nevertheless, it was competent to show by evidence aliunde facts from which the identity of the land assessed could be determined, and accordingly offered in evidence a map prepared for the assessor under the provisions of section 3658, Political Code, from which map it appears that the Los Feliz rancho is divided into sections not in conformity with the plat attached to the patent, but by arbitrary lines, and not by fixed congressional districts, and it is claimed that this map identifies the lands assessed beyond the possibility of question. This map is not recorded. There is no provision of law for its record, and it purports upon its face to create for the purposes of assessment that which does not in fact exist. The rule laid down in Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 737, 78 Pac. 293, is that evidence may be received for the purpose of showing the sufficiency of identification, and whether the description of the land is sufficient to identify it, is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence presented on that issue; that parol proof may be resorted to for the purpose of applying the terms of the description to the face of the earth but no further, and that it cannot supply any deficiencies in the metes and bounds. Applying this rule, the assessor's map could not be placed upon the surface of the ground for the purpose of identifying sections which did not in fact exist. It is not possible to make a description of a tract clear and definite when such tract has no description of the kind and character sought to be defined. The assessor's map could not create a congressional subdivision, and it contains nothing which would establish the identity of the tract or parcel of land sought to be assessed, either by metes and bounds or other descriptive statements designating the property, so that the part of the Los Feliz rancho sought to be charged with the tax could be ascertained—a necessary thing in proceedings to enforce the collection of a tax Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 657, 40 Pac. 1042.

The trial court impliedly found that this extrinsic evidence offered did not so identify the property sufficiently to enable the owner to determine from any inspection of it what part of his land was so sought to be assessed, and we think this finding of fact should not be disturbed. The trial court further found that the defendant city had been in the quiet and peaceable possession of all the real property described in the said amended complaint, and hereinbefore described, holding and claiming it adverse to plaintiff and adverse to all other persons for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action. We think this finding and the fact upon which it is based is insufficient to establish a prescriptive title in the defendant. Were it conceded that the state acquired a title thereto by the tax proceedings in the deed of the sale for delinquent taxes, as against the state the period of the bar, "section 315, Code Civ. Proc.," is 10 years, and as against the plaintiff five years from the period of the acquisition of title, less than five years elapsing from the date of the sale to the state up to the commencement of the action, we think there is no merit in the claim of prescriptive title alone as supporting the judgment. Wilhoit v. Tubbs, 83 Cal. 287, 23 Pac. 386.

Respondent further criticises the proceedings of the officers in and about the assessment and sale of the property in that the delinquent tax list was sought to have been published on the 6th day of June, 1898, a day succeeding the time when the publication is required by section 3764, Political Code. We think this contention is answered in the case of Buswell v. Supervisors, 116 Cal. 354, 48 Pac. 227, where it is said "that the provisions as to the time upon which or within which acts are to be done by a public officer, regarding the rights and duties of others, are directory unless the nature of the act or language of the Legislature makes it clear that the time fixed is by way of limitation," in support of which, section 3885 of the Political Code is cited, which section provided that "no assessment or act relating to assessment or collection of taxes is illegal on account of informality or because the same was not completed within the time required by law." This section, we think, applies as well to the criticisms made on account of the fact that the statement attached to the published delinquent list was not sworn to; that is to say, there was no affidavit attached showing its verification.

The point made by respondent as to the form of the tax collector's deed has been made and disposed of by the decision in Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 Pac. 936.

Respondent presents no authority in support of its proposition that the sale was invalid, by reason of the fact that the delinquent list did not comply with the form required by section 3764, Political Code. This question, we think, has been disposed of in the case of Carter v. Osborn, 150 Cal. 620, 89 Pac. 608.

As a summary, therefore, we are of opinion that for the reason that the property was not assessed by a description sufficient for identification, the assessment and all proceedings thereunder were void, and that plaintiff was not shown to have any title or interest in the property, and the finding of the trial court in that regard must be sustained.

BEATTY, C. J., not participating.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). I have always been of the opinion that the property involved in this action was sufficiently described in the assessment, and but for the fact that I was absent at the time the opinion of the court was filed, I should have expressed my dissent at that time.

The denial of the petition of plaintiff for a rehearing enables me to record my dissent.

---

14 Cal. App. 393

WITTER v. REDWINE. (Civ. 749.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 29, 1910.)

1. New Trial (§ 163*)—Order—Operation.

Where an order granting a new trial does not specify the particular ground on which it is based, it will be affirmed if it can be justified on any of the grounds urged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 330–332; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

2. New Trial (§ 68*)—Appeal and Error (§ 979*) — Grounds — Insufficiency of Evidence.

The granting or denying of a motion for a new trial because the verdict is contrary to the evidence is largely within the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be reversed, unless its discretion has been abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 68;* Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3871–3873; Dec. Dig. § 979.*]

3. New Trial (§ 70*) — Insufficiency of Evidence—Review.

Where a new trial was demanded on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a verdict and that the verdict was contrary thereto, the trial court could not rest on a conflict in the evidence, but must weigh the evidence, and if the judge is not satisfied with the verdict and is convinced that it is clearly against the weight of the evidence, it is his duty to set it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 142–148; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by Von B. Witter against Georgia Redwine. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial after verdict for defendant, she appeals. Affirmed.

T. J. Butts, for appellant. Lucien Fulweider, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover money claimed to have been loaned by plaintiff to defendant. A general verdict was rendered by a jury in favor of defendant, and a motion by plaintiff for a new trial was granted by the trial court. From this order the defendant has appealed. The motion was based upon several grounds, among which was specified the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. The order of the trial court was as follows: "This cause is before the court on a motion for a new trial on the grounds of newly discovered evidence and insufficiency of evidence, etc. The court is of the opinion that a new trial should be granted, and it is so ordered."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The court, as will be observed, did not specify the particular ground upon which the order was based, and it is therefore indisputable that said order must be affirmed, if it can be justified upon any of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was made. There can be no doubt that the order of the court may be justified upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. The rule, as to this, is stated in People v. Flood, 102 Cal. 332, 36 Pac. 663, as follows: "If one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial is that it is contrary to evidence, and the order does not specify the ground upon which the new trial is granted, it must be held that, if there is any ground upon which it can be sustained, it must be affirmed; and that, as the granting or denying a motion for a new trial upon the ground that the decision or verdict was contrary to evidence is largely within the discretion of the trial court, its action will not be reversed, unless its discretion in this respect has been abused, whether this be the only ground upon which the motion is made, or one of the several statutory grounds."

It is equally clear that we cannot say that the court below abused its discretion in granting the motion for a new trial. This follows from the consideration that the evidence was conflicting, and we must assume that the showing made by the parties carried conviction to the mind of the trial judge that the verdict was wrong. Holding to this belief, it was the duty of the trial court to grant the motion for a new trial. Appellant admits that "there is a direct conflict between the testimony of the plaintiff and the testimony of the defendant," but she contends that "the jury were the sole judges of the facts and of the credibility of the witnesses, and they observed them and their manner of testifying, and where there is a substantial conflict of the testimony, the verdict should not be disturbed, as the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the defendant." She has, however, entirely mistaken the rule by which the trial court is governed in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence on a motion for a new trial. The question has been recently discussed by this court in the case of Kramm v. Stockton Electric Railroad Company, 10 Cal. App. 271, 101 Pac. 914, and therein it is held, in accordance with the statement of the rule by the Supreme Court in various cases, that "the trial court cannot rest upon a conflict in the evidence, but must weigh and consider the evidence for both parties, and determine for itself the just conclusion to be drawn from it. If the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, and is convinced that it is clearly against the weight of the evidence, it is his duty to set it aside, even though there may have been some conflict in the testimony." While we are not in a position to pass upon the veracity of the witnesses and do not undertake to do so, we can readily understand how the trial court, exercising a just and wise discretion, may have reached the conclusion, from observing the manner of said witnesses and the apparent probability of their statements, that the plaintiff's testimony was true and that he would be greatly wronged if the verdict were permitted to stand.

There was a sufficient specification of the insufficiency of the evidence, and, as the action of the court upon this ground was warranted and decisive of the controversy, the other questions incidentally discussed by counsel need not be considered.

The order granting the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

158 Cal. 711

MILLSAP v. BALFOUR. (Sac. 1,797.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1097*)—Former Decisions—Law of the Case.

Plaintiff having sued to foreclose a street assessment lien for laying sidewalks, defendant demurred to the complaint, and on appeal from an order sustaining the demurrer the Supreme Court reversed the decision, holding that lots on one side of the street might be lawfully assessed to pay the cost of a sidewalk laid on the opposite side, where it was not shown that a sidewalk had already been laid in front of such lots on the side on which they abutted, when the proceeding was instituted for the walk on the opposite side. Held that, it not appearing at the time of such decision that defendant had constructed a walk on his side, such decision on appeal was not the law of the case on a subsequent appeal from judgments enforcing a lien against defendant's lots after a trial on the merits, on which it appeared that defendant had previously constructed a sidewalk in front of his lots, under the rule that a prior decision is the law of the case only so far as the facts are the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4358-4361; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 428*)—Street Improvements—Sidewalks—Assessment — Construction of Work by Property Owners—Assessment for Work on Opposite Side of Street.

Deering's Gen. Laws 1909, p. 1290, § 7, subd. 1, relating to municipal improvements, provides that the expenses incurred shall be assessed on the lots and land fronting thereon except as otherwise specifically provided. Subdivision 8 declares that where work with certain exceptions is done on either or both sides of the center line of any street for a block or less, and further work opposite to the work of the same class already done is ordered to complete the unimproved portion of the street, the assessments to cover the total expense of the work so ordered shall be made on the lots or portions of lots only "fronting" the portions of the work so ordered. Subdivision 10 declares that, when the owner of any lots or land fronting on any street shall have done the work in front of his lot at his own expense, such work will be excepted from the order for the work, and subdivision 11 declares that the lots or portions of lots fronting upon any excepted work already done shall not be included in the frontage assessment for the class of work from which the assessment is made. Held that, where an owner of land on one side of a street on which sidewalks were to be constructed on both sides constructed sidewalks in accordance with the specifications in front of his own property, such property was not subject to assessment for any part of the cost of constructing walks on the other side of the street in front thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 428.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; N. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by Wirt Millsap against Douglass Balfour. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 154 Cal. 303, 97 Pac. 668.

Hudson Grant, for appellant. E. B. Mering, City Atty., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment foreclosing the lien of a street assessment made under the act commonly known as the "Vrooman Act." St. 1885, c. 153. The work for which the assessment was levied was the laying of a concrete cement sidewalk five feet wide along the south side of Clover street in the city of Woodland from Westcott street to Walnut street, a distance of six blocks, excepting the portions thereof where concrete cement sidewalks had already been constructed and accepted. Balfour owned a lot abutting Clover street on the north side, fronting thereon for a distance of 186 feet, situated on the northwest corner of First and Clover streets, opposite a part of one of the blocks included in the improvement ordered. The work was ordered by resolution adopted on January 21, 1907. Prior to that date Balfour, at his own expense, had laid a concrete cement sidewalk five feet wide in front of his lot, both on Clover street and on First street. It was laid upon the official grade, it complied with the specifications then required by the city, it was constructed in pursuance of permission from the city council, and on January 21, 1907, it was in perfect order and in a condition satisfactory to the street superintendent of the city. The expenses of the sidewalk on the south side of Clover street as ordered by the council under the Vrooman act, amounted to $1,179.67. The assessment therefor was made upon each and every lot fronting on Clover street, those on the north side as well as those on the south, from Westcott street to Walnut street, excepting certain lots on the south side in front of which a sidewalk had been previously laid, but including all the lots on the north side, whether a sidewalk had already been laid in front of them or not. The plaintiff's lot was assessed for $48.54. Judgment of foreclosure for that sum and for costs was given. This case was before this court upon a former appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment for the defendant given upon the sustaining of his demurrer to the complaint. 154 Cal. 303, 97 Pac. 668. The judgment was reversed and the sum of $22.25 was thereupon taxed in the court below for the said plaintiff's costs upon said appeal. The judgment now appealed from declares that the plaintiff is personally liable for this sum. The defendant contends, upon this appeal, that inasmuch as he had already, at his own expense, laid a sidewalk satisfactory to the street superintendent in front of his lot on the north side of the street, that lot could not be lawfully assessed for the cost of a sidewalk upon the opposite side. He also claims that the part of the judgment declaring him personally liable for the costs of the former appeal is erroneous.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

1. Upon the first question the respondent claims that the decision upon the former appeal is the law of the case and is conclusive. The record upon that appeal consisted only of the complaint, the demurrer, and the judgment. There was nothing therein to show that Balfour had previously, or at all, constructed a sidewalk in front of his lot. That decision, so far as it was based on the record before the court, was merely to the effect that lots on one side of a street could be lawfully assessed to pay the cost of a sidewalk laid on the opposite side, where it is not shown that a sidewalk had been already laid in front of such lots at the time the proceeding for the walk on the opposite side was begun. It is not the law of the case except in so far as the facts are the same. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 654, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Heidt v. Minor, 113 Cal. 391, 45 Pac. 700; Klauber v. San Diego St. Car Co., 98 Cal. 107, 32 Pac. 876; Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. Farnham, 153 Cal. 583, 96 Pac. 9, 126 Am. St. Rep. 129; Jacks v. Deering, 150 Cal. 275, 88 Pac. 909; Flood v. Templeton, 152 Cal. 158, 92 Pac. 78, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579; Ellis v. Witmer, 148 Cal. 534, 83 Pac. 800. Hence, as the record in the present case does show the fact that Balfour had previously constructed a sidewalk in front of his own lot, the former decision does not control. It has the force of a precedent, so far as it is applicable, but it does not constitute a conclusive adjudication of the law. It is true, counsel for Balfour, in his brief upon that appeal, asserted that he had laid a walk in front of his lot at his own cost, and argued that, under subdivision 11 of section 7 of the Vrooman act, his lot must on that account be excepted from the assessment, and the court, in the opinion deciding the appeal, said that, even if the fact were as asserted, the lot would nevertheless be subject to assessment for half the cost of a walk laid on the opposite side. But this was a statement upon a point not presented in the record, and although it was upon a fact asserted and a point argued by counsel, it was not a decision having binding force as an adjudication of the law of the case. That doctrine does not extend to obiter dicta. Wixson v. Devine, 80 Cal. 388, 22 Pac. 224; Oakland v. Carpentier, 21 Cal. 667; Gwinn v. Hamilton, 75 Cal. 266, 17 Pac. 212; Ventura v. Clay, 119 Cal. 215, 51 Pac. 189. The question must be decided on its merits, and not upon the theory that it was settled by the former decision. The law upon which the question depends is section 7 of the Vrooman act, as amended in 1891. St. 1891, p. 201; Deering's General Laws 1909, p. 1290. The portions of this section which bear upon the question, omitting the irrelevant clauses, are as follows:

Subdivision 1: "The expenses incurred for any work authorized by this act * * * shall be assessed upon the lots and land fronting thereon, except as hereinafter specifically provided; each lot or portion of a lot being separately assessed, in proportion to the frontage, at a rate per front foot sufficient to cover the total expense of the work."

Subdivision 8: "Where any work mentioned in this act (manholes, cesspools, culverts, crosswalks, piling, and capping excepted) is done on either or both sides of the center line of any street for one block or less, and further work opposite to the work of the same class already done is ordered to be done to complete the unimproved portion of said street, the assessment to cover the total expense of said work so ordered shall be made upon the lots or portions of the lots only fronting the portions of the work so ordered."

Subdivision 10: "* * * Whenever any owner or owners of any lots and lands fronting on any street shall have heretofore done, or shall hereafter do, any work (except grading) on such street, in front of any block, at his or their own expense, and the city council shall subsequently order any work to be done of the same class in front of the same block, said work so done at the expense of such owner or owners shall be excepted from the order ordering the work to be done, as provided in subdivision eleven of this act; provided that the work so done at the expense of such owner or owners, shall be upon the official grade, and in condition satisfactory to the street superintendent at the time such order is passed." (Special provisions are made for grading work.)

Subdivision 11: "The city council may include in one resolution of intention and order any of the different kinds of work mentioned in this act, and it may except therefrom any of the work already done upon the street to the official grade. The lots or portions of lots fronting upon said excepted work already done shall not be included in the frontage assessment for the class of work from which the assessment is made."

It appears clear that these provisions forbid the assessment of Balfour's lot for any portion of the expense of the work ordered to be done. He had previously laid a similar walk upon the official grade by permission of the council, and this walk was in a condition satisfactory to the street superintendent at the time the sidewalk on the opposite side of the street was ordered. The above quoted provisions of subdivision 10 had been literally complied with. The order in question provided in terms that a walk should be constructed "along the south side of Clover street" for the specified distance "excepting such portions of said street as are required to be kept in order by any person or company having railroad tracks thereon, and also excepting such portions thereof where concrete cement sidewalks have already been constructed and accepted."

It may be admitted that the terms of the exception quoted, if construed without reference to the statute, would not cover the lot of Balfour upon the north side of the street, since the order itself was for a walk upon the south side only, and an exception of "portions" of that side would not exempt a lot on the north side. But the purpose of the exception in the order must have been to comply with the provisions of the statute on the subject, and it should be given that effect, if reasonably possible. And even if the exception does not, under any possible construction, include the plaintiff's lot, the law would nevertheless control, and if the facts are such as to bring the lot within the exemption of the statute, it would not be liable for any part of the cost of the walk, although not expressly excluded by the terms of the order.

Balfour had complied with the provisions of subdivisions 10 and 11, and was entitled to exemption thereunder, unless those provisions, so far as sidewalks are concerned, are intended to apply only in cases where the walk subsequently ordered is upon the same side of the street as that upon which the walk is already, in part, laid. But in view of the other provisions of the act, this could not possibly have been intended. At all events, if it was so intended, the effect would be that the law, as to such cases, would not be uniform in its operation, would work unequally, unfairly and unjustly, and it would therefore be unconstitutional. An intent to make an unconstitutional law is not to be imputed to the Legislature unless no other interpretation is reasonably possible. If the statute means this, then Balfour, and every person similarly situated, after having paid the whole cost of a walk in front of his lot on the side it abuts, will be compelled to pay one-half of the walk ordered to be laid on the opposite side of the street in front of the opposite lot, while the owner of the opposite lot will be obliged to pay only one-half of the cost of the walk on which his lot abuts and nothing for the opposite walk, or if we concede that such owner of the opposite lot might be assessed for one-half of the cost of a walk to complete the improvement on Balfour's side, whenever such completion is ordered, still he would pay only one-half thereof, and the sum of his payments would only equal the cost of one walk for the length of his frontage, whereas Balfour, if he is not now exempt, will have to pay one and a half times the cost of a walk of that length. In other words, when the sidewalk is laid on both sides of the street, the man who has laid it in front of his own lot, at his own expense, before any proceedings are begun, will have paid three-fourths of the total cost of his frontage, while his neighbor opposite will have paid only one-fourth. A law which would cause this result would not operate uniformly on persons similarly situated with respect to it, and to that extent it would be invalid.

It is not necessary, however, to give it a construction which would have this effect. Of course, if we should hold that, under the first subdivision above quoted, where a sidewalk is ordered on only one side of a street, the whole cost thereof is to be assessed against the lots on that side only, the question here presented could not arise. The former decision in this case, being the "law of the case" to the extent that both sides may be assessed, where no walk is already laid on the opposite side, we are bound to accept that rule, so far as the present decision is concerned. But if we concede, as we must under that decision, that in the case of a sidewalk on one side only of a street, the lots on the opposite side are to be considered as "fronting thereon" and consequently are to be assessed therefor according to such frontage, under the provisions of subdivision 1, then we must carry this meaning into the other portions of the section relating to the same subject. In this view, a lot fronting on either side is to be considered as fronting upon the whole street and assessable for a sidewalk upon the opposite side, equally with those on the side where it is laid. The necessary consequence is that where, in the part of subdivision 10 above quoted, the statute speaks of an owner of land "fronting on any street," who shall do any work (which includes a sidewalk) "in front of any block," and then refers to similar work afterwards ordered "in front of the same block," it must be understood to include a sidewalk subsequently ordered on the side opposite to the lot of such owner, as well as one on the same side. Likewise, in subdivision 11 the provision that the lots "fronting upon said excepted work already done shall not be included in the frontage assessment, for the work" subsequently ordered, must, in the case of a sidewalk, mean a lot on the side opposite to the side on which the walk is ordered, as well as a lot on the same side. If the lots across the street from a sidewalk ordered are to be considered as "fronting thereon"—that is, on that work, for the purposes of assessment for the cost thereof—then, under subdivisions 10 and 11, such sidewalk ordered must be considered as "in front of the same block," and the work already done by the owner on the opposite side, must also be deemed to be work "in front" of the block on which the work is ordered, for the purpose of the exemption provided by the last-mentioned subdivisions. In contemplation of the statute the sidewalks on both sides of a street comprise the entire work of that class upon that street, and one who has properly performed at his own expense any part of such entire improvement is to be given credit for that much of the entire work by the exemption. Thus construed, the statute does not authorize any assessment upon Balfour's lot for the sidewalk ordered and laid on the side across the street opposite thereto, in front of which he had already laid a walk. We think it should receive the construction above stated, and that no other would be reasonable or constitutional.

Possibly the same result would be brought about by subdivision 8 if it is applicable to the case. In this case the sidewalk ordered extended over several blocks, while the sidewalk previously laid by Balfour on the side opposite thereto was for less than one block. San Diego Inv. Co. v. Shaw, 129 Cal. 275, 61 Pac. 1083, involved the work of grading a street to the official grade, on the east side of the center line thereof, for a distance of 17 blocks. The whole cost was assessed exclusively upon the lots fronting on the east side. The defendant owned one lot on that side. It did not appear that the grading on the west side had been already done. The court said, "The work was not done on one block or less, opposite work of the same class already done," and for that reason subdivision 8 was held not applicable, whether because the work ordered was for more than one block, or because no work had been already done on the opposite side, is not made clear, but from the language of the subdivision it must have been for the latter reason. The exemption of this subdivision, by its terms, applies to a lot on one side of a street in front of which a particular class of work is already done, "for one block or less," where further work of that class on the opposite side thereto is afterward ordered to be done, although the "further work" may extend to more than one block, and so far it undoubtedly includes the case of Balfour. The additional condition is imposed, however, that such "further work" must be "ordered to be done to complete the unimproved portion of said street." As the sidewalk here ordered was for one side only, and that the side opposite to Balfour's lot, it would not, of itself, entirely complete the sidewalking of the street for the entire length of the work ordered, but only one side thereof. But that is not what is meant by this subdivision, as applied to sidewalks. If it were, it would not apply to sidewalks at all, except where the "further work" ordered extended only the same distance along the street as the work already done opposite, or where it included both sides for the same block, at least. We cannot suppose that this limited application was the one intended. It would be an extremely rare occurrence, and the protection of the exemption could be easily evaded in most instances by extending the further work to a greater distance and improving each side by separate proceedings. Nor is there any necessity for giving it this effect. The words "to complete the unimproved portion of said street" may reasonably be held to refer to that section of the street in front of the work already done. If the work ordered has the effect, in connection with that already done, to complete the whole street for that section thereof, so far as that class of work is concerned, then the case comes within the protection of the statute, and the lot in front of which the work is already done is exempt. In such case the assessment upon the lots fronting upon that section must be upon those fronting directly upon the work ordered; that is, upon the same side of such section. In this way the exemption will apply to all cases, and only in this way can substantial justice always be done, under this subdivision.

For these reasons, we conclude that Balfour's lot, upon the facts found, was not liable for any part of the cost of the work ordered to be constructed and that the assessment thereof was unauthorized and invalid. As this will require a reversal of the judgment, it is unnecessary to consider the clause therein declaring him personally liable for the costs of the former appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.

I concur in the judgment: SLOSS, J.

---

158 Cal. 720

MILLSAP v. WILBUR. (Sac. 1,783.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1910.)

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; N. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by Wirt Millsap against W. P. Wilbur. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Mering, for appellant. Hudson Grant, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment refusing to allow him a lien upon the lot of the defendant under a street assessment.

The proceeding in which the assessment was levied was the same as that considered in the case of Millsap v. Balfour (Sac. 1,797, decided simultaneously herewith) 112 Pac. 450. The findings in this case show that the improvement ordered consisted of the construction of a concrete cement sidewalk along the south side of Clover street from Wescott street to Walnut street in the city of Woodland, crossing First, Second, Third, Fourth and College streets, and that the defendant Wilbur owned a lot on the north side of said street between Second and Third streets. It further showed that prior to the passage of the resolution of intention to make this improvement the city had given notice to the property owners along the line of the street on each side thereof, that it intended to proceed to cause sidewalks to be constructed thereon, and gave them until October 1, 1905, within which to do the work in accordance with the directions of the city officials, and that in pursuance of this notice and order the defendant Wilbur and the other owners of the lots fronting on said street between First street and Third street had caused such sidewalks to be constructed on both sides of said street for the entire length of the said blocks. The assessment in question was levied upon all the lots fronting on said street between Walnut street and Wescott street, excepting those on the south side of the two blocks aforesaid upon which sidewalks had been already constructed, but including those on the north side thereof. The rate of assessment was $.2611 per front foot, and the portion assessed upon the lot of Wilbur was $48.54. The court below concluded that the lots upon the north side of these two blocks could not be assessed for this improvement, and denied the plaintiff any relief.

These facts bring the case within the principle laid down in the decision of Millsap v. Balfour above mentioned.

Upon the authority of that decision the judgment is affirmed.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.

I concur in the judgment: SLOSS, J.

---

158 Cal. 567

ALASKA SALMON CO. v. STANDARD BOX CO. (S. F. 5308.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1910. On Rehearing in Bank, Dec. 17, 1910.)

1. Frauds, Statute of (§ 146*)—Pleading Contract Within Statute.

The complaint in an action on a contract need not allege it was in writing, as required by the statute of frauds; but that it was is to be presumed, and defendant relying on the statute against the complaint must plead it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 352-354; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

2. Corporations (§ 519*)—Actions—Compliance with License Law — Burden of Proof.

That plaintiff, admitted by the answer to be a corporation and engaged in business as such, has failed to comply with the corporation license law, and so is not entitled to maintain the action, is matter of affirmative defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2093; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

3. Sales (§ 99*)—Termination of Contract—Delivery in Installments—Failure to Pay for Installment on Delivery.

Though a contract to manufacture and deliver boxes in installments contemplates payment for each installment as delivered, mere failure to pay for an installment when delivered is not a violation of the contract, which avoids it, refusal to pay for them being justified by an insufficient number being delivered, those delivered being of inferior quality, and there being then insufficient time to count and inspect them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

4. Sales (§ 108*)—Termination of Contract—Acts Constituting Rescission.

Defendant contracted to manufacture and deliver to plaintiff 100,000 boxes in which to pack canned salmon, 50,000 to be delivered in the first week of April of a certain year, shortly after which, as it was understood, plaintiff's vessel would take them to its canning factory in Alaska; the other 50,000 to be delivered at the same time the next year, each delivery to be paid for as made. Defendant delivered less than 50,000 boxes in time to be taken on the vessel, and those delivered, as noted by plaintiff, and made known to defendant, during delivery, were not up to quality. Held that, as it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to replace them if any were rejected, and the time for inspection being short, and it being plaintiff's duty to minimize the damages, it was justified in taking on board those furnished, and refusing to pay till the damages were determined, so that the contract was not avoided thereby; and there having been an adjustment of the difference by arbitration, and a payment of the award, and defendant not having treated the contract as abrogated, till plaintiff demanded delivery of the remaining boxes for the following year, plaintiff could recover for failure to deliver them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 277; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

5. Sales (§ 417*)—Action by Buyer—Failure to Deliver Goods—Proof of Plaintiff's Ability to Perform.

Plaintiff, suing for breach of defendant's contract to manufacture boxes and deliver them to it, sufficiently proves that it was ready, able, and willing to perform, where its insolvency is not charged, and the defense is not based on its inability by the fact that defendant's refusal to furnish the boxes involved no question of plaintiff's ability, but arose simply from defendant's demand that new terms, conditions, and price be fixed, the price of such boxes having risen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1173; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

6. Sales (§ 418*)—Action by Buyer—Failure to Deliver Goods—Damages.

Notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 3354, providing that in estimating damages, the value of property to a buyer, deprived of its possession, is the price at which he might have bought an equivalent in the market nearest to the place where the property ought to have been put in his possession, a purchaser can recover of a seller, who refuses to deliver, the difference between the contract price and what is thereafter paid for a like article in a distant market, the amount paid being less than the price at any market nearer the place at which the seller was to deliver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1174-1201; Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

7. Trial (§ 252*)—Instructions—Applicability to Evidence.

Refusal of an instruction as to a state of facts different from that shown by the evidence is proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 596; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

On Rehearing.

8. Sales (§ 411*)—Remedy of Buyer—Breach of Contract—Consideration—Pleading.

Where the complaint in an action for breach of defendant's contract to manufacture and deliver boxes alleges that plaintiff was to pay for the boxes "the price called for by the contract," there is not an absence of allegation of consideration, but, at worst, a defective allegation thereof, to which a special demurrer should be addressed; and it is good in the absence of demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1161; Dec. Dig. § 411.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 519*)—PAYMENT OF LICENSE TAX—PLEADING—NEGATIVE ALLEGATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1869, requiring proof in support of a negative allegation, when such allegation is an essential part of the statement of the right or title on which the cause of action or defense is founded, defendant, for special defense having pleaded nonpayment by plaintiff of the corporation license tax, has the burden of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2093; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

10. CORPORATIONS (§ 592*)—FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE—DESTRUCTION OF EXISTENCE—NONPAYMENT OF LICENSE TAX.

There is not a forfeiture resulting in the destruction of a corporation's existence from its mere failure to pay the corporation license tax; but coupled therewith must be the performance by the Secretary of the State and the Governor of the acts of proclaiming the forfeiture required to be performed by them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2373, 2398; Dec. Dig. § 592.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the Alaska Salmon Company against the Standard Box Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. L. Benjamin, for appellant. Chickering & Gregory, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The action was for damages for breach of contract. The case was tried before a jury, whose verdict was given for plaintiff. From the judgment which followed and from the order of the court denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals.

The complaint charged that in October, 1905, plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract whereby defendant agreed to manufacture for plaintiff 100,000 wooden boxes, to be delivered during the canning seasons of 1906 and 1907 as called for by plaintiff for its use in the business of manufacturing and selling canned salmon. Defendant supplied plaintiff for the canning season of 1906 with 44,000 boxes, and plaintiff prior to the commencement of the canning season of 1907 demanded of defendant that it furnish the remaining boxes, to wit, 56,000, for use during the canning season of 1907. It is alleged that plaintiff has always been ready and willing to receive the said 56,000 boxes, and to pay for them at the price called for by said contract and in accordance with the terms thereof, but that defendant has refused to deliver the boxes, whereby plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $3,920. The answer was by general denial, and for a special defense it is alleged "that the plaintiff is and for more than three years last past has been a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California"; that plaintiff has at all times since its incorporation wholly failed to comply with the provisions of the act imposing a license tax upon corporations, and has wholly failed to pay the license or any of the licenses required by this act. The jury's verdict was for $3,640.30.

1. It is asserted that the complaint wholly fails to state a cause of action because it does not allege that the contract of October was in writing. The law will presume the contract to be valid and not invalid, and thus, where required by the statute of frauds, will presume it to be evidenced by writing. Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427, 19 Pac. 753; Bradford Investment Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 204, 48 Pac. 1083. If the defendant relies upon the statute of frauds against such a complaint he must plead it. Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 330. 19 Pac. 513. Moreover, the execution of the contract was not denied and in the answer the written agreement is expressly set out in a counterclaim for damages; and, finally, the contract was, in fact, in writing, and was proved and legally evidenced by an interchange of business letters between the two corporations.

2. It is argued that, because plaintiff did not affirmatively show the payment by it of the license tax required, it cannot be permitted to maintain this action. It will be remembered that the defense pleaded such nonpayment by plaintiff, but no evidence was introduced in support of the plea. The answer itself avers that the plaintiff is a corporation and is engaged in business as a corporation. This is an admission of the plaintiff's corporate capacity to sue, and is a waiver of the proof contemplated by section 297 of the Civil Code to the effect that a certified copy of the articles of incorporation "must be received in all the courts of this state and in other places as prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated." The corporate existence and general capacity of the plaintiff thus being established by the admission of the pleadings, it was matter of affirmative defense for the box company to have shown the extraneous fact that plaintiff had failed to comply with the corporation license tax law, and therefore should not be permitted to proceed further. The burden of proving a negative thus being cast upon the defendant only slight evidence would be required. But, as has been said, defendant never undertook to furnish any evidence at all, and here rests merely upon the proposition that every corporation must itself affirmatively show a compliance with the corporation license tax act before being permitted to prosecute an action. This view of the law, for the reasons given, cannot be upheld.

3. To the better understanding of the other propositions advanced by appellant, comprehension of the facts becomes necessary. Plaintiff is engaged in the business of canning salmon in distant Alaska. It sends its ships equipped with the necessary supplies to its canneries. Its success for any year is absolutely dependent upon its ability to have its men and supplies at its canneries in time to handle the salmon run. It was important, therefore, that its supplies should be on board the ship, and the ship started for the Arctic as early as practicable. As part of its supplies it required for the years 1906 and 1907 each 50,000 wooden boxes in which were to be packed the tins of salmon. These boxes the defendant undertook to furnish, "50,000 to be delivered f. o. b. ship at wharf in San Francisco during the first week of April, 1906," and 50,000 to be delivered at the same time in 1907. "Boxes to be of standard size and quality, guaranteed to be perfectly dry. The price of shook 10½c. each; cases nailed up 12½c. each, all cash less 2 per cent." In fact, defendant did not deliver all of the first lot of 50,000 boxes, and complaint was made by plaintiff to defendant both of the shortage and of the quality of the boxes which it actually delivered, in that they were wet and not dry. The effect of the wet boxes would be to rust the tin cans of salmon and so impair the value of the pack. The ship started north on April 12th and demand for payment was made by defendant upon plaintiff for the boxes already delivered. The earthquake and fire with the consequent confusion and disturbance of all business occurred on April 18th. Plaintiff insisted that the payment should be made only after adjustment because of the inferior quality of the boxes, and the failure to furnish the full 50,000 contracted for. Finally an agreement was reached, evidenced by a writing signed by the Standard Box Company, to the effect that upon the payment of $3,000 by plaintiff the box company would leave a balance which it claimed to be due of $1,175.57 in the hands of plaintiff "until such time that the ship Big Bonanza arrives from the north at about September next, when you can ascertain damage sustained, if any, on account of delivery not being in accordance with contract dated October 26, 1905. Also on account of quality which you claim to be below standard, and we hereby appoint James Madison the sole arbitrator in this matter, and his decision to be final and binding upon this company." The plaintiff then paid the $3,000 and James Madison, upon his return, declared that there was $754.40 still due to defendant, the remainder being deducted for damages. Upon October 6, 1906, defendant was paid this $754.40 in full satisfaction of its claim, and defendant receipted without protest, never intimated its dissatisfaction with the settlement or its desire to terminate the contract. Subsequently, on February 19, 1907, plaintiff made demand for the 56,000 boxes for the year 1907 to be delivered during the first week in April in accordance with the contract. Then, for the first time, on February 20th the box company replied: "As to cutting your order for 56,000 cases, we would say that if we can agree upon new terms and conditions and prices we are willing to fill same, as we consider your treatment of us an abrogation of your contract, in withholding our money for such a long time." Upon this refusal plaintiff bought boxes from a northern box factory in Astoria, Or., and lays damages for the difference between the defendant's contract price and the price which it was thus compelled to pay.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It was not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury as requested by defendant to the following effect: "As a matter of law, the contract in this case required payment to be made by plaintiff for each lot of boxes delivered, as the same should be delivered, or, at the very latest, upon the collection day following each lot of deliveries, and it was the duty of the plaintiff to pay the defendant at the very latest on April 13, 1906, if that was a collection day, the amount due for all boxes delivered by collection day; I mean, of course, collection day as known to the business world generally in San Francisco." Such instruction would have made it mandatory for the jury to find that the failure or refusal of plaintiff to pay for all the delivered boxes on April 13th was a violation of the contract, notwithstanding the fact that the refusal to pay might have been fully and completely justified by a delivery of an insufficient and inferior quantity without opportunity for counting and inspection. There is no question but that this contract contemplated a cash payment. It is equally true that it contemplated delivery in the first week in April, a delivery which defendant did not make. The defendant was aware that the boxes were to go north on shipboard under the circumstances noted. The general line of cases to the effect that it is the duty of plaintiff to inspect goods when delivered and reject them if not up to specification, and that the plaintiff cannot accept goods in part and reject them in part, and that having kept the goods it is too late for plaintiff to contend that they did not conform to the contract, are none of them apposite. Each case must be governed by its conditions and facts. A plaintiff, where a defendant has violated his contract, is charged with the general duty of doing every reasonable thing to minimize his own loss and thus reduce the damages for which defendant has become liable by his breach. The time for examination was extremely short. Whatever goods were rejected as not up to quality involved in their rejection trouble and difficulty, if not absolute inability, for their replacement. Plaintiff was, therefore, justified in doing as it did, namely, taking on board the boxes furnished, even though deficient in number and not up to standard in quality. That they were of inferior quality was noted by plaintiff and made known to defendant during delivery. Under these circumstances, the instruction actually given by the court was all that defendant was entitled to ask. It was as follows: "When a contract for the manufacture and delivery of certain goods provides for the payment of the contract price in installments as the goods are delivered, it is the duty of the party who is to pay for the goods to pay each installment as required by the contract; and if when, under the contract, an installment becomes due, the party who is to pay refuses or fails to pay such installment, the other party to the contract has the right to cease the manufacture and delivery of the goods, and to consider the contract at an end; and the other party to the contract who has so failed to make payment of an installment, when the same became due, cannot, under such circumstances, complain of the refusal of the contractor to proceed further with the manufacture and delivery of the goods, and cannot maintain any action against the contractor for damages because of such refusal of the contractor to proceed with the manufacture and delivery of the goods."

4. The contract was not terminated before this action was brought. The argument herein seems to be based upon the law of the preceding rejected instruction, that the failure to pay upon delivery operated to avoid the contract. But neither then nor thereafter, until its letter of February, 1907, did defendant ever treat the contract as abrogated, annulled, or rescinded. It never gave notice of rescission. To the contrary, it entered into an arbitration agreement for the adjustment of its differences with the plaintiff under the contract. Regardless of the question as to whether or not that arbitration agreement was in strict legal form, it was accepted by both parties, and fully executed by the judgment of the arbitrator and by the payment and acceptance of his award, without sign of protest from either party.

5. It is contended that plaintiff failed to prove that it was ready, able, and willing to perform the contract on its part. Such proof is, of course, required. Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 486; McGehee v. Hill, 4 Port. (Ala.) 170, 29 Am. Dec. 277; Grandy v. McCleese, 47 N. C. 142. But where the insolvency of plaintiff is not charged, and where the defense is not in any way based upon such inability, very slight proof will fill the requirement. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff has always been ready and willing to receive the 56,000 boxes and pay for them under the contract. No question in the case arose over any previous inability of the plaintiff to pay. To the contrary, it plainly appears by defendant's letter of February 20th that its refusal to furnish the boxes involved no question of plaintiff's ability, but arose simply from the defendant's demand that new terms, conditions, and price be fixed. The price of such boxes at this time had risen. We hold the evidence to have been sufficient.

6. The court instructed the jury to the following effect: "The plaintiff claims to have paid 7 cents in excess of this contract price, for each box of the remaining 56,140, making $3,920, and, if you find that it did make such payment, then plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for this amount, unless the contract was, by some act or omission of the plaintiff, rescinded or terminated." It is contended that this instruction does violence to the provisions of section 3354 of the Civil Code, to the effect that, in estimating damages, the value is deemed to be the price at which one might have bought an equivalent thing in the market nearest to the place where the property ought to have been put in his possession. It is claimed that a purchase from the Astoria Box Factory was not a purchase in the nearest place, and that the purchase by plaintiff of the boxes at seven cents advance of the contract price in no way tended to show the market value. Still further it is said that the boxes for which plaintiff paid the advanced price were not the kind and quality of boxes called for by the contract, but were better boxes, of better material. The evidence on the last point is that the boxes "were the same boxes called for by the contract here, only much better boxes and better material," which is fairly open to the construction that what the witness meant to convey was that the boxes were of the same size and standard make, and general quality, but that the boxes which they received from the Astoria factory were of better material and workmanship. It is in evidence, moreover, that the price obtained from the Astoria Box Company was the cheapest price for which the plaintiff could get the boxes from any one anywhere. The bids of the San Francisco box companies were higher, and therefore if plaintiff had bought the boxes in San Francisco, defendant's damage would have been greater. The provision for the purchase of property in the market "nearest to the place" is a provision designed wholly for the protection and benefit of the vendor in default. It is to prevent any exorbitant or extortionate charge being made against him by the unnecessary purchase of the goods in a distant or foreign market. But where, as here, it is shown that the damages for which defendant was liable were decreased, and the consequent award against him lessened by the purchase in a northern market it will not be said that the purchase was to his injury or in violation of the law.

7. The plaintiff clearly showed that it had sustained damage, and from all that has been said it is apparent that the court was justified in refusing an instruction to the jury to the effect that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have accepted the full quantity of 50,000 boxes if they were delivered on the wharf before the vessel put out into the stream. No evidence sustains the proposition that the 50,000 boxes were in fact delivered at the wharf. Indeed, it appears that the delivery of the final boxes to complete the 50,000 was made after the ship had left. The contract called for delivery in the first week in April. Defendants were engaged in supplying other ships, the time was extended to the 12th, and when the ship put forth into the stream delivery then was not completed.

For these reasons the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Rehearing.

In Bank.

PER CURIAM. 1. In the petition for a rehearing, it is urged that this court misconceived the position of appellant, which is that the complaint did not state a cause of action in failing to allege that the contract was in writing, and in failing to allege any consideration for the agreement which it pleads that defendant entered into. Except for the petition for rehearing, it would have been regarded as unnecessary to say that no demurrer was interposed to the complaint, either general or special, and that the complaint does allege that plaintiff has always been ready and willing "to receive the said 56,000 boxes, and to pay for them at the price called for by said contract and in accordance with the terms thereof." However defective this allegation might be regarded as an allegation of consideration under the attack of a special demurrer, in the absence of either general or special demurrer, a cause of action is sufficiently stated. In Moore v. Waddle, 34 Cal. 145, discussion was had with reference to a demurrer which was therein interposed to the sufficiency of the complaint. It was pointed out that under the common-law rules of pleading a consideration was imported only to an instrument under seal. It was held that the contract sued upon was sealed, and that therefore the ground of demurrer was not well taken. The same is true of Acheson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Cal. 641, 31 Pac. 583. There, too, demurrer was interposed to the complaint. Here, as has been said, no demurrer was interposed to the complaint. There is an allegation in the complaint to the effect that plaintiff was to pay for the boxes "the price called for by the contract." There was therefore not an absence of allegation of consideration, but, at the worst, a defective allegation of consideration to which a special demurrer should have been but was not addressed.

2. Defendant for special defense pleaded the nonpayment of the corporation license tax. It offered no word of evidence in support of this defense, but argues upon appeal that because it tendered this defense it became incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove, upon its part, the payment of the tax. This in direct denial of the Code declaration to the effect that while evidence need not be given in support of a negative allegation generally, it must be given "when such negative allegation is an essential part of the statement of the right or title on which the cause of action or defense is founded." Code Civ. Proc. 1869. Here was a defense wholly based upon the negative allegation of nonpayment. It was incumbent upon the defendant to support such a defense by some evidence, and, from the nature of the defense such evidence was easily procurable. It is meaningless to cite cases where the courts have held as to certain negative averments that proof is not necessary. The Code provision covers the whole matter. Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, 28 Pac. 61, is not in point. The discussion there was not directed to the burden of proof. Issue was joined upon the plea in abatement that plaintiffs had not complied with the provisions of 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code relating to partnerships, and the court made findings thereon. The discussion in this court was upon the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment. What it said as to the duty of the plaintiffs "to have shown that the certificate had been filed and published once a week for four successive weeks before the commencement of the action" had reference not at all to the burden of proof, but to the fact that by the evidence which they introduced they failed to establish a compliance with the law. As little in point is Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 Pac. 444. There, upon its face, the complaint showed that plaintiffs were partners doing business under a designation which did not show the names of the partners. This made it incumbent upon the plaintiffs to plead that they had filed a certificate as required by section 2468 of the Civil Code. They did so plead. The allegation as to the filing of the certificate was denied by the answer. The certificate which was offered in evidence did not comply with the statute. It was held that since the complaint showed that plaintiffs were doing business as copartners under a designation which did not show the names of the persons, the allegation of compliance with the provisions of the Code was essential to the sufficiency of the complaint, and that plaintiffs could not recover without proving it. In the present case no such question is involved. The same is true of Bank of British North America v. Alaska Imp. Co., 97 Cal. 28, 31 Pac. 726. The law required a foreign bank doing business in California to publish certain statements as a prerequisite to their right to maintain or prosecute any action or proceeding in any of the courts of the state. The answer averred that plaintiffs had not complied with certain provisions of that act. The court's findings were, in effect, that the plaintiffs had sufficiently complied with the law. Here, again, was no discussion of the burden of proof, this court determining merely that the evidence offered by plaintiff in support of the finding that it had complied with the law was insufficient, and therefore reversed the judgment. It may thus be seen that not only are none of these cases in point, but it may be added that the pleading of the special defense is wholly insufficient to show that a forfeiture was worked by failure to pay the license tax. Manifestly, if a forfeiture did not result, plaintiff's corporate capacity still existed. The allegation of the defense is merely that the plaintiff has "wholly failed to comply with the provisions or any provisions of the act of the Legislature" relating to the license tax upon corporations, and "has wholly failed to pay the license or any of the licenses required to be paid by the provisions of the said act." But a casual inspection of the act itself and of the decision of this court in Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 155 Cal. 638, 103 Pac. 341, will disclose to the legal mind that the forfeiture which destroys the corporate existence does not result from a failure to pay the license tax, but results from a failure to pay the license tax, coupled with the further fact "that the acts required to be performed by the Secretary of State and the Governor (proclaiming the forfeiture) shall have been performed in the manner required." Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, supra, page 654 of 155 Cal., page 347 of 103 Pac. Without the performance of such acts, the forfeiture does not result, and the pleading is wholly insufficient by reason of its failure to aver their due performance. The absence of merit in this petition is thus shown. Petitioner seems to have undertaken to supply this lack of merit by disrespectful vehemence.

It is therefore ordered that the petition for rehearing be denied, and that the petition itself be stricken from the files of this court.

---

158 Cal. 579

PENNEBAKER et al. v. SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CO. (S. F. 5,276.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1910. On Rehearing in Bank, Dec. 17, 1910.)

1. Electricity (§ 15*) — Injuries — Negligence.
An electric lighting company is not required to discontinue all light and power in a district in which a fire alarm is given, in order to protect firemen and others going on the premises to fight the fire, in absence of special circumstances requiring it in a particular case; nor is it negligent for not having an employé at the fire to disconnect its wires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. Electricity (§ 15*)—Injuries from Use—Negligence.
An electric lighting company was not negligent, making it liable for a fireman's death by contact with its wires in the yard of a burning building, because an employé who was at the fire, but not in the performance of any duties, did not warn the firemen of the danger from the wires, especially where it did not appear that such employé was there when the wires were charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. Electricity (§ 13*)—Injuries—Liability.
One using a street, as in the case of an electric lighting company for stringing wires, is not an absolute insurer that the street shall be as safe after it has strung its wires as it was before.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. Electricity (§ 15*)—Injuries—Liability.
Intestate, a fireman, was killed while fighting fire by contact with wires of defendant lighting company in the back yard of the burning premises. It did not appear that defendants had any exact knowledge of the location of the fire, and the current which killed decedent was one which would not ordinarily endanger life. Held, that the lighting company was not negligent so as to make it liable for decedent's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

5. Negligence (§ 32*)—Liability to Licensee—Firemen.
In absence of ordinance or statute, a fireman entering a building is only a licensee, who assumes the risks, and to whom the owner of the premises owes no special duty to maintain them in a safe condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-44; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

6. Electricity (§ 19*) — Injuries — Action—Admission of Evidence.
In an action against an electric lighting company for the death of a fireman by contact with its wires in the yard of a burning building, claimed to have been caused by defendant's negligence in not cutting off the power, a report by the city electrician to the trustees of the city, adopted and filed, showing that the light committee of the city council to which was referred the matter of having cut off cut-off switches installed to control currents in case of fire, reported a meeting with defendant's officers, at which the latter stated that they had made arrangements whereby the fire chief or city electrician could telephone to defendant's substation to have the current shut off in case of fire, was admissible, in connection with testimony that, in case of former fires, the power had been shut off in lighting districts at the request of the city electrician by a person maintained at its substations by defendant, and that no such request was made on this occasion, as bearing on defendant's negligence in not shutting off the power, even though the arrangement between defendant and the city officials did not amount to a municipal by-law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Elda Marian Pennebaker and others against the San Joaquin Light & Power Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded. Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for appellant. Larkins & Feemster, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The action is by the widow and minor child, heirs of Carl G. Pennebaker, for damages resulting from his death. Pennebaker was a member of the fire department of the city of Fresno. A fire occurred about 2 o'clock in the morning in a wooden building on the outskirts of the business portion of the city. Pennebaker, in the performance of his duty, went to the fire to help in extinguishing it. The complaint charged: That an alarm of fire was turned in to and given the fire department of the city, and at the same time, "so plaintiffs are informed and believe, and upon such information and belief allege the fact to be, an alarm of said fire was turned in to and given said defendant at its electric substation in said city. That by said alarm, so plaintiffs are informed and believe, and upon such information allege the fact to be, defendant was notified of the existence and apprised of the location of said fire." The complaint further charged: That wires, carrying powerful and deadly currents of electricity, were maintained by the defendant at and in the building which caught fire. That the fire continued to burn for the space of about 40 minutes after the alarm was turned in. These wires were thus burned from their fastenings and fell to the ground soon after the alarm was given, continued to lie upon the ground during the greater part of the time that the fire was so burning, and while so lying upon the ground continued to be charged with electricity in dangerous and deadly quantities. That defendant neglected and carelessly permitted its wires so charged to lie upon the ground where it was necessary for persons to go and to be for the purpose of combating and extinguishing the fire. "That defendant, although notified of the existence, and apprised of the location of the fire, as aforesaid, and well knowing of the existence of its said wires at said place, and having the entire charge and control of said wires and of its said electricity and currents of electricity, and well knowing that its said wires were then and there charged with and carrying currents of electricity, and well knowing that said wires were, in the event of a fire, liable to be burned from their fastenings, and to fall to the ground and endanger the lives of people, and particularly of persons engaged in fighting the fire, and having full and ample time and opportunity to know and ascertain the condition of said wires at said time and place, and having ample and sufficient time and means to turn off said electricity and to cut said wires, and to render the same safe and harmless, negligently and carelessly failed to cut said wires, and negligently and carelessly failed to turn off said electricity, and negligently and carelessly failed to do anything, whatever, to render said wires, or any of said wires, safe and harmless during the time of said fire and while its said wires were down and lying upon the ground, as aforesaid." Issue was joined upon the material averments of negligence, and for an affirmative defense the contributory negligence of Pennebaker was charged. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and the court gave judgment for plaintiffs; its findings conforming exactly to the allegations of the complaint.

The principal contention advanced upon this appeal is that the evidence introduced by plaintiffs, giving to it the fullest weight, utterly fails to show negligence upon the part of the defendant. Appellant contends, for its second proposition, that, if the evidence of the plaintiffs be held sufficient to charge the defendant with negligence, it must be concluded from the same evidence that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and, finally, it is urged that the court erred in its ruling refusing admission to certain evidence proffered by the defendant. A statement of the substance of plaintiffs' evidence is made necessary for a consideration of appellant's contention that it utterly fails to show negligence upon its part.

The evidence disclosed: That defendant, an electric light and power corporation, was under contract to supply, and engaged in supplying, light and power to the municipality of Fresno and to private users and consumers; that at 2 o'clock a. m. a fire was discovered in the building before mentioned. Alarms of fire from two boxes, Nos. 4 and 82, representing contiguous fire districts, were turned in well-nigh simultaneously. Automatically a signal was thus given in the fire department stations, and a more general signal by the blowing of a whistle at a substation of the electric company, about five blocks distant from the actual location of the fire. Each of these fire districts embraced territory of five or six blocks. So that a recognition and understanding of the signal as being from district 4 or district 82 would indicate that the fire was somewhere within one of the five or six blocks embraced respectively in such district. The signal would not, and did not, of course, indicate the building, and would not and did not indicate whether the defendant company had light or power wires that would be affected by the fire, though of course there would be imputed to the company knowledge that it had such wires within the district. The firemen arrived promptly at the scene of the fire and proceeded to fight it with water and chemicals. The building was a bicycle repair shop, into which was conducted power used in operating a small lathe. The wires carried electricity which by no possibility could exceed 260 volts; 260 volts are not regarded as dangerous to human life, much less as deadly. These wires were burned and fell to the ground by reason of the fire, and lay upon the ground in the back yard of the premises. Certain of the firemen noticed these wires and saw by their sputtering that they were "hot" and "carried juice." One or two of the firemen actually received shocks from these wires and jumped away. Discussion arose amongst the firemen as to whether the wires were dangerous. The fire chief testifies: "I went around in the back, and there was quite a number of the boys (firemen) had been in the yard and they had come out, and of course they hadn't ought to come out, and they said the reason they came out was on account of the juice being in there. Others spoke up and said there was not enough in there to hurt anybody, and I went in there and it didn't bother me at all. I didn't feel it. I never got a particle of a shock at all." The fire being subdued in about three-fourths of an hour from the time the alarm was given, the chief gave orders to his men to carry out their hose and other paraphernalia and make ready to disperse. Pennebaker, in the performance of his duty, went into the yard, his feet touched and became entangled in the wires, and he pitched forward unconscious. He was dragged out by his fellows, never recovered consciousness, and died within an hour. The chief of the fire department testified that he saw one or more of the employés of the defendant at the fire, but it is not shown that they were on duty, were charged with any duty, were informed of or knew that the wires were carrying electricity or even that they were there when the wires were carrying electricity, for in a very few minutes after Pennebaker was struck down the city electrician climbed the pole and cut the wires. The city was divided by the defendant into districts, and the light and power from these districts could be turned off at the substation. A man was maintained there day and night to do this, upon proper demand. No demand or request was made in this instance. The effect in turning out the light in any one of these districts would be to leave it entirely without electric light or power. Pennebaker was a vigorous man in the prime of life.

The foregoing is a fair summarization of all the evidence upon the question of negligence presented by plaintiffs. It is the evidence to which the motion for nonsuit was addressed. It is to be noted that no knowledge was brought home to defendant that the fire had disturbed, or would in any way disturb, its wires; that, if knowledge that there was a fire and the general location of that fire was imputable to defendant by the blowing of the whistle, such knowledge, in the nature of things, could tell them no more than that it was in a district comprising five or six blocks. No knowledge was imputed or was imputable to defendant that the fire was even in a building containing its wires. It is to be noted, moreover, that the wires, whose detachment caused the fatal accident, did not fall upon any public way, but in the back yard of private property. Respondent contends, and the trial court took the view, that this uncontradicted evidence was legally sufficient to establish the negligence of defendant. If it did, it can be but upon one or another of two theories, both of which are advocated by respondent. First, that it was the duty of defendant to have disconnected its wires when the fire alarm was sounded. Second, that it was the duty of the defendant to have an employé at the fire, either to disconnect the wires himself or to signal to the substation to have it done. A third theory of respondent, broader perhaps than either of these, is that by the very happening of the accident, under the indicated circumstances, the law imputes negligence to the defendant, and that therefore the nonsuit was properly denied. This is the invocation of the doctrine res ipsa loquitur.

1. In support of the first contention, no authority is cited, nor do we think any can be. It would compel defendant, upon the one hand, to extinguish all light and power in a district, regardless of the necessity of so doing, or be held liable for any consequences that might follow its failure. It takes no account of the fact that by so doing, in the case of a night fire, a district would be left in complete darkness, and that under such circumstances, following the alarm of fire, panic might ensue in hotels, lodging houses, and residences, and that the resulting damage might far exceed that which the extinguishment of the lights was designed to prevent. No such rule of law exists, nor, we take it, will ever exist, and the utmost that will be exacted of lighting companies in this regard is that they shall hold themselves in readiness to cut off the electricity when the necessity arises and they are informed of it by proper authority.

2. Nor is negligence imputable to the defendant because it did not have an employé at the fire, charged with the duty of disconnecting particular wires, or signaling for the disconnection of the district. Any reasonable ordinance in this regard which a municipality might adopt would, of course, be upheld, and, if injury resulted from the negligent failure of the light and power company to obey the terms of such ordinance, undoubtedly negligence could be predicated upon it. But here no such exactions were required by any ordinance, and it cannot be held that the defendant failed in any duty with which the law charged it in not having such employé in attendance at every fire. Indeed, in New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Anderson, 73 Neb. 84, 102 N. W. 89, where an ordinance required electric companies to send one or more competent linemen to fires to report to the city engineer and remove or disconnect wires where directed, the court held that this imposed no further duty upon the company than that of so doing, and that the company was not liable, even when it was shown that the company's lineman invited the firemen to proceed to lower the ladders, declaring that the wires with which it thereupon came in contact, and which proved to be heavily charged, were "dead." The court ruled that his declaration to that effect, being entirely outside of the line of his duty, could not charge the defendant company; that defendant light company owed no duty to the firemen to warn them of danger either in ascending or descending the ladder or in removing it from between the wires after the fire was extinguished. This was a duty, if such duty existed, which, under the ordinance pleaded, devolved upon the officers of the city. See, also, Trouton v. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Elec. Light Co., 77 Neb. 821, 110 N. W. 569. This same reasoning and authority answer the argument of respondent that employés of the defendant were at the fire that night and saw the fire and "undoubtedly the flashing of the electricity and the condition of the wires, yet they did nothing." In addition to what has been said in this regard to the effect that they were not there in the performance of any duty, and that it is not shown that they were there when the wires were charged with the electricity, respondent's argument, for a still further reason, is felo de se. For if defendant's employé, a mere bystander and looker-on, can be charged with knowing that electricity in dangerous quantities was escaping from his employer's wires, how much more is Pennebaker himself charged with this knowledge, when he was a fireman, in the immediate vicinity of the wires, when some of his fellow firemen had received shocks, when the matter had been discussed amongst them, when a cry of danger had been given, and when in the resulting conversation it had been argued that the wires were not carrying power enough to injure anybody. Clearly, if knowledge of a dangerous condition arising out of the presence of the electric current in the fallen wires was chargeable to an employé of defendant, under these circumstances, it was even more chargeable against Pennebaker, and the conclusion would be unanswerable that his own negligence, after such knowledge, proximately contributed to his death.

3. The third theory, and that perhaps most strongly relied upon by respondent, is that the facts proved established negligence per se. Herein much reliance is placed upon the decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri in Gannon v. Laclede Gaslight Company, 145 Mo. 502, 46 S. W. 968, 47 S. W. 907, 43 L. R. A. 505. This decision was rendered by a divided court. While there are expressions in the prevailing opinion in accord with respondent's contention, the real question decided was quite different. The action, like the one under consideration, was to recover damages for the death of a husband and father, himself a fireman. The proof by plaintiff was merely to the effect that the deceased, while in the performance of his duty as fireman at a fire, was killed by coming in contract with heavily charged wires of defendant company lying in a public alley. In its essence the proof went no further than this. The defendant company showed that the wires were burned through, or their attachments burned down, through no fault of its own, by an accidental fire; that it received no notice; and, indeed, that there was no time between the falling of the wires and the accident in which it could have received notice so as to cut off the current. It made this proof full and complete by unimpeached witnesses and uncontradicted testimony. The verdict of the jury was for plaintiff. The Supreme Court was divided, not at all, upon the question whether or not the defendant company had made full and complete defense. That was admitted; but upon the question whether or not the jury was bound to believe and decide in accordance with the evidence of the defense, a bare majority holding that the jury alone were triers of the fact, and that a court of appeals would not reverse a case and override the verdict if the evidence proved unsatisfactory to the jury, however satisfactory it might be to the court, the minority of the court holding that such a rule gave juries uncontrolled liberty to disregard and reject evidence which, under the circumstances, it was their duty to have accredited.

This was the principal point of controversy between the members of that court. In the prevailing opinion, it is true, language is used, upon which respondent here relies, which would make not only electric light companies, but every other person using a street, saving foot passengers, absolute insurers in case injury resulted to person or property. An instance of such a declaration is found in the following language: "It was a matter of the plainest duty for the defendant to see that the streets and alleys of the city, along which by permission it was suffered to place its overhead wires for its own private gain, were at all times maintained in the same condition as to safety from the danger of electricity as they were before its overhead use thereof was begun." Every added vehicle upon the street of a city increases the danger to pedestrians in the use of the street. Every street car does the same. Every suspended sign has like effect. If it be true that in all these, and in the innumerable other instances which might be cited, the street must be as safe after as before the new use, then it must necessarily follow that the user becomes an absolute insurer. If that is what the Supreme Court of Missouri means, it must suffice to say that it stands alone in its opinion, without reason or authority in its support. 1 Thompson Law of Neg. § 802; 15 Cyc. 472. If, however, the Supreme Court of Missouri meant but to declare that where the wires of an electric light company, heavily charged with electricity, are shown to be lying upon a public street and injury to a person lawfully upon the highway results from these wires, without negligence on his part, a presumption that the company is negligent thus arises, and the burden is cast upon it to overcome this presumption, the principle of law thus declared is one over which there need be no discussion, for it is not pertinent or applicable to the present case. Here, no wires were upon the public street. They were upon private property and were cast to the ground by the burning of the building upon that property. In the absence of ordinance or statute changing the common-law rule in this regard, a fireman entering a building under imperative public necessity is but a licensee, who assumes the risks as he finds them, and to whom the owner of the premises owes no special duty to maintain those premises in a safe condition. New Omaha, etc., Light Co. v. Anderson, supra; Woodruff v. Bowen, 136 Ind. 431, 34 N. E. 1113, 22 L. R. A. 198; Hamilton v. Minneapolis, etc., Co., 78 Minn. 3, 80 N. W. 693, 79 Am. St. Rep. 350; 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 475. We would not from this be understood as holding that, in all cases where the owner is exonerated, an electric light or power company, using the building as a means of transmitting into or over it power in dangerous quantities, would also be exonerated. A broad distinction might often exist between the duty of the owner, who had no control over the dangerous current, and the responsibility of the company using the building for the transmission of the dangerous force, and whose duty therefore it was to control it in all proper ways. So, in the very case at bar, the owner, having perhaps little knowledge of the force, and less of methods of its control, might well be held nonliable where dereliction of duty might be charged and consequent liability might be imposed upon the electric company, if, after knowledge of the dangerous condition, it failed promptly to remedy it. But, under the facts here stated, such knowledge was not brought home to it, and it was not chargeable with this knowledge as matter of law.

It should be repeated that in this case there is no question involved of deadly wires lying in a street, to the imminent danger of the traveling public. There is no question of faulty installation or operation. Moreover, the defendant, if chargeable with everything else, could not be charged with the maintenance of deadly wires, since, notwithstanding the fact that the current which they carried caused the death of Pennebaker, and in this sense they proved deadly, a defendant's conduct is to be judged by the ordinary knowledge of mankind, and it is in evidence that 260 volts was the utmost which the wires could have carried, and that the shock of 260 volts is not regarded as at all dangerous to human life. It is not shown, therefore, that the defendant in this case failed in any duty toward the deceased which was imposed upon it by law. If it has not failed in such duty, it is not legally responsible for his death.

4. The court's ruling in rejecting offered evidence, of which appellant complains, was error. This evidence consisted of a report made by the city electrician of the city of Fresno to the board of trustees, showing that the water and light committee of the Fresno city council "to which was referred the matter of having cut-off switches installed for controlling electric currents in case of fire, reported a meeting with the officers of the San Joaquin Power Company, at which they explained that every circuit in town could be controlled from the power house, and that they had made arrangements with the telephone company whereby the fire chief, or city electrician, by asking the chief operator of the telephone company for the power house, would be given the line immediately, and that the current could be shut off quicker and with a great deal more safety in any district of the city by an attendant at the station." This report was by the trustees of the city adopted and placed on file. It was offered to be shown that the city electrician had, upon occasions of fire when the exigencies of the case in his judgment called for it, requested the cutting off of a district, and the request had always been promptly complied with. And it was offered to be shown, moreover, that the company always maintained a competent man at its substation for the purpose of doing this very thing, and that on the occasion of this fire no request so to do had been made. In fact, the electrician arrived at the fire, cut the wires himself, but, unfortunately, a few minutes after Pennebaker met his death. The evidence was rejected apparently upon the theory that it did not amount to a by-law or ordinance or regulation of the city, and so could not operate to change defendant's legal duty toward the deceased. In this view the court was clearly in error. If the converse of the proposition had been sought to be proved, namely, that with the existence of such an understanding the company had failed upon proper request to disconnect the wires, it would not be doubted that it would furnish strong evidence of the company's negligence. Here, if it be conceded that the understanding or arrangement or agreement or convention of the parties did not have the legal effect of a municipal by-law, it was competent nevertheless to show that it was an accepted regulation by the municipal authorities of the duty of defendant in the matter of fires, that it was an agreement which had been put into force, and which had always been lived up to by the company. The evidence would certainly have a strong tendency to show that in this respect the company was not delinquent in the performance of its duty, and for this purpose and to this extent it should have been admitted and weighed.

These considerations cover all the matters called to the attention of the court, and for the reasons hereinbefore given the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Rehearing.

In Bank.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause. It is here decided, among other things, that the superior court erred in sustaining the objection to the defendant's offer to prove the adoption by the board of trustees of the city of Fresno of the following report of the city electrician: "To the Honorable, the Board of Trustees of the City of Fresno: Gentlemen—The undersigned, the city electrician of the city of Fresno, herewith submits for your consideration his report for the month of December 30, 1905, as follows, to wit: 'On the 13th the water and light committee met representatives of the power company in my office to decide on some safe and practical method of handling dangerous wires at fires. It was agreed that by giving the right of way over all others to the telephone lines, to the city electrician and fire chief, that the current could be shut off quicker and with a great deal more safety in any district of the city, by the attendant at the station. As with switches, it would be necessary to pull at least two to kill the line, and it would be necessary to climb the poles to do so. And besides, it is possible that the switch pole might be in range of the fire, in which case the switch would be useless. Respectfully submitted, C. T. McSherry, City Electrician.'"

If this report had been offered by the plaintiffs in support of their case, I think it would have been harmful error to have excluded it, for it would have proved in their favor that the necessity of providing "some safe and practical method of handling" the wires of the defendant carrying dangerous voltage in case of fires had been recognized and considered both by the city authorities and by the defendant, that it had been agreed that a proper measure of precaution in such case would be the cutting off of the circuit (i. e., the district) affected, and that the defendant's plan of cutting out the whole district at the substation had been adopted in preference to the alternative plan of providing local switches within the various districts. This, in connection with abundant evidence that the defendant's agent at the substation, knowing that a fire had started within five or six blocks of the station, and in a district to which its wires extended carrying a voltage which the event proved to have been deadly to a grown man in apparently sound health, had neglected for 40 minutes after the alarm of fire to adopt the precaution suggested by defendant itself and claimed to be the safest and most practicable, would have made out a clear case of highly culpable negligence, unless the adoption of the electrician's report can be construed as a valid agreement exempting the defendant from any obligation to cut off the current from a circuit where a fire might be raging until its agent at the substation should be requested to do so by the city electrician or the chief of the fire department. This indeed seems to be the view of the court, and, as appears from the opinion, is the ground upon which the ruling of the superior court is condemned. It is from this view that I dissent. It is perhaps a just inference from the terms of the report that its author assumed it to be a part of the duty of himself and the fire chief to the public (but not to the defendant) to give prompt notice of the occurrence and locality of the fire to the persons in charge of the defendant's substation; but this did not exempt the defendant from the duty of acting promptly upon the same notice coming from any other person or in any other form. That they had such notice, and neglected to act upon it with reasonable promptitude, was in my opinion amply proved, and it was no error as to the defendant to exclude the electrician's report and proof of its adoption, since it had no tendency to prove that the neglect to shut off the current at the station was excused by the failure of the fire chief and electrician to make the request.

I do not think this court can on the evidence set aside the finding of the trial court as to contributory negligence.

As to the status of a fireman who enters a burning building in a city in the vicinity of other buildings for the purpose of extinguishing the fire or saving life or property, it may be that the liability of the owner for any injury received by him while on the premises is no other or greater than it would be to a mere licensee, but the fireman is not there as a licensee of the owner; he is there in performance of his duty as a public servant under the authority and protection of regulations clearly within the police power of the state, and of superior force to the will of the owner of the premises, and he is entitled to the same indemnity for injuries caused by the culpable negligence of others as if he were on a public street.

As to the comparative harmlessness of less than 500 volts res ipsa loquitur: Either these wires carried more than 500 volts, or less than that voltage, though harmless to most men, is deadly to some—and those few are entitled to protection. And, finally, the argument based upon the serious dangers (of panic, etc.) involved in the cutting out of a circuit on an alarm of fire does not appear to consist very well with the choice of a plan of handling its dangerous wires suggested by the defendant itself and approved by the city trustees, which was nothing less than a means of transmitting prompt notice of the outbreak of a fire to the substation and the cutting out of the circuit.

Upon this view of the case, the question presented by the appeal is not whether it can be held as a matter of law that it was culpable negligence on the part of the defendant to wait for official notice of the danger before adopting any precaution against it, but is, on the other hand, whether it can be held as a matter of law that, under the facts disclosed by the evidence, there was no culpable negligence. Negligence is a question of fact and not of law, except in those cases where upon the facts found or proved there can be no reasonable difference of opinion as to the absence of culpability. In this case the judge of the trial court, performing the function of a jury, has found that there was negligence. I do not think that his conclusion was unreasonable. At least I think the case is deserving of further consideration.

---

14 Cal. App. 396

WILLIAMS v. BRAUN. (Civ. 842.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 31, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1910.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 398*)—PRESENTMENT—NOTICE OF DISHONOR—DILIGENCE—COMMON-LAW RULE.

At common law the maker of a check could not be exonerated by the payee's failure to present the check, or to give notice of its dishonor with due diligence, except so far as he could show injury to himself from such delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1045–1050; Dec. Dig. § 398.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 15*)—"CHECK"—DEFINITION.

A check is but a request to another to pay to the payee the sum named therein out of funds supposed to be deposited with the drawee to meet the check. If the drawee does not comply with the request, the funds are still there and the debtor still owes the money; the drawer of the check being the principal debtor, and not a surety, like an indorser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 418*)—CHECK—NOTICE OF DISHONOR—DELAY—EFFECT—STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 3177, provides that the rights and obligations of a drawer of a bill of exchange are the same as those of a first indorser of any other negotiable instrument, and that a check, so far as notice of its dishonor is concerned, is on the same footing as a bill of exchange. Section 3255, however, declares that a check is subject to all the provisions of the Code concerning bills of exchange, except that the drawer and indorser are exonerated by delay in presentment only so far as the injury suffered thereby, and that an indorsee after apparent maturity, without actual notice of its dishonor, acquires a title equal to that of the indorsee before such period. Held, that since the presentment of a check for payment is the principal thing, and notice of dishonor is but a secondary matter, the drawer of the check, seasonably presented and dishonored, was not released from liability because of the holder's delay in giving notice of dishonor, where the drawer suffered no injury thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

4. PAYMENT (§ 21*)—DISHONORED CHECK.

Where a check delivered in payment for merchandise was presented for payment within a reasonable time and dishonored because of the failure of the bank on which it was drawn, and the drawer suffered no injury because of delay in giving notice of dishonor, the delivery of such check was not payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 86; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by E. H. Williams against George Braun. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, for appellant.
Jos. E. Bien, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover $800.75 for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff's assignor to defendant at his special instance and request. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and this appeal is prosecuted from the said judgment. The only question is as to a check of $700 given by defendant to plaintiff, which defendant claims constituted a payment under the circumstances as disclosed by the record.

On the 28th day of October, 1907, defendant gave to plaintiff's assignor a check on the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company for the sum of $700. The check was presented for payment during banking hours on the 30th day of October, 1907, but was not paid, for the reason that the bank had become insolvent and had just closed its doors a few moments before the check was presented. It is admitted that the check was presented within a reasonable time, or, at least, no question is made as to delay in presenting the check. Written notice of the dishonor of the check was not given to the defendant until December 10, 1907; and the sole contention of defendant is, that by reason of the delay in giving the notice defendant cannot be held liable for the indebtedness to the extent of the check.

The delivery of the goods and the value thereof as alleged were not questioned. No claim is made that defendant suffered any injury by reason of the delay in giving him notice of the dishonor of the check. At common law the maker of a check could not be exonerated by the failure of the payee to present the check, or to give notice of its dishonor, with due diligence, except to the extent that he could show injury to himself consequent upon such delay in the presentment of the check or in giving notice of its dishonor. Such rule has its foundation in reason and justice. The person who is indebted to another and gives a check to his creditor does not, by the mere giving of the check, pay the indebtedness. A check is only a request to another to pay to the payee thereof the sum named therein out of the funds supposed to be deposited to meet such check. If the drawee does not comply with the request, the fund is still there and the debtor still owes the money. He is the principal, and not a surety, like an indorser. It is quite different from the case of an ordinary bill of exchange, or of one who indorses such bill, or even of one who indorses such check. It is said in Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 1587: "But there is an important distinction as to the extent of the legal consequence of neglect and delay in presentment and notice, between bills and checks. It is true that the indorsers of such instruments stand on the same footing in reference to the effect of delay, or failure in making presentment, or giving notice. They are absolutely and entirely discharged, if presentment be not made within a reasonable time, and due notice given. But the drawer of a bill stands upon a different footing from the drawer of a check. In the case of a bill of exchange, negligence, in respect to presentment or notice, absolutely discharges the drawer. But the drawer of a check is regarded as the principal debtor, and the check purports to be made upon a fund deposited to meet it. And the negligence of the holder in not making due presentment, or not giving him notice of dishonor, does not absolutely discharge him from liability, unless he has suffered some loss or injury from such negligence, and then only to the extent of such loss or injury. He is at most entitled only to such presentment and notice as will save him from loss. Were it otherwise, the drawer would profit by a neglect which could do him no injury."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The rule as stated by the author is supported by many authorities cited in the note to the section. The same rule is laid down in Story on Promissory Notes, § 492, where it is said: "In case of a check the drawer is treated as in some sort the principal debtor, and he is not discharged by any laches of the holder in not making due presentment thereof, or in not giving him notice of the dishonor, unless he has suffered some loss or injury thereby, and then only pro tanto."

In Allen et al. v. Kramer et al., 2 Ill. App. 205, the ruling is in accord with the textbooks just quoted. The court there said: "The law is well settled that want of presentment or notice of dishonor of a check does not discharge the drawer, unless he has suffered some loss or injury thereby." See, further, Heartt v. Rhodes, 66 Ill. 351; Stevens v. Park, 73 Ill. 387; Griffin v. Kemp et al., 46 Ind. 173; Henshaw et al. v. Root et al., 60 Ind. 220; Gregg v. George, 16 Kan. 546; Spink & Keyes Drug Co. v. Ryan Drug Co., 72 Minn. 178, 75 N. W. 18, 71 Am. St. Rep. 477.

The rule as above stated is too well settled even for appellant to dispute it, but he claims that it has been changed by Civ. Code, § 3177, which provides: "The rights and obligations of a drawer of a bill of exchange are the same as those of the first indorser of any other negotiable instrument," and that a check, so far as notice of its dishonor is concerned, is on exactly the same footing as a bill of exchange. It must be admitted that the section, standing alone, lends much plausibility to appellant's argument; but we must read the section in the light of other sections of the Code, and consider them together, if such construction can be reasonably given, so as to uphold the well-settled rule as hereinbefore stated. It would require a very plain and mandatory declaration to induce the court to believe that the Legislature intended to sweep aside a rule long established and founded upon principles of justice, and in lieu adopt a rule that would release the debtor who has not paid his creditor upon mere proof that he was not promptly notified of the dishonor of his check, when such notification could not and did not change his condition or his ability to protect his funds in the hands of the drawee, and no injury was occasioned by such delay. Now, while a check is a bill of exchange, payable on demand without interest, the Code provides (section 3255): "A check is subject to all the provisions of this Code concerning bills of exchange except that (1) the drawer and indorsers are exonerated by delay in presentment, only to the extent of the injury which they suffer thereby; (2) an indorsee, after its apparent maturity, but without actual notice of its dishonor, acquires a title equal to that of an indorsee before such period." This section provides that the drawer and indorsers are exonerated by delay in presentment, only to the extent of the injury which they have suffered thereby. It is therefore plain that if the check in this case had not been presented, the defendant would have suffered no injury, and the act of presenting it was not necessary in order to bind defendant. If, therefore, the plaintiff did an unnecessary thing, it seems reasonable that the failure to notify defendant thereof could not release the defendant. The presentment of the check was the principal thing, and it necessarily had to be presented before the defendant could be notified of its presentment and dishonor. If a delay in the presentment could not, under the circumstances of this case, have injured the defendant, it is difficult to see how upon principle he could have been injured by the delaying in giving notice of having done an unnecessary thing. The presentment of the check was the first and material thing, and the giving of notice was only a secondary matter. As defendant owed the amount, and as he has not been injured by the delay in giving notice of dishonor, he cannot claim that the check for $700 was payment. The evident spirit and meaning of section 3255 is that delay in presentment or in giving notice of dishonor exonerates the drawee, only to the extent of the injury he has suffered thereby. This construction is evidently in accord with justice, and with the law which has been long established in regard to a notice of dishonor of checks.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 401

FOLEY et al. v. NORTHERN CALIFORNIA POWER CO. (Civ. 730.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1910.)

1. ELECTRICITY (§ 16*)—INJURIES INCIDENT TO PRODUCTION—CARE REQUIRED.

An electric light and power company on ascertaining the effect of a heavy snow fall on its wires must make an investigation within a reasonable time to ascertain and avert obvious perils caused by down wires, but a delay of about 36 hours in averting a peril through down wires, heavily charged and accessible to its office, is actionable negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

2. ELECTRICITY (§ 14*)—INJURIES INCIDENT TO PRODUCTION—CARE REQUIRED.

The owner of an electric plant must exercise reasonable care in maintaining a system of inspection by which any change in the physical condition of any part of the plant, increasing the danger to persons lawfully in the pursuit of their business or pleasure, may be reasonably discovered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 16*)—DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES—CARE REQUIRED.

The care which the law exacts from one engaged in operating an instrumentality is in proportion to the danger reasonably to be apprehended from its use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-21; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. DEATH (§ 58*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A defendant sued for negligent death has the burden of proving the contributory negligence of decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-78; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

5. DEATH (§ 58*)—ACTION FOR NEGLIGENT DEATH—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where it was shown that decedent killed by electric shock had picked up an uninsulated copper wire detached from a pole, the court must assume that he did not believe and had no reason to believe that the wire carried electricity, because of the presumption that he had such a regard for his life as an ordinary man has.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-78; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

6. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—ACTION FOR DEATH—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in an action for death by contact with a detached live wire, there was evidence that decedent picked up the wire and that there was no occasion for him to do so, either for his own safety or for the safety of others, a finding of contributory negligence was not unsupported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

7. ELECTRICITY (§ 18*)—ACTION FOR DEATH—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In determining whether one who picked up an uninsulated live wire detached from a pole, thereby receiving a fatal electric shock, was guilty of contributory negligence, the jury must consider the reasonableness of his belief that the wire was harmless and the quality of his act, and where one having reason to believe that a wire was harmless aimlessly and needlessly seized it and received a shock, the jury might find that his act was inexcusable, so as to make him responsible for the consequences.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

8. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.

Refusal of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, consisting of declarations by a witness who testified during the trial, is not erroneous, because the newly discovered evidence might have been produced on the trial with reasonable diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

9. NEGLIGENCE (§ 111*)—ACTIONS—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for negligence, it is sufficient under the Code to allege the negligence in general terms, specifying the particular act alleged to be negligently done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 182-184; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

10. NEGLIGENCE (§ 119*)—COMPLAINT—ISSUES.

One suing for negligence must rely on the particular acts of negligence specified in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 200-216; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

11. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—INJURIES—COMPLAINT—ISSUES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for death from electric shock, the complaint specifically alleged that the wires were uninsulated and were charged with electricity so as to endanger the life of any one coming in contact with them, that the wires were of insufficient size and strength for the purposes intended, that defendant negligently failed to remove the wires from the ground to which they had fallen and negligently failed to turn off the current, an instruction that there was no allegation charging defendant with negligent construction or maintenance of any of its crossbars by which it maintained any wires at the point where decedent was killed, and that there was no issue for them as to that, was proper, though evidence as to crossbars as a part of the res gestæ was received without objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

12. ELECTRICITY (§ 16*)—INJURIES INCIDENT TO PRODUCTION—NEGLIGENCE.

The negligence of an electric light and power company in the construction and maintenance of its wires is actionable, where it contributes to an accident, and there is a causal connection between the injury and the faulty construction and maintenance, but where a storm was so violent that it would have broken the wires regardless of their condition, the storm was the sole cause of the breaking of the wires, and whether there was faulty construction and maintenance was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for death by contact with a detached wire, the evidence showed without contradiction that the installation and maintenance of the system were not faulty, and the only theory on which a verdict for plaintiff could be sustained appertained to defendant's negligence in turning on the electric current in the wire and allowing it to remain in its exposed and dangerous position, an instruction that though the installation and maintenance of the wires were inadequate, yet, if the wire became detached by a storm of unexpected force, defendant would not be liable, unless it permitted the wire to remain on the ground for an unreasonable time or failed to turn off the current of electricity after discovering the fact that the wire had fallen on the ground, was not prejudicial, though it implied that negligence in the construction and maintenance of the plant was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

14. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—INJURIES—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for death by electric shock by taking hold of a detached live wire, there was nothing to show that defendant had been employed by an electric company and the proof showed that his only connection with electricity had been in moving a lever one way to turn on electricity and the other way to turn it off, and there was evidence that he had reason to believe that the wire was harmless, an instruction that a man of ordinary prudence, who has lived in a city where electricity is conveyed by power lines, is presumed to know the dangers of electricity, was erroneous, as leading the jury to believe that decedent must be presumed to have known of the danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

15. ELECTRICITY (§ 18*)—INJURIES INCIDENT TO PRODUCTION — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In determining whether a person who was killed by taking hold of an electric wire which had fallen to the ground was guilty of contributory negligence, the test is whether an ordinarily prudent man under the same circumstances would have believed that there was danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Pauline Foley on her own account and as guardian ad litem of her two minor children and others against the Northern California Power Company. From an order denying a new trial after verdict for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

W. P. Johnson, N. A. Gernon, and Donohoe & Freeman, for appellants. Reid & Dozier and Jas. T. Matlock, Jr., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The following statement of the facts, substantially in the language of appellants, is sufficiently full and accurate for an intelligent application of the questions of law involved: The action was brought by Pauline F. Foley on her own account and as guardian ad litem of her two minor children against the defendant for damages on account of negligence in causing the death of James M. Foley, husband of the said Pauline Foley and father of said minor children. The case was tried before a jury and the verdict was for defendant. The appeal is from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The defendant was and is a corporation engaged in the business of generating, selling, and distributing electricity. On the 18th of January, 1907, and prior thereto, it maintained wires over and along the west side of Fourth street, between Park avenue and Douglas street, in the Park addition to the town of Red Bluff, and used said wires for the purpose of producing light and power. There were two unusually heavy snowfalls in that vicinity in January, 1907, the first on the 7th and the second on the 16th of the month. On the morning of the 17th, Charles Hughes, superintendent of defendant corporation for the Red Bluff division, came to town and discovered a number of wires down; all but one being telephone wires. Knowing they might come in contact with power lines, hé cut the telephone wires which were hanging down free from the poles, and caused the electricity to be turned off from the town. He then sent three employés to patrol his lines. They returned in a short time, reporting that they had found a few 110-volt lines down and a number of them badly sagged, but not dangerous. Mr. Hughes then turned the current back on the town and 2,000 volts of electricity were carried into the transformer attached to the southernmost pole on Park avenue. Later he found that the employé who had been sent to patrol the lines, including Park avenue, had patroled them no further than the pumping plant, three blocks north of the Park avenue line. The Sanitary Fruit Company had a packing house and cutting shed and dryer on block N of said Park addition. The season had closed, but James M. Foley was employed to do odd jobs about this property. On Friday afternoon, January 18th, between 12 and 1 o'clock, he left his home to go to work for said company. He was last seen alive between 12 and 2 o'clock of said afternoon within two blocks of and going towards said property. His body was found early in the afternoon of Saturday, the 19th, under a trestle near the said south pole on Fourth street. The wire from this pole was detached and lying coiled up at one end about six feet from his body. It was an uninsulated copper wire about one-tenth of an inch in diameter. His body lay in a little passageway about 4 or 4½ feet high, used by the workmen in going to and from the dryer. His hands were partially closed. The fingers of the glove he wore and the fingers of the hands were burned. The body lay perfectly rigid. There was a hole scooped out by his heels as he fell. Dr. Fife testified: "I judge the moment he touched the wire he received this tremendous shock and the body became rigid and he pitched forward." After Foley was killed, it was ascertained that the 2,000-current wire had become detached from the said southerly pole. The cross-arm was split and hanging down and the wire was broken at the insulator. There is nothing to account for the breaking of the wire except the heavy snowstorm. As the deceased was alone at the time of the fatal affair, the immediate surrounding circumstances are involved in some degree of obscurity. It is, however, reasonably certain that he took hold of the wire—probably to remove it from the path—and he was instantly electrocuted.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

As usual in such cases, two main questions are presented, one relating to the negligence of defendant and the other to the contributory negligence of the deceased. As to the first, it is clear that defendant's manager acted prudently in turning off the current when on the morning of January 17th he ascertained the effects of the storm. But the mistake was made in turning on the current without patroling the line on Fourth street south of Park avenue. It is manifest that if that portion of the line had been explored, the break would have been discovered and the line restored before the current was turned on again. The question is thus presented whether this failure to inspect the line involved herein is imputable to defendant as actionable negligence. In regard to this there can hardly be any difference of opinion. The company was plainly put upon notice by reason of the storm and, in view of the nature of the agency with which it was dealing and the importance of the safety of the citizens, the company could not be held blameless for its failure to ascertain and avert the obvious peril. A reasonable time would, of course, be allowed in which to make an investigation, but the proximity of the scene of the accident and its accessibility to the company's office render the conclusion irresistible that the delay was unnecessary and unreasonable.

The owner or operator of an electric plant is bound to exercise reasonable care in maintaining a system of inspection by which any change in the physical condition of any part of the plant, which would tend to increase the danger to persons lawfully in the pursuit of their business or pleasure, may be reasonably discovered. Bourke v. Butte Electric & Power Co. et al., 33 Mont. 267, 83 Pac. 470. The care which the law exacts from any person, firm or corporation engaged in operating an instrumentality is always in proportion to the degree of danger reasonably to be apprehended from the use of the means employed. Carroll v. Grande Ronde Electric Co., 47 Or. 424, 84 Pac. 391, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290. In the latter case it was held that where defendant permitted a wire charged with a high degree of voltage to remain for nearly 20 hours fastened to a picket fence beside a public highway, in such condition that any living creature coming in contact with the wire must necessarily suffer death, defendant was prima facie guilty of negligence. A similar view is announced and other authorities cited in the case of Tackett v. Henderson Bros. et al., 12 Cal. App. 658, 108 Pac. 151. We have therefore no hesitation in declaring that on the question of the negligence of defendant the conclusion should be in favor of plaintiffs.

As to whether the conduct of the deceased was such as to preclude recovery, there is more room for candid difference of opinion. As we have already observed, no one saw the accident which resulted in Foley's death. Appellants argue that to assume that he was guilty of contributory negligence would be to indulge in mere surmise, a mere guess, when all the facts proven are consistent with an entire absence of negligence on his part and, in truth, they affirmatively show that he is not chargeable with negligence. In this state the rule is that the burden of proving contributory negligence is cast upon the defendant, and it is insisted that no such evidence is to be found in the record. Assuming that the deceased picked up the wire, we must conclude, so it is contended, that he did not believe and had no reason to believe that the wire carried electricity. This follows from the presumption that he had such a regard for his life as the ordinary man has. Texas P. R. Co. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 353, 16 Sup. Ct. 1104, 41 L. Ed. 186; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Landrigan, 191 U. S. 461, 24 Sup. Ct. 137, 48 L. Ed. 262. As to the reason for his believing that the wire carried no electricity, these circumstances are pointed out: The south pole, near which Foley was killed, was the end of the Northern Power Company's line. Foley had been working the preceding season for the Sanitary Fruit Company and the electricity had been shut off, so that it did not enter the transformer in the building. The motor of the company was taken away between the 1st and the 15th days of November, 1906, and after this there was no electricity used by the said company and probably not for a month previous. There was no person to be served with electricity beyond the Sanitary Fruit Company's plant. The Madison place, just beyond and adjoining block N, had used electricity from this line. But no electricity had been used on the Madison place for months. As the deceased had been working about the company's property, he must have been familiar with these facts. Indeed, the local manager of the company testified that Foley worked "at such times as he saw fit. The days were short out in the shed and the sheds were dark when he was working on block N. He couldn't work long hours on account of the absence of light." Seeing the wire detached from the said south pole, he would therefore naturally conclude that it was not charged with electricity, and his efforts to remove it cannot be said to manifest any recklessness or want of due caution on his part. It is urged also that he was an unskilled laborer and the same degree of care could not properly be exacted of him as of one familiar with the dangerous character of electricity. It is true that there is some evidence that he had occasionally turned on and off the motor. But this was in obedience to the direction of the foreman and it was a very simple operation, as the testimony of the foreman shows: "From time to time Mr. Foley turned on the motor under my instructions. Sometimes I would call to him if I was close enough. At other times I would give him a motion of the hand. He turned on the motor just by moving a little lever. All that was necessary to stop the motor was to move the switch." But granting, as stated in Shade v. Bay Counties Power Co., 152 Cal. 12, 92 Pac. 63, that deceased "was not a backwoodsman who had never heard of electric plants and the danger which lurks in live wires, if, indeed, such a person could be found in California," and, assuming that he realized the probable consequences of taking hold of such a wire, still it is urged that he had a right to believe, under the circumstances, that the wire was not a live one and therefore he was not chargeable with negligence. The contention is quite plausible and the jury might have found accordingly, but we are not prepared to say that the freedom of deceased from negligence is so clear that an adverse finding is entirely unsupported. There is evidence that he picked up the wire with both hands, and the inference from all the circumstances detailed is not unreasonable that there was no occasion for him to take hold of the wire either for the safety of himself or of others. There are two considerations to be weighed in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence. The first relates to the rationality of his belief as to the wire being charged and the other to the quality of his act in taking hold of the wire at all. Even if an individual had reason to believe that a wire was harmless, yet if he aimlessly or wantonly or needlessly seized it and thereby received a shock, it would still be competent for a jury to find that his unnecessary and reckless act was inexcusable and to hold him legally responsible for the consequences. Appellants, as we view it, have not given due consideration to this phase of the question.

We cannot hold that the trial court erred in declining to grant a new trial on account of the newly discovered evidence. This was set forth in an affidavit by one John Berg and consisted of the declaration that he saw the detached wire on the day before Foley's death, and that he did not think "it was more than one foot to the east of that part of the tramway where Foley's body was found. There was a bend in the wire and it stood up from the ground in front of said passage at least two feet." But this witness was on the stand during the trial and the case was brought clearly within the rule that, "where newly discovered evidence might have been produced with reasonable diligence, a new trial will not be granted." People v. Urquidas, 96 Cal. 239, 31 Pac. 52. There are other reasons why the foregoing affidavit should not have the effect contended for by appellants, but they need not be considered.

Complaint is made of the following instruction given by the court on the request of defendant: "I charge you that there is no allegation in the amended complaint of plaintiffs in this action charging the defendant with negligent construction or maintenance of any of its cross-arms, by which it maintained any wires at the point where the deceased, James M. Foley, met his death, and this being so, there is no issue before you as to the proper construction or maintenance of any cross-arms." It is true that plaintiff made a general charge of negligence on the part of defendant and followed this by particular specifications, among which no reference is made to the cross-arms. The instances of negligence are pointed out as follows: "That said wires were not insulated and were so heavily charged with electricity as to endanger the life of any person who should come in contact with them. * * * That the said wire was of insufficient size and strength for the purpose for which it was used by the defendant. That the defendant negligently failed to remove the said wire from the ground to which it had fallen and negligently failed to turn off the current of electricity with which said wire was charged, and negligently and wrongfully permitted the said wire, heavily charged with electricity as aforesaid, to remain upon the ground for an unreasonable time after the same had fallen from the pole to which it had been attached." It is further alleged that the death of Foley "was caused by the negligent acts of defendant as aforesaid." The rule undoubtedly is, as stated in Stevenson v. Southern Pacific Company, 102 Cal. 148, 34 Pac. 620: "As a result of the application of these principles to code pleading in cases of negligence and to others of kindred character, it is held in this state, and in nearly all of the United States, that it is sufficient to allege the negligence in general terms, specifying, however, the particular act alleged to have been negligently done." The particular acts were specified here and upon these plaintiffs were compelled to rely.

The instruction was in line with the familiar principle requiring a correspondence between the allegations and the proof, and it does not furnish ground for reversal. It is true that some evidence as to the crossbars was received without objection from defendant, but it related particularly to the appearance of the wire attached to the pole nearest the body of the deceased and constituted a part of the res gestæ. It cannot be said that defendant's failure to object to the recital of the surrounding circumstances must be held as an acquiescence in the theory that the complaint charged negligence in the construction and maintenance of the said crossbars.

Instruction No. 5, requested by the defendant and given by the court, is in the following language: "Even though the installation and maintenance of the said power line in question were inadequate, insecure, and insufficient, still, if the wire which caused the death of James M. Foley, if his death was caused by the coming in contact with such wire, became detached or broken by reason of a storm or snowstorm of unusual or unexpected force or severity, still the defendant could not be held liable for negligence, unless it allowed and permitted said wire to remain upon the ground for an unreasonable length of time, or failed to turn off the current of electricity after the discovery of the fact that the wire had become detached and had fallen to the ground." The contention of appellants is that this instruction necessarily implies that negligence in the construction and maintenance of the plant is entirely immaterial, although the jury may have believed that a plant properly constructed would have successfully resisted the storm and remained intact. As a proposition of law, this would be manifestly incorrect, as a negligent construction or maintenance of the wire, if it contributed to the accident, would impose liability upon the defendant. It is equally true that there must be some causal connection between the injury and the faulty construction or maintenance. If the storm was so violent that it would have broken the wire regardless of its condition, then the storm could be said to be the sole cause of the breaking of the wire, and, if the jury so believed, it would be immaterial if they also found that there was fault in the construction and maintenance. This is really what was intended by the instruction, and while not very happily expressed and subject to the criticism of uncertainty, the jury must have so understood it, in view of the other instructions supplementary to and qualifying it. But, if abstractly considered, it should be held erroneous, plaintiff cannot complain, for the reason that there is no evidence of any imperfection in the construction or maintenance of said wire. The evidence shows without conflict that the installation and maintenance of the system were not faulty in any respect and the court might have so instructed the jury without prejudice to plaintiffs. Indeed, the only theory upon which a verdict for plaintiffs could be sustained appertains to defendant's negligence in turning on the electric current in the wire in question and allowing it to remain for such a length of time in its exposed and dangerous position.

Instruction 17 presents a more serious problem. Therein the jury were instructed that "a man of ordinary prudence and understanding, who has lived in a city, neighborhood, or community where electricity is conveyed by means of power and pole lines for purposes of heat, light, and power and where electric power transmission lines are installed and maintained, and who has been around electrical power lines, transmission lines, service lines, machinery and appliances, is presumed to know the powers, dangers, and potentialities of electricity and electric power." If we are to indulge such a presumption, it must be in opposition to what we know to be a fact. Neither the ordinary nor, probably, the extraordinary man knows the "powers and potentialities of electricity." But the instruction as to this feature is not so important as the direction in reference to the dangers of electricity, since the latter is a vital element in the determination of the question of the "contributory negligence" of the deceased. In the light of the undisputed facts, the instruction of the court would be understood by the jury as a declaration that Foley must be presumed to have known "the powers, dangers, and potentialities of electricity and electric power." From this the inference would reasonably follow that he must have known that if he came in contact with a live wire of the voltage in question, death would result. Is this not an invasion of the province of the jury? Is it a matter of such general knowledge that the ordinary man who lives in a neighborhood where electric plants are operated and who has been around the machinery and appliances, however infrequently and whatever his business there, may be declared as a matter of fact to be acquainted with the "dangers and potentialities" of electricity? This does not seem to be one of the unquestioned data of general observation and knowledge that a court is permitted to declare to a jury. Probably the vast majority of such men do understand and appreciate the danger, but, under our system of procedure, the plaintiffs had a right to have the jury determine whether the deceased knew the danger of the electric current. As far as Foley's actual knowledge of electricity is concerned, the record is meager. There is nothing to show that he was ever employed by an electric light company and the only connection of his work with the current was in moving a lever one way to turn the electricity on and the other way to turn it off. Nevertheless, the jury were virtually instructed that they must find that he knew the danger of coming in contact with the current. In Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 Pac. 108, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114, it is held that "the mere fact that a dangerous agency is used raises no presumption that the public know enough of its nature to avoid the danger which may arise from its use." It is true, as suggested by respondent, that, since said decision was rendered, we have made great progress in the use and knowledge of electricity and the instruction condemned therein is more objectionable than the one before us, but, after all, the evidence does not show that Foley had any greater knowledge of electricity than the general public. Again, it is not improbable that the jury made a wrong and prejudicial application of the instruction to the act of the deceased in taking hold of the wire, ignoring the consideration of whether he had reason to believe that the wire was not charged with electricity. It is easy to see how, in view of the peculiar facts, the jury may have concluded that the court intended that the presumption of knowledge of the danger would accompany this act of the deceased. At any rate, we think the determination of the knowledge of the danger on the part of the deceased should have been left to the jury without any direction from the court unfavorable to plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs requested this instruction: "If you find that James M. Foley, when going to or coming from his work found a wire in his way, and that he did not believe said wire was carrying a current of electricity and that an ordinarily prudent man in his situation at the time would not have believed that said wire was carrying a current of electricity, then if you find that he placed his hands on said wire, in an endeavor to get it out of his way, he was not guilty of negligence." The court modified the proposed instruction by adding after "believed" the following words, "or suspected, and would have had no reason to believe or suspect." The contention is that an ordinarily prudent man might have had some suspicion that the wire was charged and yet not be guilty of negligence if he ignored the suspicion and took hold of the wire. The test that seems to be generally recognized is whether an ordinarily prudent man, under the same circumstances, would have believed there was danger. It is probable that the jury would not be misled by the introduction of the additional element of suspicion, but we think the modification might well have been omitted. As a matter of fact, instruction No. 21, as given by the court is in exact harmony with the proposed instruction No. 20, and, we think, states the rule correctly. We have examined the other assignments of error, but find nothing therein demanding specific notice.

We think a new trial should be granted, and the order denying the motion is therefore reversed.

---

14 Cal. App. 481

In re CHADBOURNE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 748.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 9, 1910.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 22*)—APPOINTMENT—SPECIAL ADMINISTRATOR.

The appointment of a special administrator is not intended to bring about a general administration of the estate, the administrator's powers being limited, and should not be extended without necessity, or continue longer than is reasonably necessary to secure the appointment of an administrator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—APPOINTMENT — SPECIAL ADMINISTRATOR — STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1411, provides that when an executor or administrator is suspended or removed, the superior court or a judge thereof may appoint a special administrator to collect and take charge of the estate, and to exercise such powers as may be necessary in the preservation of the estate, or he may direct the public administrator to take charge thereof. Section 1426 provides that if all the executors or administrators die or become incapable, or the power and authority of all of them is revoked, the court must issue letters of administration, with the will annexed, or otherwise, to the widow or next of kin, or others, in the same order and manner as directed in relation to original letters of administration. Held, that when executors were removed for failure to give notice to creditors for several months after appointment, the court had power, pending an appeal from such removal order, to appoint a special administrator under section 1411, and also to proceed under section 1426 to the hearing of a petition for the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed; but the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a general administrator with the will annexed, until the order of removal had become final.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 259; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Edwin Chadbourne, deceased. From an order appointing Dennie May Chadbourne, surviving wife of deceased, special administratrix and appointing J. W. Warboys, administrator of the estate, pending an appeal from an order revoking the appointment of Mrs. Chadbourne and F. A. Chadbourne executors of the estate, F. A. Chadbourne and others appeal. Reversed in part, and remanded for further proceedings.

T. T. C. Gregory, for appellants. Paul C. Harlan, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from an order appointing an administrator with the will annexed, pending the appeal from an order revoking the appointment of the executors of said will.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On December 15, 1909, Dennie May Chadbourne, surviving wife of deceased, filed her petition in which it was alleged that F. A. Chadbourne and she, herself, had been duly appointed executors of the will of deceased; that her co-executor had neglected for two months to give notice to creditors of the estate as had been ordered, and that she did not give notice, "because she relied upon the assurance of said F. A. Chadbourne that the said notice had been given"; that, "subject to the revocation by the court of the letters testamentary issued as aforesaid to the said F. A. Chadbourne, petitioner is willing to, and will, upon such revocation being made, resign her aforesaid appointment as such executor." She prayed that a day be appointed for the said F. A. Chadbourne "to show cause why his said appointment and letters as executor shall not be revoked"; and that until the hearing the powers of the said F. A. Chadbourne be suspended and "your petitioner be appointed special administrator of said estate, and upon the hearing petitioner be appointed administrator."

The court found that F. A. Chadbourne caused directions to be given that notice to creditors should be published in the Solano County Courier, on the day the court ordered notice to be published, and that Dennie May Chadbourne believed such notice had been published and did not know to the contrary, until just before the filing of her petition; that "no damage accrued to the estate by reason of the neglect to give notice to the creditors other than such as may arise from delay in the administration of the estate." On January 14, 1910, the court gave its judgment, which was filed January 20th, that the letters of said executors be revoked, and appointing Mrs. Chadbourne special administrator. On January 14, 1910, respondent, J. W. Warboys, filed his petition for appointment as administrator of said estate, as the nominee of Mrs. Chadbourne, and on the 17th of January appellants, Joseph R. Chadbourne and Grant Chadbourne, brothers of deceased, filed their petition praying for letters of administration with the will annexed of said deceased, and on the same day filed their petition for appointment as special administrators pending the hearing of said petitions. On January 31st, F. A. Chadbourne, Joseph R. Chadbourne, and Grant Chadbourne filed their opposition to the appointment of said Warboys and on the same day F. A. Chadbourne filed notice of appeal from the judgment entered January 20th, revoking his letters and appointing Dennie May Chadbourne special administrator. On January 31st, the petition of Warboys for letters, the opposition thereto, and the petition of Joseph and Grant Chadbourne for letters came on for hearing and evidence, written and oral, was introduced. Among other things, the court found: That the authority of said executors, F. A. and Dennie M. Chadbourne, was, on January 14th, revoked; that on that day (there being no executor) said Warboys filed his petition for letters "at the request and upon the appointment of the said Dennie May Chadbourne, * * * and said request and appointment were duly and regularly filed herein on January 14, 1910"; that on January 17th Joseph and Grant Chadbourne, brothers of deceased, filed their petition for special letters and also for letters with the will annexed; that "the said Dennie May Chadbourne and said J. W. Warboys are competent to administer said estate," and that the said Dennie "is competent to appoint, designate, and nominate any other person to administer the said estate in her stead; but said Dennie May Chadbourne is not entitled to the appointment as administrator with the will annexed in said estate"; that said Dennie and said F. A. Chadbourne "were removed and their power and authority revoked, as said executors, solely for the reason of their neglect to give notice to creditors for more than two months after their appointment as such executors; that there will be no delay in granting letters of administration with the will annexed to said estate; that the making of the order therefor will not be likely to be protracted; and that said estate will not suffer either loss or damage for the want of some person with authority to take charge of and care for it under special letters of administration; that said J. W. Warboys is entitled to letters of administration with the will annexed herein; and that neither the said Grant Chadbourne nor the said Joseph R. Chadbourne is entitled to either letters of administration with the will annexed, or special letters of administration herein." Judgment was accordingly made bearing date February 2, 1910, and filed February 8, 1910, from which the Chadbournes, on March 4, 1910, duly gave notice of appeal.

Appellant's principal point is that, pending the appeal of F. A. Chadbourne from the order removing him as executor, he was suspended from office, and, while it was within the power of the court to appoint a special administrator to act during such suspension, the court had no power to appoint an administrator with the will annexed, until such order of removal became final. Reliance is placed upon section 1411 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides as follows: "When * * * an executor or administrator * * * is suspended or removed, the superior court, or a judge thereof, must appoint a special administrator to collect and take charge of the estate * * * and to exercise such powers as may be necessary for the preservation of the estate, or he may direct the public administrator to take charge of the estate."

Section 1426 of the same Code reads: "If all the executors or administrators die, or become incapable, or the power and authority of all of them is revoked, the court must issue letters of administration, with the will annexed or otherwise, to the widow or next of kin, or others, in the same order and manner as is directed in relation to original letters of administration. * * *"

The court had the power, under section 1411, to appoint a special administrator to take charge of the estate (Estate of Crozier, 65 Cal. 332, 4 Pac. 109); and it also had the power, under section 1426, to proceed to the hearing of a petition for the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed. The appointment of a special administrator is not intended to bring about a general administration of the estate; his powers are limited by the section, and, while they may, by order of the court, be made to embrace duties not strictly within the letter of the statute, under the pressure of necessity made to appear, the appointment should not continue longer than is reasonably necessary to secure the appointment of an administrator, who would have all the powers given executors. We do not doubt the power of the court to proceed under section 1426 (In re Pina, 112 Cal. 14, 44 Pac. 332; Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 Pac. 1078), unless, as is contended, the appeal from its order removing the executors stayed all proceedings to appoint a general administrator.

In Re Moore, 86 Cal. 72, 24 Pac. 846, the precise question was before the court and it said: "Pending the appeal of Thomas W. Moore from the order removing him, he was suspended from office, and it was within the power of the court to appoint a special administrator to act during the period of suspension, but not to appoint a general administrator until such order or removal became final." This case is cited in More v. More, 127 Cal. 460, 463, 59 Pac. 823, 824, and in Guardianship of Van Loan, 142 Cal. 429, 76 Pac. 39. The proposition decided in 86 Cal. supra, was approved and applied to the case of the removal of a guardian in the Van Loan Case. Mr. Justice Angellotti gives what appears to be the reason for the rule, namely, that "the question as to who shall be the general administrator of the estate is involved in the appeal, and proceedings thereon are stayed by such appeal."

The notice of the appeal from the judgment removing the executors was filed January 31, 1910, and although the petition for the appointment of Warboys was heard on that day, the order appointing him was not made until February 2d, following. Respondents' claim that the appointment was made prior to the appeal is not borne out by the record.

A question is raised as to the sufficiency of the nomination of Warboys by Mrs. Chadbourne and also as to whether she was entitled to make a nomination. It is not necessary to decide the point, inasmuch as we must hold, in view of the decisions above cited, that the court was without authority to appoint a general administrator.

The record does not disclose the outcome of Mrs. Chadbourne's appointment as special administrator by the same order which revoked her letters as executor. Just how it came about that the court removed her as executor for cause, and yet appointed her by the same order to take charge of the estate, does not appear. Nor does it appear whether she gave the bond required and qualified. It would rather be inferred from the record that the court and counsel treated that part of the order as a nullity. Indeed, section 1511 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires the court, upon the neglect of an executor for two months after his appointment to give notice to creditors, to revoke his letters and "appoint some other person in his stead." However, this feature of the proceedings does not affect the main question.

In the judgment appointing J. W. Warboys administrator, the court denied the petition of Joseph R. and Grant Chadbourne to be appointed special administrators and also administrators with the will annexed. The appeal is from the whole of the judgment. The denial of the petition of the Chadbourne brothers doubtless was because, in the opinion of the court, Mrs. Chadbourne, as widow, had the superior right to administer or to nominate a person in her stead. As the appointment of her nominee was without authority, it seems to us that the question of appointing a special administrator pending the appeal from the judgment revoking the letters of the executors, should go back unembarrassed by any proceedings now here on this appeal.

The judgment dated February 2, 1910, and filed February 8, 1910, is reversed, with directions to the court to take such further proceedings in the matter as it may be advised.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 442

PEOPLE v. DANFORD. (Cr. 168.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 3, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1910.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 79*)—FORGERY OF TELEGRAM—STATUTES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction on an information framed under Pen. Code, § 474, and charging defendant with willfully delivering to another a message falsely purporting to have been received by telegraph knowing the same to be false, and with the intent to injure and deceive the person to whom it was delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 79*) — FORGERY OF TELEGRAMS — INJURY FROM FORGERY.

It is not necessary that the person intended to be injured or deceived by a forged telegraph message in violation of Pen. Code, § 474, should be actually injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

3. JURY (§ 5*)—JURY LIST—APPORTIONMENT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 206, requiring that the list of jurors be selected from the different townships or wards of the respective counties in proportion to the number of inhabitants therein, as near as can be estimated by the persons making the list, is directory, and, in the absence of any abuse of discretion, the action of the judges of the superior court in making the selection should not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 129*) — JOINING OF COUNTS—OFFENSE RELATING TO SAME TRANSACTION.

Under Pen. Code, § 954, providing that an information may charge different offenses under separate counts, but that they must all relate to the same transaction, an information charging in one count forgery of a telegraph message, and in a second count an attempt to obtain money by false pretenses, based on the same transaction, was not demurrable as stating more than one offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 414–418; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

5. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 41*) — CONFORMITY OF INFORMATION TO PRELIMINARY COMPLAINT.

Where defendant was committed by a magistrate upon an affidavit charging forgery of a telegraph message, in violation of Pen. Code, § 474, he cannot be charged in the information with attempting to obtain money under false pretenses though it grew out of the same transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 152, 163–169; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—HARMLESS ERROR—DEFECTS IN INFORMATION.

Where an information sufficiently charges the commission of the offense for which defendant was committed by a magistrate on an affidavit of complaint, that the information also charges another offense arising out of the same transaction, but not included in the preliminary complaint and commitment, was not ground for reversal, especially where the latter count was dismissed at the commencement of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3101–3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

7. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 138*) — MOTION TO SET ASIDE—GROUNDS—FORM.

A motion to set aside an information, on the ground that the second count charges defendant with an offense for which he was not committed, should be directed against the second count alone, and not to the entire information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 472; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—HARMLESS ERROR—DISMISSAL OF COUNT—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

Whether one of the counts of an information was or was not for an offense for which defendant was not committed by a magistrate, defendant had no ground of complaint to its dismissal on motion of the district attorney, leaving the information sufficient to charge the offense for which he was committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3101; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

9. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 144*) — MOTION TO DISMISS—"DISMISSAL."

The dismissal of a count of an information is not an amendment thereof, but is in the nature of an election to proceed on the remaining counts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 488; Dec. Dig. § 144.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2105–2106; vol. 8, p. 7639.]

10. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 144*)—MOTION TO DISMISS—DISMISSAL OF COUNT—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1019, providing that a plea of guilty puts in issue every material allegation of the information, the dismissal of one count after the plea is entered, leaving another count, the allegations of which are complete and independent of the dismissed count, does not leave the case without issue joined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 488; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

11. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—LANGUAGE OF STATUTE — FORGERY — FACTS EXTRINSIC TO INSTRUMENT.

An information for forgery, which charged the offense in the language of the statute (Pen. Code, § 474), without averment of extrinsic matter showing in what manner the forged message deceived the complaining witness, is not defective, as it cannot be said that the instrument, if genuine, would not have efficacy to or that it could not injure or deceive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 289–294; Dec. Dig. § 110;* Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 61, 64.]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—HARMLESS ERROR—VARIANCE.

Where the information charged the forgery of a telegram, setting out a copy of the message, and on trial an identical copy was offered in evidence, in connection with the rules and regulations of the telegraph company without objection by the defendant, the variance involved in admitting the rules and regulations in evidence was without prejudice to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3101–3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 552*)—EVIDENCE—INCRIMINATING CIRCUMSTANCES—IDENTITY OF DEFENDANT AS PARTY AT TELEPHONE.

In a trial for forgery of a telegraph message, where there was evidence tending to show that some one, claimed by the state to have been defendant, telephoned to the telegraph office, asking that the message be returned to him for correction, but the employés of the telegraph company failed to identify defendant as the person who telephoned, circumstantial evidence was admissible to prove such identity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1257, 1259–1262; Dec. Dig. § 552.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—TRIAL—PREJUDICIAL CONDUCT OF JUDGE.

At the trial of an information for forgery of a telegraph message, defendant, after a colloquy, said, "I desire to assign here prejudicial error," to which the court replied: "That is for the Supreme Court to say. You take your exception to the adverse ruling, and you have your record made." Held, that the statement made by the court was not prejudicial misconduct.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3125; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—ACTION BY COURT.

Alleged misconduct of the district attorney was cured where the court, on its own motion, instructed the jury that they should disregard those acts of the district attorney which defendant considered offensive and prejudicial, especially where it was apparent from the verdict that the jury was not influenced by such misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

16. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS — INSTRUCTION COVERED BY THOSE GIVEN.

Where the jury have been fully and fairly instructed upon a point covered by a requested instruction, its refusal is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George R. Davis, Judge.

W. J. Danford was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Grove E. Walter, L. L. Cardwell, and W. J. Danford, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with willfully delivering to another a message falsely purporting to have been received by telegraph, knowing the same to be false, and with the intent to injure and deceive the one to whom it was delivered. The information was as follows:

"The said W. J. Danford is accused by the district attorney of and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California, by this information, of a felony committed as follows: That the said W. J. Danford on the 23d day of December, 1909, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, knowingly, and with intent to deceive, injure and defraud one C. J. O'Keefe, deliver and cause to be delivered to C. J. O'Keefe a certain false and forged message, which said false and forged message is in the following words and figures, to wit, 'Dated Telluride, Colo., Dec. 22, '09. To C. J. O'Keefe, Los Angeles, Calif. —Bonds inquired about will be redeemed at par 5,000 dollars and interest upon maturity, May, 1910. I. E. Brown, Cashier;' and which said false and forged message then and there falsely purported to have been received by telegraph and from a telegraph office and from one I. E. Brown, cashier; that in truth and in fact the said message was false and forged, and had not been received by telegraph, and had not been received from any telegraph office, and had not been received from I. E. Brown, cashier; and that he, the said W. J Danford, then and there well knew that said message was false and forged and had not been received by telegraph, and had not been received from any telegraph office, and had not been received from I. E. Brown, cashier—contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

A number of alleged errors are assigned as grounds for reversal, among which it is urged that the verdict is not justified by the evidence.

1. The evidence tended to show that the defendant, who was at the time engaged in the practice of law in the city of Los Angeles, had in his possession a $5,000 bond, which purported to have been issued by the San Miguel Gas, Light & Power Corporation of Telluride, Colo.; that defendant desired to negotiate a loan of $1,000 upon this bond as security, and to that end called upon C. J. O'Keefe, the complaining witness, in said city of Los Angeles. In the course of the conversation defendant gave to O'Keefe the names of certain alleged bond brokers in Denver and suggested that he (O'Keefe) wire them as to the value of the bond. On the day following O'Keefe called at defendant's office, where, at O'Keefe's suggestion, it was arranged that a telegram signed by him (O'Keefe) should be sent to the First National Bank, Telluride, Colo., the expense thereof to be borne by defendant. Thereupon, a telegram was prepared as follows: "First National Bank, Telluride, Colo. Please advise as to value of five thousand dollar bond, No. 32, Series A, issued by San Miguel, Gas, Light & Power Corporation, of date May first, 1900, due 1910, signed by E. W. Weed, Prest., and Jas Herman, Secty., and is same likely to be paid when due. [Signed] C. J. O'Keefe." Defendant telephoned for a messenger boy, and after writing upon the telegraphic blank containing the message that the expense of transmitting the message was to be charged to him and the answer delivered at his office, gave it to the messenger, who delivered it to the Western Union Telegraph office. Shortly after this message was delivered to said office, some one claiming to be, and who gave the name of defendant, phoned the telegraph office, advising them not to transmit the message, but to return it to defendant's office. Pursuant to such instructions, the message was not transmitted, but the same was returned to the office of defendant and delivered to him. On the following day O'Keefe called at defendant's office, in response to a phone call from defendant, at which time defendant gave him what purported to be a reply to the message which O'Keefe had written and which he supposed had been transmitted to the First National Bank, Telluride, Colo. This reply was inclosed in a sealed envelope of the Western Union Telegraph

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Company and addressed to C. J. O'Keefe. It contained a telegram in the words and figures following: "Dated Telluride, Colo., December 22, 09. To C. J. O'Keefe, Los Angeles. Calif. Bond inquired about will be redeemed at par, 5000 dollars and interest, upon maturity, May, 1910. [Signed] I. E. Brown, Cashier." O'Keefe at the time believed the message to be genuine and sent in reply to the one prepared by him, which he supposed had been transmitted. Nevertheless, he later made some inquiry at the telegraph office, and learned that no such message had been received or delivered through the Western Union telegraph office. It further appeared at the trial that I. E. Brown, whose name purported to be signed to the telegram, never signed the same, that the bond was valueless, and that there was no such corporation as San Miguel Gas, Light & Power Company of Telluride. O'Keefe did not make the loan, and sustained no loss or injury by reason of the alleged deception.

Appellant made no attempt to controvert these facts, but based his defense upon the claim that he was an innocent victim of another, one Jeffrey Ryan, who, as a client, employed the defendant to negotiate a loan for him upon the bond, assigning certain reasons for not being known in the transaction himself. The testimony of defendant and the inferences to be drawn therefrom are, in effect, that Ryan personated defendant in intercepting and by telephone recalling the message signed by O'Keefe and addressed to the First National Bank at Telluride, and that Ryan forged the telegram, made the basis of the prosecution, and gave it to defendant, claiming that it had been delivered at defendant's office in the absence of the latter and received by Ryan, who left it with defendant for delivery to O'Keefe; that defendant, believing it to be genuine and in answer to O'Keefe's telegram to the First National Bank, gave it to him when he went to defendant's office in response to a telephone call requesting him to do so. Ryan did not appear at the trial, nor was it made to appear that any one other than defendant had ever seen or heard of such a person. Evidently the jury did not believe the defendant to be the victim, as he claimed, of Jeffrey Ryan, and, as they had a right to do, discredited his testimony in this regard. Eliminating his explanation, there can be no question but what the testimony justified the finding of the jury that at the time defendant delivered the message to O'Keefe he knew the same was forged and was not a telegraph message received from a telegraph office, and that he committed the act with the intent to deceive and defraud O'Keefe of his money. Indeed, it is impossible to conceive of the jury reaching a verdict other than that of guilty. The fact that O'Keefe subsequently learned the true facts and did not part with his money is immaterial. People v. Chadwick, 143 Cal. 116, 76 Pac. 884.

2. Defendant interposed a challenge to the panel of jurors; the court denied the challenge and appellant assigns the ruling as error. One of the grounds of the challenge, and the only one now urged by appellant, is that in selecting the names of jurors suitable and competent to serve as jurors, the statute (section 206, Code Civ. Proc.), requires that such lists shall be selected from the different wards or townships of the respective counties in proportion to the number of inhabitants therein, as nearly as the same can be estimated by the persons making such lists. The record discloses that at the time the list of jurors were selected Catalina township, in said county, contained 25 inhabitants competent and in every way qualified to act as jurors in the trial of cases in the superior court of said county during the ensuing year, but that no one of the 25 inhabitants of said township was selected and included in said list of jurors. In our judgment, such fact standing alone affords no just ground for challenge. The section (206 Code Civ. Proc.) does not require jurors to be selected from every ward and township in the county, but from the different wards and townships therein, the total number of jurors required to be apportioned in accordance with the estimated number of inhabitants in each ward or township, as nearly as the same may be estimated. Whether or not the number of inhabitants of Catalina township, when compared with the number of inhabitants in the other townships of the county, was sufficiently large to entitle it to representation on the jury list, is not made to appear. Conceding such fact, however, to have been established, nevertheless it cannot be said the persons (in this case, a majority of the judges of the superior court) whose duty it was to make the lists of the names of jurors failed to select them from the different townships in proportion to the number of inhabitants therein, as nearly as such persons could estimate the same. In our judgment, the provision of the section in this regard is directory, and, in the absence of an abuse of discretion in making such estimate, the action of those whose duty it was to make the selection should not be disturbed. No such abuse is made to appear, and there was no error in denying defendant's challenge. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 194, 48 Pac. 75.

3. In addition to charging the defendant with the offense of which he was convicted, the information, by a second count, as it was originally filed, charged him with another offense, that "of attempting to obtain money by false and fraudulent representations and pretenses," which was based upon the same act and transaction set forth in the first count. A demurrer interposed to the information upon the ground that it stated more than one offense was overruled. There was no error in this ruling. Section 954, Pen. Code, provides that "the * * * information may charge different offenses, * * * under separate counts, but they must all relate to the same act, transaction, or event. * * *" Both counts in stating the offense with which defendant was charged related to and were predicated upon the same act and transaction, and, hence, the information was not subject to demurrer upon the ground specified. Section 1004, Pen. Code. The case of People v. Clement, 35 Pac. 1022[1] has no application, for the reason that section 954, Pen. Code, as it stood prior to the amendment of 1905, provided that the information should charge but one offense.

4. Defendant also made a motion to set aside the information upon the ground that he had not been legally committed by a magistrate, which motion was denied. It appears that in the affidavit of complaint filed with the justice of the peace defendant was charged with a violation of section 474, Pen. Code, as set forth in the first count of the information, and for which offense only he was by the magistrate committed; hence, it must be conceded the district attorney had no power to charge defendant with the offense specified in the second count thereof. People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 596, 76 Pac. 490. The charge set forth in the first count, however, was not subject to this infirmity, and therefore was not subject to the objection. To be effective the motion should, in our judgment, have been directed to the second count alone, and not to the entire information. Moreover, conceding the ruling to have been erroneous, it clearly appears that defendant's substantial rights were not prejudiced thereby, for the reason that, at the commencement of the trial, the district attorney moved the court to dismiss the second count, which motion was by the court, over defendant's objection granted.

5. There was no error in granting the motion to dismiss the second count. As the charge set forth therein was unwarranted by the commitment of the magistrate, it was mere surplusage and had no proper place in the information. "When a sufficient information charging the offense for which he stood committed remained, the accused could in no sense be injured by the action of the district attorney or the court in striking out such surplusage." Ex parte Danford, 110 Pac. 692; Commonwealth v. Tuck, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 356. The dismissal was not an amendment, but in the nature of an election to proceed against defendant for the offense charged in the remaining count alone. Wooster v. State, 55 Ala. 217. Even had the offense charged in the second count been authorized by the commitment, defendant would not be in a position to complain that he was relieved from prosecution thereon. His rights could not be prejudiced by such action.

6. Neither is there any merit in appellant's contention that the dismissal after plea had been entered left the case without issue joined. Defendant's plea of not guilty put in issue every material allegation of the information. Section 1019, Pen. Code. The allegations of the first count were complete and in no wise dependent upon those contained in the second. The plea of not guilty to the allegations stating the offense for which defendant was committed was not affected by the dismissal. Ex parte Danford, supra.

7. Appellant further contends that the information is fatally defective by reason of the fact that it does not contain averments of extrinsic matter showing in what manner the forged message deceived the complaining witness. An answer to this contention is that the information charged the offense in the language of the statute, and in People v. Chadwick, 143 Cal. 116, 76 Pac. 884, involving a like offense, this was held sufficient, the court saying: "The information charges in the language of the section, and it cannot be said that the instrument, if genuine, would not have efficacy to, or that it could not injure, defraud, or deceive."

8. It is insisted there was a variance between the telegram offered in evidence and the forged message set out in the information. The record discloses no basis for such contention. The copy of the telegram set out in the information was identical with that offered in evidence. In addition to the message, however, there was read in evidence, without objection on the part of defendant, the printed rules and conditions of the telegraph company under which it receives and transmits telegraphic messages. In no event, conceding the alleged error, were the rights of defendant prejudiced by such wholly immaterial evidence.

9. A line of testimony was introduced, over defendant's objection, tending to show that a short time after the telegram signed by O'Keefe had been received at the telegraph office, defendant by telephoning to the office intercepted it and caused the message to be returned to him at his office. It is insisted that such evidence was erroneously admitted, for the reason that the employés of the telegraph office with whom the conversation was had over the telephone did not recognize defendant, and could not say that it was defendant who ordered the sending of the telegram stopped and returned to his office for correction. While there was no direct evidence that defendant was the person who gave the instructions, the circumstances disclosed by the record strongly point to him as the person who described the telegram as one signed by O'Keefe, addressed to the Bank at Telluride, Colo., marked "Charge W. J. Danford," and ordered it returned to him for correction, and it was so returned. There can be no doubt as to the admissibility of such line of testimony. The fact in dispute was susceptible of proof by circumstantial evidence.

---

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 101 Cal. xvii.

10. Appellant insists that the court was guilty of misconduct whereby his rights were prejudiced. During the trial, and in response to defendant's objection to a question asked by the district attorney, the court said: "Upon the avowal (of the district attorney) that the fact sought to be proven will be connected and corroborated by circumstances, the objection will be overruled." Whereupon, defendant said: "I desire to assign here prejudicial error." The court then said: "That is for the Supreme Court to say. You take your exception to the adverse ruling, and you have your record made." It is apparent from the above statement of the proceedings that the remark of the court was prompted by a desire on its part to aid defendant's attorney in obtaining a proper record for review on appeal, by suggesting that he except to the ruling of the court in admitting the evidence, rather than to assign it as prejudicial error. In no sense can the statement made by the court be regarded as misconduct.

11. A number of assignments of error are predicated upon the alleged misconduct of the district attorney, all of which, after careful examination, are found to be of such a trivial character as to merit no discussion. Moreover, the court, of its own motion, instructed the jury that they should disregard what defendant considered offensive and prejudicial action on the part of the district attorney. Suffice it to say that, in view of the evidence, it clearly appears that the verdict of the jury could in no wise have been controlled or affected by the alleged misconduct.

12. Defendant requested the court to give to the jury an instruction as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that the defendant did not know the contents of the envelope, namely, defendant's Exhibit B (the alleged forged telegram), which complaining witness testified that the defendant delivered to him, before or at the time of delivering it, you must find the defendant not guilty"; which instruction, and others of like tenor, the court refused to give. Conceding the instruction to have been a correct statement of the law, there was no error in the ruling, for the reason that the substance of this requested instruction was fully covered by other instructions, in one of which the jury was instructed that, in order to justify conviction, they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that "the defendant, with intent to deceive, injure and defraud the said C. J. O'Keefe, did, as charged, willfully and knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered to said O'Keefe, the certain message so as aforesaid set forth and described in the information; and further believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that such message was false and forged, and falsely purported to have been received by telegraph, and from a telegraph office, and from the said I. E. Brown, cashier, as alleged in said count of the information, but that, in truth and in fact, it had not been received by telegraph, nor from a telegraph office, nor from the said I. E. Brown, cashier; and further believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the said defendant, at the time, well knew the said message was so false and forged, and had not been received by telegraph, nor from a telegraph office, nor from said I. E. Brown, cashier." There were others of like import, from all of which it clearly appears that the jury were fully and fairly instructed upon the points covered by the instructions offered by defendant and which the court refused to give.

Other alleged errors are without sufficient merit to justify consideration. It appears from the entire record that defendant was accorded a full and fair trial. The evidence is ample to justify the verdict. No defect or error appears either in the information, the trial, or the proceedings therein which could have prejudiced the substantial rights of defendant. Pen. Code, §§ 960, 1258, 1404.

The judgment and orders appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J., JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 487

WALKER v. WALKER. (Civ. 755.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 9, 1910.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 40*) — DEFENSES — SEPARATION AGREEMENT—CONSTRUCTION—STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 158, provides that either the husband or wife may enter into any engagement with the other respecting property which either might, if unmarried, etc. Section 159 provides that they cannot, by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except as to property, and except that they may agree to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them, etc. Plaintiff, who had a good cause of action for divorce against defendant, his wife, for desertion, entered into an agreement with her to adjust their property rights and to live apart; the contract reciting that it had become impossible for them to longer live together as husband and wife, etc. Held, that the sole purpose of the agreement was to adjust the property rights of the parties, and did not affect the legal consequences flowing from the prior desertion and bar the husband's action for divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESERTION—OFFER TO RETURN.

Where the offense of desertion has continued for the statutory period, Civ. Code, § 102, requiring a return or offer to return in good faith to cure such desertion, must be substantially complied with in good faith to effect such result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Action by Samuel Walker against Anna E. Walker. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

Frank L. Coombs, for appellant. James M. Palmer and E. S. Bell, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action for divorce. Defendant had judgment, from which and from the order denying his motion for a new trial plaintiff appeals. The complaint was filed October 30, 1907. The court found that the parties were married in 1862 and ever since have been husband and wife; that on April 1, 1903, defendant willfully and without cause, and contrary to plaintiff's wishes, separated from him, "with intent then and there to desert and abandon plaintiff, and from said 1st day of April, 1903, up to and including the 16th day of February, 1905, said defendant, without plaintiff's consent, and contrary to his wishes continued to live separate and apart from said plaintiff with intent at all of said times to desert and abandon him." The court then finds: That on the 16th day of February, 1905, said plaintiff and defendant effected a complete reconciliation of all of the differences existing between them at the said time as husband and wife, by reason of having upon said day made, executed, and delivered the following agreement. This agreement states: "That whereas certain unhappy differences have arisen between the parties hereto, whereby it has become impossible for them longer to live together in that condition of amity and accord essential between husband and wife; and whereas, it is therefore necessary that some arrangement be arrived at whereby the respective property and personal rights may be forever settled and adjusted; * * * Now, therefore, * * * said party of the first part does hereby release and forever absolutely discharge said party of the second part of and from any and all claims and demands, action, and causes of action of any and every name and kind whatsoever as the wife of the said party of the first part; and does hereby discharge her, the said party of the second part, of and from any and all claims upon the separate property, upon any property she acquires under the terms of this agreement, or upon any other property she may hereafter acquire, for the support and livelihood of said party of the first part. And said party of the first part does hereby relinquish forever any right or interest in or to the separate property of said second party and in or to any property she may hereafter acquire by right of succession or otherwise and does further covenant and agree that she shall and may live separate and apart from him, the said first party, and shall and may choose her residence and place of abode without let or hindrance from said first party." Then follow clauses similar in language expressing like covenants on the part of defendant. "And the parties hereto agree to an immediate separation and each does hereby relinquish to the other all claims, rights, benefits, and privileges to which he or she may be entitled from the other by reason of their marriage relations." The concluding paragraph reads: "In consideration of fifteen hundred dollars * * * said party of the second part agrees and does accept the same in full satisfaction of any and all of her claims or rights in or to the property of the said parties as wife of the said first party; and the said second party relinquishes as wife of the said first party all right in law or in equity, by succession or descent, any further share in the community property or in any property the said first party now has or which he may hereafter acquire." These are all the provisions which seem to have any bearing upon the questions now raised. As a conclusion of law the court found: "That said agreement, by its terms and agreements constitutes a bar to this action as brought by the plaintiff against the defendant."

The evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the court upon the fact of defendant's desertion of plaintiff in 1903, and the evidence was that she never, after having deserted him, returned to his home or offered to do so up to the time of the trial, May 12, 1908. There was no evidence of her having made any attempt at reconciliation or ever offered to resume marital relations after April 1, 1903. The case may be stated to be simply this: On February 16, 1905, plaintiff had a good cause of action for desertion; on that day the parties came together long enough to enter into an agreement to adjust their property rights and to live separate and apart, and they have ever since done so Can the action be maintained, based upon the desertion prior to the execution of this agreement?

No evidence was offered as to the intention of the parties in making the agreement of separation other than is found in the agreement itself. The court limited its finding of desertion to the 15th day of February, 1905, inclusive, doubtless holding that the desertion ceased after that date by reason of the contract of separation. This would seem to follow from the finding that by the contract the parties "effected a complete reconciliation of all the differences existing between them at the said time as husband and wife"; and the trial court held that, as to the prior desertion, the agreement barred any action upon it.

"Either the husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might, if unmarried," subject to certain rules governing trust relations. Civ. Code, § 158. But "a husband and wife cannot, by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except as to property, and except that they may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation." Civ. Code, § 159. These sections, it is contended by appellant, prescribe the limit of their power to contract with each other; that marriage is a legal relation and they are powerless to alter that relation by contract, except as to property and except, also, that they may agree in writing to an immediate separation, i. e., to live separate and apart.

At the time the defendant entered into this contract, she had given plaintiff a sufficient ground for divorce; she had willfully deserted him for a period considerably beyond the statutory time prescribed; her matrimonial offense was complete and plaintiff's right of action had accrued. "If one party deserts the other, and before the expiration of the statutory period required to make the desertion a cause of divorce, returns and offers in good faith to fulfill the marriage contract and solicits condonation, the desertion is cured." Civ. Code, § 102. There is no pretense that defendant did this or even made the slightest conciliatory advance towards her husband. The evidence was that she had previously declared that she never would again live with him. The contract shows on its face that she returned for no purpose of remaining and fulfilling her marital obligations and soliciting condonation, but quite to the contrary, for the agreement declares that "it has become impossible for them longer to live together in that condition of amity and accord essential between husband and wife"; and she relinquished to him "all claims, rights, benefits, and privileges to which she may be entitled by reason of their marriage." It is impossible to find in this agreement any suggestion of a purpose on her part, or either of them, for that matter, ever again to resume the marriage relation. Furthermore, she declared in the agreement, as showing her purpose in making it, that "it is therefore necessary that some arrangement be arrived at whereby the respective property and personal rights of the parties and their future relations be forever settled and adjusted." It is in view of this state of the case we are asked to hold that the parties intended by their contract to obliterate the past, execute an accord and satisfaction of any right of action arising out of past conduct, and continue the separation, but upon a different footing.

In Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 468, the wife had manifested no intention to return to her husband, until after the statutory period constituting desertion had elapsed. The court said: "Her repentance did not obliterate the offense. If it had been accepted and acted on by the plaintiff, by receiving her and renewing the cohabitation, it would be regarded as a condonation. But he may, after the lapse of the statutory period, refuse to accept the offer. Bishop (§ 530), in speaking of the offer to return, says that if it is made in good faith within the period prescribed by the statute to complete the offense, it will bar the suit. 'But after the time has expired and the right of action has fully accrued, the injured party is not obliged to accept such an offer; it comes too late.'" Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 Pac. 1037. The statute requires that the action shall be commenced within a reasonable time (Civ. Code, § 124), and "unreasonable lapse of time is such delay in commencing the action as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same with intent to continue the marriage relation notwithstanding the commission of the offense." Civ. Code, § 125. In McMullin v. McMullin, 140 Cal. 112, 117, 73 Pac. 808, 809, the court said: "Of course, the original offense is not destroyed by the fact that after the desertion has continued for the period essential to make it a ground of divorce, the status of the separation changes and the separation becomes in every way agreeable to the deserted party. She has still her right of action for a divorce because thereof, and is not obliged to condone the offense."

There was no such lapse of time here as would bar the action, for there is not the slightest indication of "connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense," and there was no showing of full acquiescence in the desertion "with intent to continue the marriage relation," with all its rights and privileges. The "status of the separation" was not changed by the agreement, for to all intents and purposes this status was to continue precisely as it had existed while the offense was being committed. We are unable to discover anything in the conduct of the parties or in the language of the agreement indicating any intention to condone past offenses, or ever again to live together as man and wife. It seems to us that the purpose of the agreement and its sole purpose was to adjust the property rights of the parties, and that their agreement to live thereafter separate and apart did not affect the legal consequences flowing from the prior desertion of the wife. Where the offense of desertion has once been committed and has continued for the statutory period, the statute (Civ. Code, § 102) points out how "the desertion is cured." Anything short of substantial compliance in good faith therewith does not cure the desertion.

But it is claimed, and this was apparently the view of the trial court, that the provision of the agreement of separation is a bar to the action by reason of the clause, "said first party does hereby release and forever absolutely discharge said party of the second part of and from any and all claims and demands, action and causes of action of any and every name and kind whatsoever as the wife of the said party of the first part." It will be observed that the language purports only a release of the wife by the husband of all claims and causes of action, as the wife. If the husband intended to release all claims and causes of action he had against his wife, the language fails to so express such intention. However, if we treat the clause as intended to import a discharge of any claim or cause of action the husband then had against his wife, it seems to us that, taking the contract in its entirety and considering the context, the intention was to discharge any causes of action involving property rights. The contract was drawn pursuant to the authority given by the Code (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159, supra), and in any construction given it we must keep not only its main purpose in view, but also the statute which authorized it, and this statute forbade altering their "legal relations, except as to property," and except as "to an immediate separation."

Appellant urges with much force that the instrument is void, in so far as it attempts a contract not permitted by the Codes. The argument is that "the Code establishes the law of this state respecting the subject to which it relates" (Civ. Code, § 4); that the common law of England is the rule of decision in the courts of this state, so far as not repugnant to the Constitution or laws of the state (Pol. Code, § 1468); that by the common law contracts between husband and wife are void for want of the wife's power to consent; that where the statutory right is given them to contract, it must be exercised only in the manner prescribed and cannot be enlarged. 9 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.) 793. We do not find it necessary to decide the point, for, conceding the power to enter into a contract waiving the right to bring an action for divorce, it does not seem to us that any such waiver was contemplated by the parties in making the contract, or that it was a consideration (if such a covenant could be treated as a valid consideration) for its execution on their part.

Nor can we see any good reason for giving the contract the construction contended for by respondent, inasmuch as she manifests no desire to resume marital relations; and, to declare the relation of husband and wife to be still subsisting, after all property rights are adjusted, would be to perpetuate a relation which she repudiates and has done all she could to terminate, and which she declares she never will resume. Why then, should we give the contract a construction so out of harmony with her acts and express declarations?

The finding that plaintiff and defendant, on February 15, 1905, effected a complete reconciliation of all the differences existing between them, by reason of having executed the agreement of that date is, we think, unsupported by the evidence.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

14 Cal. App. 462

In re PRICE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 724.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 11, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 130*)—OLOGRAPHIC WILLS—VALIDITY—DATE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1277, providing that an olographic will is one that is entirely "written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself," and that it is subject to no other form, an instrument reading, "dated the —— day of ——, 1906," was invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

2. WILLS (§ 69*)—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

Wills are creatures of the Legislature, and while some of the formalities required may appear immaterial, the right to thus dispose of one estate being purely statutory, the manner of such disposal as prescribed must be observed with substantial strictness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 183; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

3. TIME (§ 2*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—DATE—CONSTRUCTION.

The term "date," as used in a statute requiring an instrument to be dated, means the day, month, and year, and giving the year alone is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Dec. Dig. § 2.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1830-1831.]

4. WILLS (§ 130*)—OLOGRAPHIC WILL—VALIDITY—DATE.

That in a given case the writer of a pretended olograph will is found to have capacity to make a last will at any time during a certain year does not render such will valid, where no date is given, except the year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Proceedings to probate the last will and testament of Elizabeth Price, deceased, as olographic. From an order denying probate, Judd Allen Page appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. T. Matlock, Jr., for appellant. John J. Wells and W. A. Fish, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order denying probate of an instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of Elizabeth Price, deceased, as olographic. The appeal is by one Judd Allen Page, who is named in said purported will as the executor thereof, and who was the petitioner for the probate of the same. The instrument was denied probate upon the ground that it was not "dated" by the deceased within the meaning of section 1277 of the Civil Code, defining an olographic will.

The instrument was written by and in the handwriting of the deceased, but the purported date of its execution reads: "Dated this ——— day of ———, 1906." Thus it will be noticed that there is nothing definite about the "date," except the year; the day and month being omitted. Therefore, the only question submitted for solution here is, whether the numerals combined together as representing the year "1906" constitute a "date" within the meaning or contemplation of the section of the Civil Code referred to.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Said section reads: "An olographic will is one that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself. It is subject to no other form, and may be made in or out of this state, and need not be witnessed."

We are of the opinion that the instrument, by reason of the incompleteness of the date as noted, does not meet the requirements of the statute prescribing the requisites of an olographic will, and that the court below properly denied the petition for its probate. Last wills and testaments are entirely creatures of the Legislature, and, while some of the formalities with which they are required to be executed may appear to be immaterial and unnecessary, yet the right to thus dispose of one's estate being purely statutory, the manner of such disposal, as prescribed by the statute, must be observed with at least substantial strictness. If, therefore, there be a substantial departure from such formalities in an attempted testamentary disposal of one's property, there is no last will in law, and the decedent's estate must go to the administrator.

The term "date," in its common and accepted signification, means the "day, month, and year" (see Century Dictionary, the Encyclopædic Dictionary, and Bouvier's Law Dictionary), and we can perceive no sound reason that would or could prompt the Legislature in using the term in any other sense when making it one of the essentials of a legal instrument in writing of any character. If the "year" alone shall be held to be sufficient to satisfy the statute as to the date of an olographic will, we can see no good reason why the "day" or the "month" only would not likewise be sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute in respect of the date, between which and the other requisites of such a testament we can discover no difference in importance.

In the case of Estate of Martin, 58 Cal. 531, an instrument purporting to be an olographic will, while entirely written and signed by the deceased, bore no date. It was there contended that the dating of a will "is a mere formal matter, not absolutely necessary." The Supreme Court, denying the soundness of this contention, said: "The Legislature has seen fit to require three things to concur for the execution of an olographic will, viz.: That it be written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. We are not at liberty to hold that the Legislature intended any one of these requirements to be of greater or less importance than the others. If we may omit one, why not either of the others? 'It is subject to no other form.' It is subject to the form prescribed."

Professor Page, in his work on "Wills." says: "It is generally provided that an olographic will must be dated. The date must show the year, month, and day in order to make the will valid."

"The date is an important part of every holographic will and consists of the year, month, and day, the omission of any of which is fatal." Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 30, p. 583; Fuentes v. Gaines, 25 La. Ann. 85; Heffner v. Heffner, 48 La. Ann. 1088, 20 South. 281; Robertson's Succession, 49 La. Ann. 868, 21 South. 586, 62 Am. St. Rep. 672.

The Louisiana statute defining and prescribing the requisites of an olographic will is substantially in the same language as is found in our own. In the case of Fuentes v. Gaines, supra, an attempt was made to establish by parol the contents of a lost olographic will. Some of the witnesses testified that the alleged will was dated "A. D. 1813," and others that it was dated "July, A. D. 1813." The Supreme Court of Louisiana declared that the proof failed to disclose all the essentials of an olographic will. It said: "Is a testament, which is dated A. D. 1813, or July, A. D. 1813, to be deemed dated in the sense of the law? Certainly not, if the term 'dated' is to be understood in its 'common and usual signification.' Webster defines the word 'date' thus: 'That addition to a writing which specifies the year, month, and day when it was given or exercised.' * * * It is essential, therefore, to specify the day, month, and year, to give a date to a testament in the sense of article 1588 of the Civil Code."

In the case of Heffner v. Heffner, 48 La. Ann. 1089, 20 South. 281, the trial court rendered judgment annulling the will, olographic in form, of William Heffner, deceased, on the ground that it was not dated. Upholding the judgment, the Louisiana Supreme Court said: "The Code defines the olographic will to be that written, dated, and signed by the testator himself. The date, signature, and the entirety of the will in the handwriting of the testator are the essentials. * * * The policy of the law to secure the true representation of the testator's wishes and guard against fraudulent wills is marked in the requisite of the testator's handwriting, including the expression of the date when he writes the paper and affixes the signature it bears. The date in the testator's handwriting is part of the evidence the law requires of the verity of the instrument. If the paper is forged, the date it must bear may furnish the means of detection. On any issue of the sanity of the testator the dates indicate and restrict the period of inquiry. * * * The date in its ordinary sense imports the day of the month, the month, and the year. That is also the legal significance of the date. The day of the month is quite as much a part of the date as the month or the year. If the law requires the olographic will to be dated, the exaction extends to every part of the date. * * * The hardship of the case has prompted us, in the absence of any direct adjudication of our own courts on the point, to examine the views of the French commentators, dealing with the corresponding article of the Napoléon Code. They disclose the reason of the law in exacting the date, and maintain the day of the month to be essential. We find the distinction drawn by them between a wrong date, which it seems has been held will not vitiate, and no date or a deficient date, which will avoid the will. But the necessity of the day of the month in the date of the olographic testament is rigidly enforced by the jurisprudence under the Napoléon Code." See, also, Succession of Robertson, 49 La. Ann. 868, 21 South. 586, 62 Am. St. Rep. 672.

Counsel for appellant cites and relies upon the cases of Gaines v. Lizardi, 3 Woods, 77, Fed. Cas. No. 5,175, and Estate of Fay, 145 Cal. 82, 78 Pac. 340, 104 Am. St. Rep. 17, as supporting his interpretation of the testament involved here. But there is a clear distinction between these cases and the Louisiana cases to which we have referred. In Gaines v. Lizardi, supra (which seems to have involved the same testament that was considered in Fuentes v. Gaines, supra), it is not held that the word "dated," as used in describing the essentials of an olographic will, does not include the day, the month, and the year. To the contrary, the opinion in this regard seems to be based upon the assumption that the will bore a date within the full meaning of that term. The court in that case merely held that a fair and reasonable interpretation of the testimony bearing upon the question of the date of said testament justly led to the conclusion that "it bore the year, month, and day" in the date thereof. The case of Estate of Fay was where the date of the will, olographic in form, was inconsistent with the testimony. The instrument was dated "May 25, 1859," and it made provision for the son of the testator, Luke Fay, who was born in 1861; for his son, John Fay, who was born about the year 1865, and for a daughter, who was married in January, 1887, and died in March, 1900. From these facts it was evident that the instrument was not written in 1859. But the Supreme Court held that the will was "dated" within the meaning of the statute, and that the error with regard to the year having obviously been the result of inadvertence, would not vitiate the instrument. It is there said: "The Legislature has not used the words 'truly dated' nor 'correctly dated,' but the word 'dated,' which must be construed according to the approved use of the language (Civ. Code, § 13), and in its primary and general sense. Code Civ. Proc. § 1861."

But the proposition in the case at bar does not present the question, whether the testament has been "truly dated" or "correctly dated." It does not, in other words, involve the question, whether the writer of the document made a mistake in writing the date and thus erroneously inserted an impossible day of the month or a year in which the testimony shows that it was impossible to have written the instrument. The question propounded here is, whether the instrument was dated at all, within the meaning of the law prescribing the essentials of an olographic will. We can find no other answer to this question than that to which reason and the cases have led us, unless we are bold enough to arbitrarily substitute the will of the court as to the essentials of olographic testaments for that of the Legislature.

Nor is the fact that the court in this case found that, during all of the year 1906, in which the instrument sought to be established as the last will of the deceased was written, deceased was mentally sound and capable of making a testamentary disposition of her estate, an argument against the construction which we have given our code section pointing out the essential requisites of an olographic will. As we have seen, the right to dispose of one's belongings by testament is conferred by the Legislature, in which body there exists full and unrestricted power to require any reasonable mode or manner of a testamentary disposal of one's estate; and whatever might be the reason inspiring the Legislature to impose certain restrictions or conditions on or the manner in which a party may name the successors to his estate after his death, so long as they be not unreasonable or absurd, the formalities or essentials so prescribed must be performed. And if, as is suggested in Heffner v. Heffner, supra, one of the reasons requiring an olographic will to be dated is because it may have some bearing on the question of the mental soundness and competency of the decedent, if that issue should be submitted, it does not follow that because, in a given or a particular case, the writer of the pretended olographic will is found to have had capacity to make a last will, any one of the essentials of such a testament, as prescribed by the law, may, in the writing thereof, be omitted.

It follows, from the foregoing views, that the order must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

14 Cal. App. 453

SLADE v. BUTTE COUNTY. (Civ. 706.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1910.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 53*)—LANDS IN LIEU OF SCHOOL LANDS.

By Act Cong. Feb. 26, 1859, c. 59, 11 Stat. 385, the United States appropriated other lands of like quantity in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections granted to a state where those sections were lost to the state by previous pre-emption settlement, and subsequent statutes made like provision in cases of homestead settlement, or where the lands were mineral or are otherwise disposed of by the United States. The act of 1859 also provided that lands granted in lieu of those sections might be selected by the state or territory in which they lie. Held, that no title passed to the lieu lands by the statute alone, but the statute provided that, when locations and selections were made by the state, the government, if the lands selected were unoccupied public land, would inform the state, and thereupon title would vest in it, and patent would issue by the state to the locator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 61*) — PROPERTY TAXABLE — CERTIFICATES OF PURCHASE OF SCHOOL LAND.

Certificates of purchase of land which the state anticipates will be granted to it in lieu of school lands, which, by reason of homestead or pre-emption or other cause, have not been received by the state, are not taxable, where the state did not acquire title to the land, and the purchaser received no land under the certificates.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 543*) — RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID — ACTIONS — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In an action against a county, plaintiff alleged that he was the holder and owner, by assignment, of certificates of purchase issued by the state for lands situated in defendant county, selected in lieu of other lands in the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, that plaintiff for three enumerated years delivered to the county assessor his sworn statement that he was the owner of lands described in the certificates, that he did so under the erroneous belief that the said certificates and their conveyances to him conveyed the equitable title therein to him, that he paid to the tax collector on a date specified specified sums as taxes on said land for the years enumerated, that the title to all of said lands at all times was in the United States, that all of said lands have been and now are vacant public lands, that plaintiff has never been in either constructive or actual possession thereof, nor ever asserted or made a possessory claim thereto or any part thereof, that he paid all of said taxes under the erroneous belief that such lands were taxable to plaintiff, that on a date specified he filed with the county board of supervisors a verified claim for a refund of said taxes under Pol. Code, § 3804, that a copy of his claim was made an exhibit to the complaint and a part thereof, and that said board considered the claim and on a date specified at a regular meeting rejected the claim. Held, that the complaint stated a cause of action under Pol. Code, § 3804, providing for the refunding of any taxes erroneously collected; and that it was not objectionable because of failure to allege the names of the persons to whom the certificates of purchase were issued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1012; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 537*)—RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID—ESTOPPEL.

Where the state issues certificates of purchase of lands which it anticipates will be given it by the United States government in lieu of school lands which because of prior settlement or other reason the state never received, and the assignee of those certificates delivers to the assessor of the county his sworn statement that he is the owner of such lands and pays the taxes thereon, and the state never gets title from the United States to the lands described, the assignee is not estopped from asserting the invalidity of the assessment by his statement that he owned the property, as the state is not prejudiced by his having paid the taxes, and Pol. Code, § 3804, authorizes the refunding of taxes erroneously collected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 996; Dec. Dig. § 537.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; Warren Sexton, Judge.

Action by Spencer E. Slade against the County of Butte. Judgment for defendant on demurrer to complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

Leo H. Susman, for appellant. Lon. Bond, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant had judgment on its demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, from which plaintiff appeals.

It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff is the holder and owner, by assignment thereof, of certain certificates of purchase, issued by the state, for lands situated in defendant county selected, in lieu of certain other lands, in the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections; that plaintiff, for the fiscal years, ending respectively June 30th of 1905, 1906, and 1907, "delivered to the assessor of said county his sworn statement, setting forth that he was the owner of the lands described respectively in Schedules A, B, and C, hereinafter mentioned, under the erroneous and mistaken belief that the said certificates of purchase issued by said state and the said conveyances made to him thereof mentioned in paragraph 3 of this complaint, conveyed the equitable title therein to him"; that plaintiff paid to and it was received by the tax collector of said county, on November 19, 1904, the sum of $236.48, assessed as taxes on said land for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905; and on November 27, 1905, the sum of $224.80 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and on November 17, 1906, the further sum of $178.20 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907; "that the title, both legal and equitable, to all of said lands at all times was and now is in the United States of America, and that all of said lands have at all times been and now are vacant public lands"; that plaintiff "has never been in either constructive or actual possession of said lands or any part thereof nor has he ever had, asserted or made a possessory claim thereto or to any part thereof; and that plaintiff paid all of said taxes to the tax collector of said county of Butte under the erroneous and mistaken belief that such lands were then taxable to plaintiff by said county and state." It is then alleged that on November 9, 1907, plaintiff filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors of said county his duly verified claim for the refunding to him of said taxes, "in conformity with and for the purpose of availing himself of the provisions of section 3804 of the Political Code of the state of California," and copy of his said claim is made an exhibit to the complaint and part thereof; that said board considered said verified claim "and at a due and regular meeting of said board of supervisors, held on the 10th day of February, 1908, did, on said last-mentioned day, first and finally reject the said claim and the whole thereof." In the claim presented to the board of supervisors it is averred that after the issuance of said certificates of purchase "the said state of California, by its proper officers, applied to the proper authorities of the United States of America, to accept and approve the selection by the said state of the said lands in lieu of an equivalent amount of state school lands, and to list the same to the state; that thereafter the said United States refused to accept and approve the selection of any of the said lands, and to list the same to such state, and canceled the said entries thereof." In the said verified claim it is further set forth that plaintiff "did not and could not know that the selection of said lands by said state of California, would not be accepted and approved by the United States authorities and listed to the state; but that all of said taxes were collected under the mistaken belief that such lands would be so accepted, approved and listed to said state." Judgment is demanded for the sum of $639.48, the amount of said several payments, with interest thereon from February 10, 1908, at 7 per cent.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The grounds of the demurrer are: (1) Insufficiency of facts alleged; (2) that the action is barred by sections 3804 and 4076 of the Political Code; (3) that the complaint is uncertain in that it does not disclose the names of the persons to whom the alleged certificates of purchase were issued; and (4) that plaintiff is estopped from asserting the illegality of the tax assessment by reason of his having sworn to and delivered to the county assessor a list of the property involved as taxable.

Section 3804 provides that "any taxes * * * heretofore or hereafter * * * erroneously or illegally collected, * * * may by order of the board of supervisors be refunded by the county treasurer."

The statute of 1909 relating to the disposition of school lands and the acquisition of lands in lieu thereof does not apply to locations of lieu lands previously made and need not be considered.

By Act Feb. 26, 1859, c. 59, 11 Stat. 385, the United States appropriated other lands of like quantity in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections or fraction thereof, granted to a state, where lost to the state in which the lands lie, by reason of having previously been settled upon "with a view to pre-emption." Subsequent statutes made like provision where the loss was by reason of settlement with a view to homestead, or where the lands are mineral, or "are included within any Indian, military, or other reservation, or are otherwise disposed of by the United States." See Act Feb. 28, 1891, c. 384, 26 Stat. 796 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2275, 2276). The act appropriates and grants lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections so lost to the state, and provides that other lands of equal acreage "may be selected by said state or territory in which they lie." Obviously, no title passed of these so-called lieu lands by virtue of the statute alone, i. e., it was not a grant in præsenti, as was the grant of the school lands (sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, in place). The statute looked to possible losses to the state and provided that, when such losses were ascertained and locations or selections were made by the state, the government would, if the land selected were unoccupied public land subject to such location, approve such selection and so officially inform the state, and thereupon title would vest in it, and patent would issue by the state to the locator. The state of California passed no legislation on the subject (until in 1909) except as found in sections 3398 and 3406 (St. 1872), by which the Surveyor General was declared to be the "general agent of the state for the location in the United States land offices of the unsold portion of * * * land granted to the state for school purposes * * * and lands in lieu thereof," and, "whenever application is made to him for any portion of the lands mentioned in section 3398," he must "communicate with the United States Land Office, and ask that the lands described in the application be accepted in part satisfaction of the grant under which it is sought to be located."

Under these statutes the United States Land Department and the Surveyor General of California evolved a method of giving practical effect to the law, in pursuance of which all lieu locations have been made, those of plaintiff presumably included. Briefly, this method may be thus stated: A. B. makes application to the state Surveyor General in which he sets forth, under oath, certain required facts and states that he desires to purchase the land described therein pursuant to the provisions of title 8 of the Political Code (in which are found sections 3398 and 3406); an examination is made by the Surveyor General of his records, and, if the land appears to be unoccupied and open to entry in the United States Land Office of the district in which the land lies, he issues a certificate of purchase to the applicant, and later makes out an application to the United States Land Office to have the land applied for listed to the state in lieu of certain described school land (sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections) which he designates as the base for the listing by the government of the land applied for. This application is sent through the local land office of the district and is there indorsed by the register and receiver certifying that the application has been "filed and accepted, subject to future approval; that there is not of record in this office any adverse filing entry, or claim to the land selected by the state." The General Land Office at Washington, finding that the base is valid, and that the land applied for is free and open to entry, approves the application and lists the land to the state. By operation of the law of the United States and of the state of California, the title to the school land is relinquished to the United States and the title to the land selected in lieu thereof passes to the state.

It was held by our Supreme Court, in Roberts v. Gebhart, 104 Cal. 67, 37 Pac. 782, in a case where the General Land Office refused its approval, that the certificate of purchase issued on an application for lieu lands, followed by a selection made by the state "does not confer even an equitable right upon the state, or upon one claiming under it, such as would authorize a court of equity in reviewing the grounds or basis for such refusal." In Allen v. Pedro, 136 Cal. 1, 68 Pac. 99, it was said: "If plaintiff sought to get the land as lieu land, he acquired no title from the state, because the latter could get no title until the land had been selected, and the selection approved by the United States Land Department, and the land listed to the state"—citing Roberts v. Gebhart, supra. See, also, same case, 138 Cal. 202, 70 Pac. 1128.

The term "property" includes "all matters and things real, personal, or mixed, capable of private ownership"; and the term "real estate" includes "the possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to the possession of land." Pol. Code, § 3617. And possessory rights to and possession of public land have been held taxable in this state, notwithstanding the compact contained in the act of Congress admitting California into the Union, exempting public lands of the United States from taxation. People v. Donnelly, 58 Cal. 144. But it was held in that case that "land which has been such can be taxed only when a patent has issued, or when the private proprietor has acquired a 'perfect equity.'" Here not only the averments of the complaint are that plaintiff has never been in possession, has made no possessory claim, and has never claimed the right of possession, but, as we have seen, neither the legal nor equitable title vests in the state until the United States has approved the selection by the state and listed it to the state. It was held in People v. Frisbie, 31 Cal. 146, that the terms "claim to land" mean not only an assertion to title; "it involves also the idea of an actual possession of the land claimed."

It was held by the Supreme Court of North Dakota that the selection must be approved before the lands become taxable. Jackson v. La Moure County, 1 N. D. 238, 46 N. W. 449; Wells County v. McHenry, 7 N. Dak. 246, 74 N. W. 241. These were cases of indemnity lands under grants to railroad companies but they discuss the question here involved.

Section 3804, as amended in 1889, and as now existing, was interpreted in Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 99 Cal. 74, 33 Pac. 766, which was a case where the property had been twice assessed and the double tax paid. The court said: "That the object of the statute was to obviate these difficulties (pointed out as existing under the statute previous to its amendment), and provide a means for the recovery of moneys collected by mistake and to which the county and state have neither a moral nor a legal right, is apparent." Again: "Section 3804 was enacted to do justice to a class of cases where, but for its provisions, the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor would work a hardship to citizens who had paid money which it was inequitable for the county to retain." It was also held that the word "may," as applied to the duty of the board of supervisors, means "shall." In Pacific Coast Co. v. Wells, 134 Cal. 471, 66 Pac. 657, plaintiff had by mistake, in its verified statement made of its property, shown that its assessable property was greater than it was in fact. Plaintiff voluntarily paid the tax and upon the discovery of the mistake made claim for the excess paid. Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, supra, was relied upon and followed, as well as cases in other jurisdictions, and plaintiff was held to be entitled to recover. Among other things, the court said: "If the Legislature had intended to restrict the power of the board to refund to cases where the taxes had been involuntarily paid or paid under protest, it would have so said, as it did in the cases brought under section 3819, where relief is given by action in the courts." In Palomares Land Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 530, 80 Pac. 931, the section was held to authorize the recovery of money erroneously paid on redemption from tax sale.

Respondent urges with apparent sincerity that the certificates of purchase, apart from the land, were property and assessable as such. There is nothing in the point. The assessment purported to be of the land and not of the pieces of paper representing whatever rights plaintiff had in the land. If the state acquired neither legal nor equitable title to or right in the land, it would be absurd to hold that the certificates themselves, which conveyed nothing, would be taxable.

We think the complaint states sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action under section 3804.

Section 4076 of the Political Code relates to the form of the claim. In the present case the facts were very fully stated in the claim presented to the board and substantially complied with the statute. Nor do we see any reason for holding that section 3804 is a bar to the action.

The point that the complaint is uncertain in not giving the names of the persons to whom the certificates of purchase were issued is without merit. Plaintiff alleged possession and ownership of the certificates by assignment, and this was sufficient. He was not called upon to plead his deraignment of title.

One question only remains: Is plaintiff estopped from asserting the invalidity of the assessment because he filed with the assessor a verified statement of the property in question for taxation? The answer must be in the negative. The transaction lacks the necessary elements of estoppel. Besides, if the facts bear the semblance of estoppel they show the state to be the greater offender, for it was through the promise of the state that the land could be acquired under lieu location that plaintiff and his predecessors parted with their money. If any one was misled, it was the plaintiff. However, we cannot perceive that the state has been injured or prejudiced by plaintiff's having paid the tax; and injury or prejudice resulting from plaintiff's conduct is of the essence of estoppel. Furthermore, estoppel is of equitable cognizance, and only in exceptional cases is it allowed where equity and good conscience forbid, and this case furnishes no exception to the general rule. The simple fact is the state got something for nothing, and it is asked to make restitution. This section 3804 authorizes it, in a case such as this.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

158 Cal. 755

FOLLMER et al. v. ROHRER et al.

(L. A. 2,759.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1011*)—Findings—Conclusiveness.

A conflict in the evidence must be settled by the trial court, and its findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3983; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. Deeds (§ 56*)—Delivery—Acts Constituting.

A valid delivery of a deed is accomplished when the conduct and acts of the grantor manifest a present intent to dispose of the title conveyed without any right of recall, and any act manifesting such intent establishes a delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

3. Deeds (§ 66*)—Delivery—Acts Constituting.

Whether an act of a grantor manifested a present intent to dispose of the title conveyed by a deed so as to make a valid delivery must be determined by the circumstances of each transaction, and is a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 127, 633; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

4. Deeds (§ 56*) — Delivery — Acts Constituting.

The act of a grantor delivering a deed to the grantee with the statement, "Here is a deed of gift in favor of yourself and wife; take it and take care of it," and the act of the grantee in taking and accepting the deed and thanking the grantor, show a valid delivery, whereby the grantor parted absolutely with the control thereof, notwithstanding any contradictory evidence, such as the continuance of the grantor's residence on the premises, payment of taxes, the failure of the grantee to list the property as his own for taxation, the want of any transfer or request for a transfer of insurance, and the declaration of the grantee that he had known nothing of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

5. Appeal and Error (§ 1073*)—Harmless Error—Errors in Judgment—"Instrument Entitled to be Proved for Record."

The validity of the part of a judgment which adjudges plaintiff's ownership of the property in controversy and the want of interest therein by defendants is unaffected by the part which adjudges that a deed of the property to plaintiff, not acknowledged nor witnessed, is an instrument entitled to be proved for record within Civ. Code, § 1203; for the elimination of the latter part of the judgment does not affect the rights of defendants.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1073.*]

6. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 46*) — PROOF—JUDGMENT.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1198, 1203, providing that the execution of an instrument may be established by proof of the handwriting of the party and of a subscribing witness, if there is one, where the parties and the subscribing witnesses are dead, and providing that one interested under an instrument entitled to be proved and recorded may sue to obtain a judgment proving the instrument, the subscription of a witness is not necessary to the validity of a deed, and a grantee in a deed not acknowledged nor witnessed may, after the grantor's death, sue for judgment proving it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George R. Davis, Judge.

Action by Raymond I. Follmer and another against Mary Rohrer and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Porter, Sutton & Cruickshank, for appellants. Jones & Weller, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The defendants are the heirs and devisees of John B. Rohrer, who died in July, 1908. On October 1, 1907, said decedent was the owner of a lot of land in the city of Los Angeles. He signed a deed of gift bearing said last-named date and purporting to convey the lot to the plaintiffs. The instrument was never acknowledged or recorded, and this action was brought to obtain a decree that the plaintiffs are the owners of the land, and that the deed be proved, so as to entitle the same to be recorded. The complaint alleges that the deed was executed and delivered to the plaintiffs on the day of its date. The answer denies the delivery. The court found in favor of the allegations of the complaint, and gave judgment accordingly. The defendants appeal from this judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The main question presented is whether the evidence sustains the finding that the deed had been delivered by John B. Rohrer to the plaintiffs. Raymond I. Follmer, one of the plaintiffs, was a nephew of the decedent. He and the coplaintiff, his wife, occupied, together with the decedent, a house situated on the lot in controversy. Follmer testified as follows: "In the latter part of November, 1907, I came home from my office * * * and in passing through the hall my uncle called me, and I went into the sitting room where he was. He was sitting at his desk. He got up and gave me this deed and said, 'Here is a deed of gift in favor of yourself and wife; take it and take care of it.' I looked at the instrument and returned it to him, and he took an envelope from his desk and inserted it and gave it to me. I sealed it up and put it in my pocket, and thanked him very much, as a matter of course. That is all that was said at that time that I remember." The witness testified further that he kept the paper until May, 1908. During a part of this period he had it on his person, and at other times in a safe at the city hall, or in a safe deposit box. In May his uncle suggested that he had made his will and that it would be a good thing to put the deed with the will. Follmer made no objection to this, and returned the instrument to Rohrer. The latter subsequently handed it to Mrs. Follmer, under circumstances that need not be detailed. It appeared, further, that the alleged grantor, Rohrer, paid the taxes on the lot for the year 1907–08; that a sworn statement of his property, including the lot in question, bore the initials of the plaintiff, Augusta H. Follmer, and was filed with the city assessor; that a similar statement of property owned by plaintiff Raymond I. Follmer, and sworn to by him on August 2, 1908, did not include the lot in question; that said plaintiff Raymond was named as executor in the will of John B. Rohrer; and that in his petition for letters testamentary he described, as real property left by the decedent, the lot in question, "subject to a partially executed conveyance of said real property by John B. Rohrer, deceased, to Raymond I. Follmer and Augusta H. Follmer." There was also testimony that Follmer never asked or obtained any assignment of the fire insurance policies covering the house, that he did not during the life of the decedent mention to his wife the fact that he and she had received a gift of the property, and that, after the decedent's death, he had stated that he had no previous knowledge of the deed.

The foregoing statement includes virtually all of the testimony on the disputed issue of delivery. It will be noted that there are circumstances tending to contradict the claim of the respondents that the deed had been delivered. The continuance of the alleged grantor's residence in the house, his payment of taxes, the failure of Follmer to list the property as his for purposes of taxation, the want of any transfer or request for a transfer of insurance, the declaration of Follmer that he had known nothing of the deed —all these were facts which the trial court might well have regarded as tending to show that there had been no delivery of the deed, although some of them, at least, were not inconsistent with delivery. But, if there was also testimony which would justify an inference that a delivery had taken place, the testimony to the contrary did no more than to raise a conflict which was, under the established rule of this court, to be finally settled in the trial court. Follmer's statement regarding the handing of the deed to him, and the attending conversation, may well have been true, notwithstanding the admissions made by him on cross-examination. If true, it clearly supports the finding of delivery. The legal requisites of a delivery have often been stated by this court. "A valid delivery is accomplished when the conduct and acts of a grantor manifest a present intent to dispose of the title conveyed by the deed. No particular form of delivery is necessary; but any act or thing which manifests such an intent is sufficient to establish it. It is always a question of fact, and must be determined by the circumstances surrounding each transaction." Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 40, 73 Pac. 803, 804. See, also, Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 547, 4 Pac. 473, 8 Pac. 46, 56 Am. Rep. 726; Denis v. Velati, 96 Cal. 223, 31 Pac. 1; Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Black v. Sharkey, 104 Cal. 279, 37 Pac. 939; Reed v. Smith, 125 Cal. 491, 58 Pac. 139. Manual tradition of the instrument is not enough; the transfer of possession must be with the intent of presently passing title, and must not be hampered by the reservation of any right of revocation or recall. As has been said, the intent of the parties is to be determined, as matter of fact, by the trial court or the jury. We entertain no doubt whatever that the testimony of Follmer justified the inference that when Rohrer handed him the deed, he did so with the intention that the title to the property, at that very moment, should pass finally and irrevocably from him to the grantees named. The appellants lay stress on the words "take care of it," and argue that they show a transfer for safekeeping only. But this is by no means a necessary construction. Taking all of the language together, the phrase in question may well be interpreted as a mere caution to exercise care with regard to an important document. The grantor said, "Here is a deed of gift; take it and take care of it," and the recipient "thanked him very much." This is not the conduct of people who are arranging for the mere custody of a paper.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Nor was there anything in the transaction to compel the conclusion that the grantor undertook or intended to retain the right to recall the deed. "In every case where the deed has been declared invalid by reason of failure of delivery, it will be found that the grantor reserved some rights over the instrument; that he failed to part with all control and dominion over it; that upon the happening of some event, or contingency or condition, he had the right, if so disposed, to reach out and take it from the possession of the depositary." Bury v. Young, supra. Such a case is Moore v. Trott, 156 Cal. 353, 104 Pac. 578, 134 Am. St. Rep. 131, recently decided by this court, where the grantor's retention of the right to recall the deeds in a certain event was plainly evidenced, and for this reason it was held that no effective delivery had taken place. But the facts here are very different. So far as the testimony goes, the grantor parted absolutely with the control of the instrument.

In their closing brief, the appellants make, for the first time, the suggestion that the deed in question, being neither acknowledged nor witnessed, is not an instrument "entitled to be proved for record," and that the plaintiffs have not, therefore, shown their right, under Civ. Code, § 1203, to a "judgment proving such instrument." This point would not affect the validity of that part of the judgment which adjudicates the plaintiffs' ownership of the property, and the dedefendants' want of interest therein. If this part of the judgment stands, the defendants would not be helped by the elimination of the part decreeing that the deed be "adjudged to be proved, so as to entitle the same to be recorded." But, apart from this, we think the case is one coming properly within the terms of section 1203. Under section 1198, "the execution of an instrument may be established by proof of the handwriting of the party and of a subscribing witness, if there is one, in the following cases: (1) Where the parties and all the subscribing witnesses are dead. * * *" The subscription of a witness is not necessary to the validity of a deed, and the language of the section last quoted carries the clear implication that where there is no such witness, proof of the handwriting of the party executing is sufficient.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

---

158 Cal. 760

FOUNTAIN et al. v. CONNECTICUT FIRE INS. CO. (S. F. 5,542.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1910.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 324*) — FIRE INSURANCE — DAMAGE.

The policy provided that if a building or any part thereof fall, except as a result of fire, all insurance on such building or its contents shall immediately cease. The company claimed that the building was caused to partially fall by an earthquake before the fire started, and its evidence showed that, before the fire started, the front wall of the building from the roof to the second floor had fallen down, leaving the roof unsupported in front, so that the front part of it rested upon the second floor. Insured's evidence was that the upper stories had "great chunks out of them," and that the building could not be occupied until repaired. Held, that the evidence both of insured and the company showed that a substantial part of the building had fallen when the fire started, so as to avoid the policy.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 749; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 665*)—FIRE INSURANCE—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a fire policy which provided that if any part of the building fall, except from the fire, all insurance shall immediately cease, evidence held not to show that the fire started in the building before the front wall fell from an earthquake shock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 665.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 324*)—FIRE INSURANCE.

Civ. Code, § 2611, provides that a policy may declare that a violation of specified provisions thereof shall avoid it, but otherwise the breach of an immaterial provision does not avoid the policy. A fire policy provided that if any part of the insured building fall, except from the fire, all insurance on the building or its contents shall immediately cease. Held, that the falling of a material part of the building before the fire started immediately avoided the policy, whether it increased the fire risk or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 749; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 296*) — INSTRUCTIONS — CURE BY OTHER INSTRUCTION.

Error in instructing in an action on the policy that the company must establish that such a material part of the building had fallen before the fire started as would have increased the fire risk in order to make the policy avoided by the falling of the building before the fire was not cured by the giving of other instructions which omitted the element of increase of risk; they merely conflicting with the former instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by O. Fountain and others against the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company. From an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial after verdict for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. B. Ware and T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. Thomas J. Geary, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendant, covering goods of the plaintiff contained in a two-story brick building situated in the city of Santa Rosa, known as the Shea Building. It had two storerooms on the ground floor, one of which was occupied by Fountain. The second floor was divided into rooms used and occupied for offices and one room which was occupied by the society of "Eagles" as a lodgeroom. The defendant appeals from an order denying its motion for a new trial, after a verdict for the plaintiff. The policy contained the following clause: "If a building, or any part thereof, fall, except as a result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease." The building referred to was the Shea building aforesaid.

Upon the trial it was admitted by the defendant that it was liable to the plaintiffs for the loss to the full amount of the policy ($1,000) "unless it could make good its defense based upon" the above-quoted clause thereof. The fire was on April 18, 1906, and it immediately followed the earthquake which occurred at 15 minutes after 5 o'clock in the morning of that day. The evidence introduced by the defendant in support of the defense aforesaid showed that, before the fire started, the front wall of the Shea building, from the roof down to the second floor, had fallen down, leaving the roof unsupported in front so that the front part of it dropped and rested upon the second floor at the top of the first story. This was the substance of the testimony of a number of witnesses who saw the building immediately after the earthquake. That this front wall was a substantial and important part of the building, and that the falling thereof would immediately terminate the policy by force of this clause, cannot be seriously disputed. The defense was therefore established, and the order must be reversed, unless other evidence raised a substantial conflict on the subject. We do not think the contention of the plaintiff that there was a conflict on that point can be sustained. The evidence of the defendant's witnesses on the point was clear, direct, positive, and satisfactory. That on behalf of the plaintiff, which it is claimed creates a conflict, is in substance as follows: The witness Burris said that he made an examination of the front and rear of the Shea building, that the rear did not seem to be damaged, and that he did not see any break in the structure of the lower walls, nor any breaks in the structure of the Fountain storeroom. On cross-examination he said that the "upper story seemed to be shook up quite a little; the windows were thrown out into the street in the débris." Referring to that and the other buildings included in the same row, he said that the upper stories were "shot up pretty badly and a great deal of brick and awnings and other things thrown down on the sidewalk and out on the street," and that he did not think any of them were clear out and down, but "there would be great chunks out of them," and that they could not have been occupied until repaired. He said nothing about the position of the roof, and apparently was not questioned concerning it. Hahman was in his own storeroom in the lower story of the adjoining building half an hour after the earthquake. He entered from the rear. He said the back walls of the Shea building were intact, but he said nothing about the front wall. He said the Shea building was burning at that time. King, another witness, occupied a storeroom in the adjoining building, and he entered it from the rear. The front and side of that building were down. He said nothing about the walls of the Shea building. Hoffer had an office in the Shea building over the storeroom adjoining that occupied by Fountain. He went into his office 10 or 15 minutes after the earthquake. He said the side walls of the second story were standing on each side of his office, that the east wall of the Shea building was up as far as the roof, and the roof had slid over onto the front—"it kind of fell out that way and sort of dropped down in front" over his office. On cross-examination he said the front walls where he occupied were out, that Dr. Mallory's office was over Fountain's store, and that Mallory's office was out just like his. This evidence is wholly insufficient to disprove the contention that the part of the wall which had fallen was not an important and material part of the building. The witness most favorable to the plaintiff was Mr. Burris, and his testimony alone shows that a material part of the building had fallen. Other evidence established the fact that the second story had rather large bay windows in front, and these windows, he says, had fallen out into the street. And, while he did not think that any of the upper stories in that row were clear out and down, they had "great chunks out of them," and the buildings could not be occupied until repaired. Clearly this was sufficient to constitute the falling of a material and substantial part of the building.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

With regard to the time when the fire started, the theory advanced is that, although there was no direct evidence on the subject, there were circumstances sufficient to justify the inference that the first effect of the earthquake may possibly have been to break some charged electric light wire in the building, so as to cause fire therefrom to begin before the shake had caused the wall or window to fall. We have not given the defendant's evidence on this point in detail, but, in substance, it satisfactorily established the fact that the fire in the Shea building was caused after the earthquake, by fire which originated in some other building or buildings in the same row and did not reach the Shea building until from 15 to 30 minutes afterwards. There was clear proof that very soon afterward fires were observed in two of these nearby buildings, and that there was none at that time in the Shea building. A witness for plaintiff said that about a minute after the earthquake, from his house seven blocks away, he saw a column of smoke 75 to 100 feet high and half as large as the courtroom at Santa Rosa arising from the neighborhood of the Fountain store; that, when he came downtown, he located that fire, and it was somewhere in the rear of the Shea building or another building not adjoining, but that he did not know the exact spot where it was nor within 40 feet of where it was; that he did not look to see what was burning. This vague and uncertain evidence is not sufficient to constitute a substantial contradiction of the other witnesses, some of them produced by the plaintiffs, who testified either directly that the Shea building was not on fire at the time they reached it, or saw it, after the earthquake, or to circumstances about which they could not well be mistaken and which if true would render it extremely improbable, if not impossible, that the building could have begun to burn until at least 15 minutes after the earthquake, and then only from fire communicated from the adjoining buildings. It thus being established that the building was not on fire immediately after the quake, there is no basis for the supposed inference that the fire therein may have begun before the wall fell. The defense was established, the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and the new trial should have been granted for that reason.

One of the instructions was as follows: "It is not sufficient for defendant, in order to avoid its policy, to establish the fact that the building described in the policy in suit had, before it began to burn, suffered some injury, or that any part of the walls of said building had fallen before the contents of the building were destroyed by fire, to avoid its policy herein; but the defendant must establish by a preponderance of evidence that such a material portion of the building had fallen before the fire started as would have increased the fire risk which defendant assumed by its policy on such building and its contents; that, if the evidence does not establish the falling of such a material portion of the building, then I instruct you to find for the plaintiff." In anticipation of a new trial it is proper to determine whether or not this instruction is correct. Section 2611 of the Civil Code declares that "a policy may declare that a violation of specified provisions thereof shall avoid it, otherwise the breach of an immaterial provision does not avoid the policy." We are bound by this statutory declaration of the law, whether it accords with justice or not. The clause of the policy on this subject is in substance the same as this provision of the Code. To declare that, upon the happening of a given event, "all insurance shall immediately cease," is but another way of saying that, if the event happens, the obligation created by the policy shall become void. The effect of this section of the Code, in connection with the fallen building provision of the policy, is that the question whether the falling of a part of the building increased the fire risk or not, is wholly immaterial, provided the part of the building which had fallen at the time the fire started was a material or important part of it. The instruction was erroneous in so far as it directed the jury that the effect of the falling of the part of the building must have been to increase the fire risk and that, if it did not, the defendant would be liable. The parties had the legal right to make the contract that in such an event there should be no necessity for any inquiry as to the increase of risk therefrom and that the mere event should at once terminate the insurance, and, having done so, the defendant is lawfully entitled to the advantage thereof. The instruction was imperative in its direction to the jury, and, although other instructions given omitted the element of increase of risk, they merely caused a conflict, and did not cure the error. It is impossible to say which instruction the jury obeyed.

The decision of the court in Bastian v. British A. A. Co., 143 Cal. 287, 77 Pac. 63, 66 L. R. A. 255, was in substance based upon the principles above stated. The doctrine that the breach of an immaterial provision of the policy does not avoid it is not applicable, under the Code, where the policy expressly declares that it shall avoid it. In Clayburgh v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 155 Cal. 708, 102 Pac. 812, we were discussing the question of what was a sufficiently important "part" of a building, under the fallen building clause of a policy, to make the policy void if such part should fall. The instruction there considered was passed as substantially correct in effect, and this was put upon the ground that, although it did refer to the increase of the fire risk as a result of the falling of the part of the building, it did not, when taken as a whole, declare that such increase must occur in order to avoid the policy, but only that the part fallen must be important enough to materially impair the usefulness of the building. In substance, that decision was that to constitute an infraction of the fallen building clause, some material or substantial part of the building, as distinguished from a trivial, minute, and unimportant part thereof, must have fallen. The question of a consequent increase of risk was not held to be essential to the avoidance of the policy, if the part which had fallen was a material and important part of the building.

The question involved in this instruction is of no practical importance upon a new trial, unless the evidence should be more favorable to the plaintiff than that given upon the trial under consideration; for there can be no doubt that the falling of even so much of the building as Burris testified had fallen would increase the risk of fire. It is proper to remark, further, that the evidence does not present the question whether or not the defendant would be liable if the fire had started in the building before any part of it fell, and before it reached plaintiff's goods a material part of the building had fallen as a result of the earthquake and not as a result of the fire.

Other questions are discussed in the briefs in this case, but the probability that they will arise upon a new trial is so remote that we do not deem it necessary to consider them.

The order denying a new trial is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(158 Cal. 766)

DAVIS v. CONNECTICUT FIRE INS. CO.

(S. F. 5,558.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1910.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 669*)—FIRE INSURANCE—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on a fire policy which provided that the insurance should immediately cease if any part of the building fall except as a result of the fire, an instruction that such a part of the building must have fallen as would destroy its distinctive character as a building in order to avoid the policy was too vague as to what portion of the building must have fallen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 669.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR — INSTRUCTIONS — PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

Error in an instruction in an action on a policy which provided that all insurance on the building or its contents should cease if the building or any part thereof fall, except from the fire, as being too vague as to what part of the building must fall, was not prejudicial to defendant, where the uncontradicted evidence showed that the entire upper story was knocked down by an earthquake, and the question in issue was whether the fire had attacked the goods in the insured building before a part of it had fallen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4219, 4221–4224; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 665*)—FIRE INSURANCE—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a fire policy which provided that the insurance on the building or its contents should immediately cease if any part of the building fell except as the result of fire, evidence held to sustain a finding that the goods were on fire before any part of the building had fallen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 665.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 324*) — FIRE INSURANCE — CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

A provision of a fire policy that all insurance should immediately cease if the building or any part thereof fell, except as the result of fire, does not apply to avoid the policy if the building or any part thereof falls after the fire starts where the insurance is on the building, and perhaps even where it is only on the goods therein, nor does it apply to avoid the policy where the goods had begun to burn before the fall occurred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 749; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 527*) — EXPERT TESTIMONY — SUBJECTS.

A question to a witness in an action on a fire policy as to whether the falling of the building was the result of fire was improper as calling for a conclusion or opinion as to a fact not the subject of expert testimony.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2334, 2335; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a fire policy, in which the evidence conclusively showed that the insured building fell because of an earthquake before the fire started, a refusal to allow a question to a witness as to whether the falling of the building was the result of the fire was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4199; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a fire policy providing that the insurance should cease if any part of the building fell except as the result of fire, in which the evidence conclusively showed that an earthquake caused a part of all the buildings on a street to fall, the exclusion of a question as to the condition of the buildings on the street after the earthquake was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4199; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 129*)—SIMILAR CONDITIONS.

In an action on a fire policy, which provided that all insurance should cease if any part of the insured building fell, except as a result of the fire, in which defendant claimed that the insured building partly fell from an earthquake before the fire started, evidence was not admissible as to the condition of buildings other than the insured building after the earthquake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 388-393, 395-398; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 248*) — EXAMINATION — ANSWER.

A question asked in an action on a fire policy as to the condition of all the buildings on the street in which the insured building was situated after an earthquake occurring about the time of the fire was in effect answered where the witness testified that he could not tell one building from another because they were all down.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 861-863; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

Melvin, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by Naomi E. Davis, executrix of the estate of Henry S. Davis, deceased, against the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company. From an order denying a motion for new trial after verdict for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Ware and T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. Thomas J. Geary, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The plaintiff sued to recover upon an insurance policy issued by the defendant to Henry S. Davis, in his lifetime, covering a stock of drugs belonging to Davis, contained in a storeroom on the ground floor of a two-story brick building situated in the city of Santa Rosa. The fire which occasioned the loss took place on the morning of April 18, 1906, immediately after the great earthquake of that day. The policy issued by the defendant contained the following clause: "If a building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease." Upon the trial the defendant stated that its sole defense was based upon the aforesaid clause, and that, unless that defense was sustained by the evidence, the judgment should be given for the plaintiff.

In addition to the general verdict for the plaintiff, the jury returned answers to a number of interrogatories submitted to them. Some of these were in respect to the question whether the fall of a part of the building was before or after the fire started. The answers of the jury stated, in substance, that no part of the building fell before the insured goods were attacked by fire. The several answers clearly imply, although they do not expressly say it, that a material part of the building fell, and that the falling thereof was caused by the earthquake, and not by the fire. The appellant complains of several instructions relating to the subject of the fall of a part of a building and how much of it must have fallen in order to bring about a cessation of the insurance under the clause above quoted. One of them stated that the jury must find that such a portion had fallen as would destroy its distinctive character as a building; another that the fall must have had the effect of increasing the fire risk. We have considered the latter instruction in our decision in Fountain v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. (herewith filed) 112 Pac. 546, and held it to be erroneous. The other instruction is too vague to be a safe guide for the jury. Reasonable men might reasonably differ upon the question of its meaning. To destroy a building's distinctive character, as such, might merely refer to a change in its appearance, or to a fall that would require a change of its use, or its practical destruction as a building. But in view of the clear, conclusive and uncontradicted evidence that the entire upper story was shaken down by the earthquake alone, so that the roof fell down upon the second floor, we cannot believe that the instructions on this branch of the subject could have prejudiced the defendant in the least. The proof showed conclusively that the earthquake alone caused the fall of a sufficient part of the building to destroy its distinctive character as a building and to increase the risk from fire. There was, in fact, no real controversy at the trial in regard to this point. The interrogatories and the answers thereto show that this fact was conceded and, indeed, the jury could not have found otherwise upon the evidence, for there was absolutely none to the contrary. The whole defense turned upon the question whether or not the fire attacked the goods before a part of the building had fallen. The jury answered that it did. It is claimed that this finding is not supported by sufficient evidence.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The strongest evidence in favor of the proposition that the fire attacked the goods before the walls fell is the testimony of the witnesses Duncan, Bailey, and Faught. Bailey testified that he was running a livery stable, situated near the Davis building, and that from his stable, not more than three or four minutes after the earthquake, he saw fire in the rear of the Davis building. Faught testified that he was a fireman and slept in the engine house which was situated on a lot fronting on Fifth street and running back toward Fourth street; the rear thereof being about 50 feet from the rear of the Davis store. He said: "It did not take very long that morning to get out of the engine house. I saw the rear of the buildings where the Davis drug store was about three or four minutes after I got out of the engine house. I saw the fire started. I saw a volume of smoke come up right behind the Davis drug store. I saw quite a volume; enough to indicate to me the existence of a good fire there." Duncan was a fireman, and lived in a cottage in the rear of the Davis drug store. At the time of the earthquake he was in the engine house, about 50 feet from his cottage. He got out of the engine house about five minutes after the earthquake and went to the back door of his cottage from which he saw fire in the back end of the Davis building. The back end of it was then burning. The inside of the building was then on fire and the smoke and flames were coming out of the windows and through the roof. Muther, chief of the fire department, a witness for plaintiff, testified that 10 minutes after the shock he climbed to the top of the Davis building and found that the roof had fallen and rested upon the first story; that he saw at once that there was a fire coming fast "eating into" the building, and little blue blazes climbed up all around the brick; and that the fire was of an absolutely unnatural color, a kind of blue color all through the bricks. It was admitted that the building was lighted with electric lights, and, in effect, that the wires were at the time charged with electricity.

It is not improbable that the first effect of the strain caused by the earthquake was to break some wire charged with electricity, thereby instantaneously starting a fierce fire, and that the falling of the wall did not occur until the last severe vibration and after the fire had begun. The earthquake continued for 45 seconds. Even this brief period was long enough for the two events to occur consecutively, with an interval between them of more than half a minute. The evidence does not show the particular place in the building where the inflammable drugs were kept. The testimony of Muther that the flames were of an unnatural blue color inside the building 10 minutes after the earthquake indicated that some inflammable substance different from the wooden part of the building was then burning. It is common knowledge that the breaking of a charged electric wire will instantly cause a very hot flame, and that if combustible materials are near by such a fire will spread with great rapidity. Under all these circumstances, we cannot say that the finding of the jury on this point was not sustained by the evidence.

The appellant contends that it is immaterial whether the building was on fire or not at the time the wall fell, provided fire did not cause the fall. The court charged the jury that if it found that a material part of the building fell from a cause other than fire, before the insured goods were attacked by fire, the plaintiff could not recover. The case appears to have been tried upon the theory that this was the extent of the burden of proof resting upon the defendant. The jury, as we have said, obviously found that the goods were on fire before any part of the building fell. It appears from the evidence, however, that at the time the walls were thrown down by the earthquake only a small part of the goods could have been consumed or injured by the fire. The claim is that if there was a falling of the wall, not caused by fire, the clause of the policy thereupon immediately became operative, the insurance immediately ceased, and that, although the fire began before the wall fell, the defendant is liable only for so much of the goods as were consumed or injured by fire before the wall fell and for none that were consumed or injured afterward.

The case of Kiesel v. Ins. Co., 88 Fed. 243, 31 C. C. A. 515, is cited in support of this proposition. That was a loss of insured goods in a building. Counsel quotes from the opinion in that case the following: "If it (the building) was on fire, and it would have fallen by the force of the wind if there had been no fire, then its fall could not be said to have been the result of the fire, and the defendant was not liable. * * * The cause of the fall was the test of liability." Wrenched from its context, this passage may seem to support appellant's claim. But a reading of the entire decision shows that the precise question here in issue—the liability where, after a fire has attacked insured goods but before it has done much damage, a material part of the building containing them falls from a cause other than fire—was not under consideration in that case; that, as appears by stipulation in that case, the only questions for decision were whether or not the fire began before the building fell, and if it did whether the fall was caused by the wind or the fire. The discussion shows that the court, in effect, held that the insurer was liable if the wind blew the wall down, after the fire started, but before it reached the insured goods, and, by implication, at least, that it would not have been liable if the wall had been blown down before the goods were attacked by fire. The trial court in its instructions to the jury had said: "If this building, or any substantial part thereof, fell before the fire, or before any portion of the merchandise insured was injured by fire, and it so fell, not as the result of the fire, but as the result of something else, your verdict should be for the defendant." And further: "If that building fell, even after the fire had originated—if the fall was not caused by the fire —and if at the time it fell the goods had not caught fire, and had not been damaged by fire, the defendant would not be liable. * * * If, on the other hand, those goods had been damaged by fire, or had caught fire prior to the falling of the building, you will find for the plaintiff." This instruction was approved. The judgment in that case was for the company and the plaintiff appealed, and, while the question whether or not the charge was too favorable to the plaintiff was not material, the instruction shows, as also do the comments thereon, that the court did not mean to decide that it was immaterial whether the building was or was not burning at the time the wall fell from the wind and that it did not hold that if a building fall, other than by fire, while goods therein are burning, the loss will be divided by that event, and the company held only for the goods consumed or injured before the fall.

Upon the question last stated, we think the most reasonable interpretation of the fallen building clause is that it does not apply to the case of a building, or part thereof, falling after it has begun to burn, if the insurance is on the building, and perhaps even if it is only on goods therein, and that, where goods only are involved, it does not apply where the goods have begun to burn before, and are burning at the time, the fall occurs. When the fire begins to burn the property insured, the thing insured against has happened, the liability has begun, some loss has become inevitable. It is true that it might happen that a fall occurring during a fire would prevent it from being put out, and thus cause greater loss than would otherwise have been suffered, and the insurer might wish to contract for exemption in such a contingency. But in such a case it would be practically impossible to make an intelligent division, separating the loss occurring before the fall, from that occurring afterward. No person owning goods would be willing to make such a contract and assume the burden of such a division, if he understood its effect. If it was the intention to provide for the case of the falling of a building after a fire had attacked the goods and to exempt the insurer from liability for the goods burned after the fall took place, while holding him for that which occurred before, surely more explicit language would have been used. Other events which the policy declares shall avoid it, such as a change of interest, an assignment of the policy, or the execution of a mortgage thereon, might occur after the goods began to burn. Would it be contended, in such cases, that an account must be taken and the insurer held only for the goods burned and the injury caused before the event? The division would in most cases necessarily be a mere guess. It is obvious that the parties did not contemplate the application of the fallen building clause in this manner. The better rule is to hold that the liability of the insurer, so far as this clause is concerned, is fixed by the conditions existing at the time the fire and consequent loss begins, and is not affected or changed by the fall of the building, or a part thereof, subsequently but before the destruction is complete.

The witness Muther was asked the question: "Was the falling of the Davis building the result of fire?" An objection to the question was properly sustained. It called for a mere conclusion or opinion as to a fact which was not the subject of expert testimony. If the testimony he had previously given as to the facts was true, the conclusion that the fall was not the result of fire necessarily followed. Moreover, as we have stated before, the entire evidence showed conclusively that the earthquake caused the fall, and there was not even an attempt to show the contrary. The refusal to allow the question was therefore not injurious to the defendant. This also applies to the refusal to allow the witness Wilson to answer a general question as to the condition of all the buildings on Fourth street after the earthquake. Furthermore, the evidence was properly confined to the Davis building, and in addition to that, the witness was afterwards allowed to say that he could not tell one building from another, because they were all down, and thereby he did, in effect, answer the question.

We find no prejudicial error in the record. The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

MELVIN, J. I dissent. I think the conclusion by the jury that the fire attacked the goods before a part of the building had fallen is not supported by sufficient evidence. To hold that the testimony of Duncan, Bailey, and Faught sustains such a finding, is to ignore the rule that the plaintiff's case must be sustained by a preponderance of evidence. All of these men saw the fire some minutes after a material portion of the building had fallen. Their stories comport as well with the theory that combustion followed the greatest and most destructive movement of the earthquake as with the deduction that the first vibration broke the electric light wire and so caused the fire. Indeed, according to the doctrine of probabilities, it is very likely that the same force which destroyed the upper walls of the building broke the wire and liberated its current. Whether a mass of loosened brick can leave a wall sooner than a vagrant electric current can set fire to a stock of goods is a question too difficult for satisfactory solution even by all the combined wisdom of the members of a trial jury, and, unless we can ignore the necessity of plaintiff's establishing his case by preponderance of evidence, I cannot see how the proof sustained the jury's finding. I think it clear that, the destruction of a portion of the building having been shown, the burden was on the plaintiff to prove the occurrence of the fire in some manner other than from any of the accepted risks. Beach on Insurance, § 1329; Pelican Insurance Co. v. Troy Co-operative Association, 77 Tex. 225, 13 S. W. 980; Insurance Co. v. Boren, 83 Tex. 97, 18 S. W. 484. In California this rule with reference to the burden of proof has, I think, long been established, although at least one learned judge has cited one of our leading cases as announcing the opposite doctrine. In Western Assurance Co. v. Mohlman Co., 83 Fed. 813, 28 C. C. A. 157, 40 L. R. A. 561, the court refers to Blasingame v. Home Ins. Co., 75 Cal. 635, 17 Pac. 925, as authority for the rule that the defendant must by a preponderance of evidence establish the performance on plaintiff's part of prohibited acts or show in like manner that the loss occurred from an accepted risk. An examination of that case, however, shows that a rule of pleading and not of evidence was announced. Broadly speaking, the court in the Blasingame Case held that in an action on a policy of insurance a condition precedent may be generally pleaded under the provisions of section 457 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the complaint need not contain averments intended for the purpose of meeting or cutting off a defense. Yet in that case the learned commissioner wrote: "One seeking to recover on an insurance policy must aver the loss and show that it occurred by reason of a peril insured against." This doctrine was asserted with even greater emphasis in the case of Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 203, 26 Pac. 872, 23 Am. St. Rep. 460, in which the policy under consideration provided that the plaintiff should keep a watchman on the premises day and night when the mill was not in operation; this court holding that, after the defendant had shown that the mill was idle, the burden of proving compliance with the warranty rested upon plaintiffs. So, in this case, it seems to me, the fall of a material part of the building being shown, it is for the plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the fire was burning his property while the building was intact. This, I think, he utterly failed to do. I am aware that the opposite rule is adopted in some jurisdictions and the burden of proof held to be on the defendant (see Trans-Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Bamberger [Ky.] 11 S. W. 595; Western Assurance Co. v. Mohlman Co., supra), but I think the other, which I believe has been the California rule, is based upon sounder reasoning.

The order should be reversed.

---

158 Cal. 748

GEIMANN v. BOARD OF POLICE COM'RS et al. (S. F. 5,378.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 1022, 1025*) — CLAIMS — ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS—VALIDITY.

Provisions requiring a presentation of a demand as a condition precedent to an action thereon against a city, and limiting the time thereafter in which such action may be brought, are valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2193, 2196; Dec. Dig. §§ 1022, 1025.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 308*)—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1025*)—CLAIMS—ACTIONS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

The charter of the city and county of San Francisco, art. 8, c. 4, § 1, providing that any demand under the charter shall be forever barred, unless presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after such payment became payable, in so far as it provides for an audit within 30 days, the effect of which would be that if, upon presentation within the 30 days, the auditor should fail or refuse an audit, the claim would be barred, is invalid; but by eliminating such invalid part the remainder of the provision may be construed as allowing the claimant a reasonable time in which to commence action for enforcement of his demand, which time, in the absence of charter provisions, would be governed by the general statute of limitations applicable to the particular character of the demand, and upheld as fixing a time limit for presentation of claims and a condition precedent to the right of action on them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 925; Dec. Dig. § 308;* Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 1025.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1022*) — CLAIMS—PRESENTMENT.

Where a municipal charter provided that claims against it be presented for payment within a certain time to the auditor, and no provision thereof made it the duty of either the chief of police or the board of police commissioners to present demands of members of the police force to the auditor, if such a custom had grown up, their failure to present a claimant's demand would not excuse him from performance thereof, since it would be but the failure of his agent, for which he alone, and not the municipality, would be responsible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 1022.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Action by George Geimann on behalf of himself and others against the Board of Police Commissioners and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Costello & Costello, for appellant. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and John T. Nourse, Asst. City Atty., for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued for mandate against the chief of police, board of police commissioners, the auditor, and the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, to compel the approval and payment of his salary demand as police officer for the month of July, 1906. Judgment passed for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff, with other police officers, was compelled by the chief of police to take leave of absence without pay for the month of July, 1906, after the earthquake and fire. His action is to enforce his demand for salary for the month when he was thus upon compulsory leave of absence.

Respondents successfully urged against appellant's claim that it was nonenforceable, for the latter's failure to comply with certain requirements of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco. If respondents' position is sound in this respect, it precludes all consideration of the merits or demerits of the claim. Respondents' contention is that appellant's claim is barred for nonpresentation and nonaudit within the time limited by the charter. Section 1, c. 4, art. 8, of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco provides as follows: "Any demand upon the treasury accruing under this charter shall not be paid, but shall be forever barred by limitation of time, unless the same be presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after such payment became due and payable." Appellant to this makes answer that the charter provisions are unreasonable, unconstitutional, and void, as conferring judicial power upon the auditor, and as depriving claimant of his just demand without due process of law, in that the section requires that his claim, properly audited, must be presented to the treasurer within one month from the date of its becoming due, and that this leaves the enforcement of his demand at the mercy, or whim, or caprice of the auditor, who, by his arbitrary rejection, may make it absolutely impossible for the claimant to present a "properly audited" claim to the treasurer within the 30 days' limitation; that the language of the charter is so plain as to forbid the need of construction; that its language does not import a condition precedent, but in terms declares it to be a statute of limitations, and that to it or from it the court can neither add nor detract. This provision of the present charter of the city and county of San Francisco is, so far as quoted, practically identical with section 90 of the former consolidation act of the city and county of San Francisco. The earlier provision was upon two occasions considered by this court, and in the first instance it was held that the design of the provision was to prescribe a uniform rule for the presentation of all demands upon the treasury and fix a uniform bar for nonpresentation. Paxson v. Holt, 40 Cal. 466. In the other case, the statute under which the claimant demanded his salary provided that he should be entitled to the salary allowed by the board of supervisors, and this court held that even if that relieved from the necessity of presenting the claim to the auditor for audit, still, under section 90 of the consolidation act, it required a presentation to the board of supervisors, which had never been made, and that therefore as it "was never presented for audit at all, it follows that it was not and could not be presented for payment." Section 90 of the earlier consolidation act made provision for an appeal by any person from the decision of the auditor to the board of supervisors upon the former's rejection or refusal to approve any demand. By a singular oversight, neither this nor any equivalent provision is found in the present charter; the unmodified language being that above quoted. It may not be gainsaid that if this provision must be held to mean that a claimant shall present his demand to the treasurer, properly audited by the auditor, within one month after the demand has become due, or otherwise he has no other recourse or redress and his claim is "forever barred by limitation of time," if thus this section contemplates that a claimant's demand, to be paid, must be first audited within 30 days, leaving the question of audit or nonaudit to the whim or caprice of the auditor, then it would require no elaboration of argument to demonstrate that the provision was unreasonable and unconstitutional, as an attempt to deprive, or as putting it within the power of an executive officer to deprive, a claimant of his demand against the city and county of San Francisco without due process of law.

It is to be considered, therefore, whether the charter will bear any other reasonable construction than this. For, if so, such construction will be adopted to save the provision from condemnation. It is proper to say, in approaching this consideration, that we are not unmindful of the rules which courts have imposed upon themselves in dealing with statutes of limitations and conditions precedent to the right to maintain action. Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634, 95 Am. Dec. 152; Vandall v. Teague, 142 Cal. 471, 76 Pac. 35. A presentation of a demand as a condition precedent to the beginning of an action against a municipal corporation, and a special provision limiting the time thereafter in which such action may be brought, are measures which, without doubt, the Legislature may ordain. Thus the provision of the Los Angeles charter, which, in slightly varying form, is common to most charters, is a reasonable and valid provision as a condition precedent. That charter provides (section 222): "No suit shall be brought upon any claim for money or damages against the city of Los Angeles * * * until a demand for the same has been presented as herein provided and rejected in whole or in part." Bank v. Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 655, 91 Pac. 795. And so it is said, in Jones v. City of Albany, 151 N. Y. 226, 45 N. E. 557: "The Legislature may regulate the right to bring an action against a municipal corporation for a tort or upon contract, by imposing conditions precedent to be observed by the plaintiff, or it may make a special statute of limitations, thereby changing the ordinary rule and restricting the usual remedy in such cases." What, then, may be gathered by fair construction from the provision of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, which would be legal, conceding the condition that if a properly audited demand be not presented within 30 days, the demand is forever barred, to be invalid? The provision manifestly aims to compel a presentation of all demands within 30 days. The requirement that every demand shall be presented to the auditor for audit within 30 days is reasonable and will be upheld. If the auditor does audit it, it is, within the language of the provision, properly audited, and so its presentation to and payment by the treasurer become matters of course. But if, upon presentation within the 30 days the auditor shall fail or refuse his audit, under circumstances which, as usually would happen, would forbid the possibility of the claimant's presenting his duly audited demand within the time limited, what result would follow? Under the strict terms of this provision the claim would be forever barred. This, however, cannot be, and to this extent the provision is unlawful and void. The necessary result would be that upon such rejection the claimant would have a reasonable time in which to commence action for the enforcement of his demand, and if the charter itself contained no special provision (and this charter does not) touching the matter, such reasonable time would be governed by the general statute of limitations applicable to the particular character of the demand. So construed, the obnoxious part of this provision is regarded as severable from the unobjectionable part, which latter then fixes a time limit for the presentation of claims and a condition precedent to the right of commencing action upon them.

The due presentation of the claim to the auditor being thus held an essential prerequisite to the right of commencing action, appellant insists that by the admissions in the pleadings, such due presentation exists in this case, and that therefore his action is properly brought and may be maintained. Respondent contends against such admission in the pleadings, and asserts that issue was joined upon the matter, and that the court's finding is against appellant. The pleadings thus involve consideration. But before considering them it is proper to say that where a material allegation has either been expressly admitted, or admitted by failure of denial, no finding upon the matter, since none can properly be made, will countervail against the admission; yet, where any doubt may be fairly said to exist as to the full and complete sufficiency of the admission, the court will not construe such a pleading so as to deprive the party of his right to a contest of the alleged fact, and to a determination of the existence or nonexistence of the alleged fact after hearing.

The plaintiff in this case averred "that before the commencement of this action he duly demanded of and from the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco, defendant aforesaid, that he, the said defendant, approve the said warrant and demand of said plaintiff for his salary for the month of July, 1906, and that he demanded of and from the said board of police commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco that they sign the said warrant and demand, and that he duly demanded from the said auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, defendant aforesaid, that the said auditor audit the same, but in this connection plaintiff avers that the said defendants and each of them refused and denied, all and singular, his demand as aforesaid." The answer seems to admit that plaintiff demanded of the police commissioners "that the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco audit said demand." But in the same connection it undertakes to aver "that plaintiff failed and neglected, * * * or that the said plaintiff demanded of the said auditor of said city and county of San Francisco that he audit, allow, and approve said demand within six months after said demand became due and payable." The language of this averment is inartificially drawn. Grammatically it is a compound of affirmation and denial. It seems, however, to charge that plaintiff failed and neglected for six months after his claim became due to demand audit from the auditor. Even if this averment be not made as plain as it should be, there was enough to move the court to take evidence upon the question, as though under issue regularly joined. The court did so and found "that plaintiff has not demanded verbally, or otherwise, of the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco that he approve or allow the demand of plaintiff for his salary for the month of July, 1906." This finding is not attacked and is conclusive against appellant.

The determination that the claim was not presented to the auditor for audit within the time limited by the charter renders it unnecessary to consider in detail the law touching the other defendants. Suffice it to say that the treasurer was not bound to pay, except upon presentation of an audited demand, or its equivalent—the judgment of a competent court. Neither the chief of police nor the board of police commissioners is required by law, or by any rule cited, to approve the salary demand of plaintiff, and their failure to do so upon the showing here made would not excuse plaintiff's neglect to present it to the auditor. No provision has been pointed out making it the duty of either the chief of police or the board of police commissioners to present plaintiff's demand to the auditor, and if such a custom had grown up, without authority in law, the failure of either of these so to do would not excuse plaintiff, since it would be but the failure of his agent, for which he alone, and not the city, would be responsible.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

---

158 Cal. 742

HARTER v. BARKLEY et al. (L. A. 2,495.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1910.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 597*)—Police Power—Constitutional Provisions.

Under Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing municipalities to make local, police, and sanitary regulations, a city may under its police power provide by ordinance for the construction, maintenance, and repair of sewers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1325; Dec. Dig. § 597.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 270*) — Powers—Construction of Sewers.

The power of a city to construct sewers and drains is incident to the power to construct and maintain streets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 725; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

3. Municipal Corporations (§ 712*)—Powers—Construction of Sewers.

The power of a city of the sixth class conferred by Municipal Corporation Act (Gen. Laws 1910, Act 2348) § 862, authorizing the construction, establishment, and maintenance of sewers, carries with it the power to provide reasonable regulations for the tapping of, and connection with, sewers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1522; Dec. Dig. § 712.*]

4. Municipal Corporations (§ 712*)—Powers—Construction of Sewers.

A city ordinance requiring the payment of five dollars for a permit for a sewer connection, to be paid into the sewer fund, is reasonable; the sewer fund being used for the benefit of the property of the city and in the interests of owners of real estate within its limits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1522; Dec. Dig. § 712.*]

5. Municipal Corporations (§ 712*)—Powers—Construction of Sewers.

A city ordinance which reserves to the city the exclusive privilege of building lateral sewers from the property line to the public sewer, and which makes a uniform charge of $20 therefor, is not so unreasonable as to be void, merely because the expense to the city is not the same in every case, because some lots are nearer to the sewer than others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 712.*]

6. Municipal Corporations (§ 625*)—Police Power—Validity.

A municipal ordinance enacted under the police power is not invalid as unreasonable, unless it is clearly so, and every intendment will be indulged in favor of its validity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1378; Dec. Dig. § 625.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Mandamus by A. M. Harter against S. D. Barkley and others. From a judgment entered on sustaining a demurrer to the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Davis, Kemp & Post and Minor Goodrich, for appellant. Frank L. Perry and Williams, Goudge & Chandler, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Appeal from a judgment entered after a demurrer to a petition for writ of mandate had been sustained, without leave to amend.

The matter involved is the validity or invalidity of a certain ordinance of the city of Redondo Beach. The petitioner alleged the existence of a public sewer in front of his property in said city; and after reciting the pertinent provisions of the ordinance above mentioned, averred that he applied to the trustees of Redondo Beach, and the plumbing inspector of said city offered to make connections between his property and said public sewer in a manner and with materials prescribed by ordinances and regulations of the said city, agreed to pay 50 cents for a permit to do the work, and promised to do all things required by the said trustees, except the payment of $5 for the sewer fund and $20 to the city or its agent for doing the work. He further recited in his petition the refusal of the trustees to comply with his request, stated that the charges for sewer fund and construction were unreasonable and without authority of law, and asked for a writ of mandate directing the issuance of the desired permit.

The ordinance which we are here considering, after providing that no connection shall be made with any public sewer of the city of Redondo Beach until a permit has been obtained from the plumbing inspector, and that all connections must be made pursuant to sections 15 and 16 thereof, declares that a fee of $5.50 shall be collected by the inspector for each permit for a sewer connection, of which 50 cents shall be a fee for the issuance of the said permit and $5 shall be paid into the sewer fund of the city. It does not appear in the petition what use is made of the sewer fund.

Sections 15 and 16 are as follows:

"The city of Redondo Beach, its duly authorized agents, servants, or employees, shall have exclusive right to make connections with the public sewer of Redondo Beach, and for laying laterals therefrom through the streets and alleys of said city to the property line.

"Upon written request by the owner of any property who has first obtained a permit for a sewer connection, as hereinbefore provided, the city of Redondo Beach, its agents, servants or employees shall forthwith make a connection with said sewer at the nearest Y branch, and place a house connection sewer therefrom to the property line of said owner. For making the connection with said sewer and laying house connection sewer therefrom to the property line of said owner, the said owner of said property shall pay to the authorized agent or collector of the said city of Redondo Beach, the sum of $20. Such sum shall be payable as follows: One-half (½) upon making application, and the balance ten (10) days after the completion of the said work."

The remaining sections declare it unlawful for any person to make any connection with a public sewer, except as provided in the ordinance, and prescribe a penalty for a violation of any of the provisions of that by-law.

The regulation of the right of laying sewers in public streets is unquestionably a power conferred upon municipalities, partly by virtue of the provisions of section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution of California. The proper protection of the public health depends very largely upon the maintenance of a thorough and sanitary sewer system, and the restoration of the streets after the laying of pipes is an important subject of police control. In many cities, the carelessness of contractors, both in the work of connecting private residences with public sewers and in the filling of the trenches after the laying of the pipe, has become a matter of great scandal and has in some instances led to the adoption of very stringent rules for the regulation of sewer laying. It has been held, and we think very properly, that ordinances of a municipal corporation providing for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of sewers and drains are to be sustained as a valid exercise of police power. Taylor v. Crawford, 72 Ohio St. 560, 74 N. E. 1065, 69 L. R. A. 805. The power of a city to construct sewers and drains is also incident to the power to construct and maintain streets. Kramer v. Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 674, 82 Pac. 334.

The city of Redondo Beach is one of the sixth class and as such has power "to construct, establish, and maintain drains and sewers." Municipal Corp. Act (Gen. Laws 1910, p. 847) par. 862.

The power of maintenance of public sewers carries with it the power to provide reasonable regulations for the tapping and connection with such sewers. Upon this subject, Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, vol. 2, § 805, thus expresses the rule: "Authority to a municipal corporation, by its charter, to repair and keep in order its streets, is sufficient, without special grant, to authorize it to construct drains and sewers; and, when constructed, the corporation will incidentally possess the power to pass ordinances regulating their use and the price at which private persons may tap them, and also to protect them against injury or invasion."

As we have before observed, the use to which the fee for connecting the sewer is applied cannot be learned from the pleadings. We must therefore conclude that the "sewer fund" mentioned in the ordinance is lawfully expended for the benefit of the defendant's property, as well as in the interest of other owners of realty within the city. We know of no case in which such a reasonable charge (and we cannot say that $5 is an unreasonable imposition) has not been sustained. In many well-considered cases, such power has been upheld. Van Wagoner v. Paterson, 67 N. J. Law, 455, 51 Atl. 922; Patton v. Springfield, 99 Mass. 632; Fergus Falls v. D. C. Edison, 94 Minn. 121, 102 N. W. 218, 70 L. R. A. 238.

We next come to the consideration of the right of the city to reserve to itself the exclusive privilege of building the lateral sewer from the property line to the public sewer and making a uniform charge therefor. The petition shows that some lots are nearer to the sewer than others and that therefore the expense to the city is not the same in every case. We cannot say that this fact alone makes the ordinance so unreasonable as to be void. Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 146, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057; In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 334, 81 Pac. 955.

It seems to us that the case last cited furnishes an excellent authority both for a uniform charge and for the reservation by the city to itself of the right of laying sewers in its streets from the property lines to the main public sewers. The ordinance considered in that case had reference to the disposal of garbage by the city's agents. Speaking of the alleged unfairness in the difference of rates charged owners of hotels and householders, this court said, as might well be said here: "A municipal ordinance must be very clearly obnoxious to such objection before it will be declared invalid. 'Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of its validity, and all doubts resolved in a way to uphold the law-making power; and a contrary conclusion will never be reached upon light consideration. It is the province and right of the municipality to regulate its local affairs—within the law, of course—and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, except it manifestly appear that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality, and contravenes rights secured to the citizen by the Constitution, or laws made in pursuance thereof.' Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 416, 44 Pac. 725 [32 L. R. A. 527]; Ex parte McKenna, 126 Cal. 432, 58 Pac. 916; Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 563, 77 Pac. 455 [65 L. R. A. 946]." In the majority opinion in that case, signed by six of the justices, the following language is adopted with approval from the case of California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 126 Fed. 29, 61 C. C. A. 91: "Laws or ordinances enacted under the police power for the protection of the public health, reasonably adapted to that end, are not unconstitutional, because they may incidentally operate to deprive individuals of their property or its use without compensation, or interfere with their personal liberty, nor because they may give one person a monopoly of a certain business or occupation; private rights being required to yield in such case to the public good." And in the concurring opinion, Mr. Chief Justice Beatty says: "The only objection to the validity of the ordinance which the petitioner is in a position to urge relates to the power of the municipality to reserve to itself the exclusive right, through its own selected agents, to collect and remove those refuse matters which are, or by delay in removal may become, a public nuisance. That the city has this right I think is clear, and so far as the ordinance secures it, no doubt it is valid. The petitioner has therefore violated its valid provisions, and subjected himself to the penalty imposed."

By a parity of reasoning we may well say that in so important a measure for the protection of the public health as the laying of sewers in the public streets, we must construe all ordinances relating to that subject with a view to giving them operation, unless they are clearly obnoxious to reason, and obviously violative of constitutional provisions or general laws; and that in such a matter, in which a city is given a wide discretionary power, the reservation to itself of the right to do the actual work of laying and connecting the lateral sewers is not only lawful, but perhaps laudable. We cannot say that either the charge of $5 for connecting with a public sewer or that of $20 for construction is unreasonable.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 502

PETERSON v. CODY et al. (Civ. No. 764.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 16, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1911.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—CONVEYANCES—RESERVATION.

Plaintiff whose land was bordered by a stream conveyed water to his residence by means of a flume and thereafter he conveyed a strip of land bordering on the stream, and the deed reserved the right to "take and use the water as now taken and used" and the right to repair and maintain flumes "necessary to conduct the amount of water now appropriated and used that are accustomed to flow across the lands conveyed." Held, that plaintiff's rights were limited to the amount of water used by him at the time of conveyance, irrespective of the amount that flowed in the flume.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Thomas H. Peterson against F. A. Cody and another. Appeal by plaintiff from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

Cassin & Lucas, for appellant. H. C. Wyckoff and W. M. Gardner, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

In the year 1885 the plaintiff owned a tract of land in Santa Cruz county consisting of 159 acres, which land for some distance bordered on a stream of water known as Marshall creek. From this creek to his residence, which was some distance back from the creek, plaintiff had a flume by means of which he carried water from the creek to his residence. On February 12, 1885, plaintiff and his wife conveyed to James P. Pierce a portion of said tract which bordered on Marshall creek, but they retained the back portion of the farm on which their residence was situated. Part of plaintiff's flume was built upon lands conveyed to Pierce. The deeds from plaintiff and his wife to Pierce contained the following reservation: "Reserving hereby from the operation of this deed the right to take and use the water as now taken and used by the parties of the first part, and the right to enter upon said land to repair and maintain proper flumes, pipes, or conduits necessary to conduct and lead on to the lands of the parties of the first part, the amount of water now appropriated and used by said parties of the first part that are accustomed to flow on, upon, and across the lands hereby conveyed." In 1889 Pierce conveyed the said land along Marshall creek to the Ben Lomond Land & Lumber Co. This company installed a four-inch pipe by which it carried water from Marshall creek to the town of Ben Lomond, using the water in a logging pond, and also as a supply for people living in Ben Lomond, and for other purposes. In 1892 D. W. Johnston purchased the property from the Ben Lomond Land & Lumber Company, together with the water system for the supply of Ben Lomond. In 1901 the defendant Cody purchased the property and water system from Johnston, and he has owned and operated it ever since. The case was tried with an advisory jury, which adopted that view that the plaintiff was entitled to the waters of the creek to the extent of the full carrying capacity of his flume, and rendered a verdict, finding that the plaintiff was entitled to $700,000 gallons of water per 24 hours; but the court accepting the defendants' theory, namely, that the plaintiff was entitled only to the amount of water actually taken and used by him at the time of the conveyance by him above mentioned, rejected the verdict of the jury, and found that the amount of water taken and used by the plaintiff at said time was 1,000 gallons per 24 hours, and rendered judgment accordingly.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Plaintiff contends here, as he did in the lower court, that under the reservation just quoted he is entitled to the amount of water that was accustomed to flow in the flume. Defendants, on the other hand, have contended throughout the case that the amount of water reserved is not what had been accustomed to flow through plaintiff's flume, but the amount that he actually used for beneficial purposes at the time of the execution of the deed from himself and wife to Pierce.

In his complaint plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to all the waters in said creek. Defendants denied that he was entitled to more than 100 gallons per day. On the issue thus framed the court found, as just seen, that the plaintiff was entitled to 1,000 gallons per 24 hours. Under no theory of the case is plaintiff entitled to the entire flow of Marshall creek, or to the maximum carrying capacity of his flume, nor does he in fact claim to be thus entitled. As before stated, he asserts that the measure of his right is the accustomed flow of water through the flume; but he introduced absolutely no evidence to show what this amount was. The defendants, on the other hand, to support their position, produced evidence showing the amount of water required by plaintiff in the year 1885, considering the size of his family, the number of head of stock he had, and the size of the vegetable garden which he irrigated. Based upon these circumstances one expert witness testified that the plaintiff was entitled to not to exceed 725 gallons per day. Another expert said that 20 gallons of water per day is considered in the engineering profession to be necessary per capita per 24 hours for household and culinary purposes, including all household uses; 15 gallons a day for a horse, and 10 gallons a day for each cow; that 100 gallons a day would be more than enough to irrigate plaintiff's small garden; therefore, that the amount of water probably used by plaintiff in 1885 was 450 gallons per day. The superintendent of the Santa Cruz City Waterworks testified that 250 gallons a day was sufficient for all plaintiff's enumerated purposes. There was other evidence on this subject.

The evidence thus introduced by the defendants showed the amount of water which in all probability was taken and used by the plaintiff at or about the time of the conveyance; and as there is no evidence in the case that a greater amount of water than 1,000 gallons per day flowed through the flume, we are at a loss to understand how the plaintiff at this time can successfully complain. However, we think, under the proper construction of the reservation, that plaintiff was entitled, not to the amount of water that ordinarily flowed through the flume, but to the amount of water that he was accustomed to use at the time of the conveyance.

There are two clauses in the reservation of the water right from which the intentions of the parties to the deed as to the amount of water reserved may be gathered. It is first stated that the grantors reserve "the right to take and use the water as now taken and used by the parties of the first part." Then follows the reservation of the right to maintain "proper flumes, pipes, or conduits necessary to conduct and lead on to the lands of the parties of the first part the amount of water now appropriated and used by said parties of the first part that are accustomed to flow on, upon, and across the lands hereby conveyed."

In both of these clauses the word "used" is employed; and for this court to hold, as plaintiff alleged in his complaint, that the amount of water so reserved was the total flow of Marshall creek, irrespective of whether that quantity was put to a beneficial use or not, would be to put a very extravagant construction upon the deed. The same observation will apply, though with somewhat less force, to the construction at present contended for by plaintiff, namely, that the amount of water, reserved was the quantity accustomed to flow through his flume, for it might be that more was accustomed to flow through it than was used by him. Such a construction would ignore the presence of the word "used." We think that the words "taken and used," and "appropriated and used," found in the two clauses of the reservation above quoted, may well be given the ordinary legal meaning of the word "appropriated," as used in connection with the acquisition of water rights. The authorities hold that an appropriator's rights are measured not by the capacity of his conduit, nor by the amount taken from the stream, but by the amount actually applied to a beneficial use. Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 496, 47 Pac. 454. We are therefore of opinion that the court correctly construed the reservation in the deed by limiting the plaintiff's rights (in the absence of evidence of the exact amount of water used by him at the time of the conveyance) to about the amount of water presumably so used; and we think that he cannot be heard to complain of such construction, especially as the court was quite liberal in computing the amount of water on this basis.

It may further be said on this point that the conduct of the plaintiff and the predecessors in interest of the respondents is inconsistent with the claim of plaintiff as set up in the complaint, for the evidence shows that Pierce, the grantee of plaintiff under the deed in question, shortly after its execution took water from the creek through a three-inch pipe from a point above the intake of plaintiff's flume, and no claim was at that time made by plaintiff that he had reserved all the water of the creek.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 551

INMAN et al. v. L. E. WHITE LUMBER CO. (Civ. 767.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 19, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 12, 1911.)

1. PARTIES (§ 88*)—MISJOINDER.
Where one is improperly joined as a plaintiff, the remedy is by a special demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 145–147; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. SALES (§ 351*)—ACTION—PARTIES.
Where F. and I. contracted in writing to sell and deliver ties to defendant, and F. was to furnish supplies for the camps and the money to carry on the business which was to be the source of his profit, and I. was to get out of the ties the product of his own timber and to receive the entire profit from the ties themselves, it was proper for them to join in an action for the price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 993, 994; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

3. SALES (§ 164*)—EXCESSIVE QUANTITY—LIABILITY.
Where plaintiff contracted to sell and deliver a certain number of ties to defendant, and he accepted and used a number in excess of the amount specified, he was bound to pay for the excess at least their reasonable value, as to which the contract itself was evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 386–390; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADING.
Where, in an action for the price of ties sold and delivered, plaintiff alleged that defendant agreed to pay a certain price for the ties, and recovery was had for the reasonable value, if the complaint should have been more specific, defendant was not harmed, there being no evidence of any difference between the reasonable price and the agreed price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075–4088; Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by John Inman, Jr., and others against the L. E. White Lumber Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & Mackenzie and McNab & Hirsch, for appellant. Robert Duncan, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was to recover $2,585, the balance due for the sale and delivery of redwood ties at 50 cents apiece. The court found, upon sufficient evidence, that "said plaintiffs sold and delivered to said defendant at said defendant's special instance and request 24,473 split and hewn merchantable redwood railroad ties; that said ties were 8 feet in length and 6 inches by 8 inches in size; that said ties were delivered to and received and accepted by said defendant at its flume near Rollerville, in the county of Mendocino; that said defendant agreed to pay said plaintiffs 50 cents for each of said ties so delivered; that said defendant became indebted to said plaintiffs in the sum of $12,236.50 on account of said ties so delivered; that said defendant paid to said plaintiffs for and on account of said ties so delivered the sum of $9,651.50 and no more." The judgment thereupon followed in favor of plaintiffs for the balance due.

The main reliance of appellant seems to be upon the claim that "The evidence fails to show that the plaintiffs Inman and Foster were jointly entitled to recover any sum whatever from defendant, the evidence showing affirmatively that any sum or amount which might be due was due to the firm of Inman and Foster, a copartnership." But if we concede the soundness of appellant's statement of the legal proposition involved, it cannot avail to overthrow the judgment. This follows from the consideration that there was evidence that the transaction was not with any partnership, but with plaintiffs in their individual capacity. The testimony of Mr. Foster is to the effect that he was to furnish the supplies for the camps and the money necessary to carry on the business and this was to be the source of his profit, but that Mr. Inman was to have charge of the getting out of the ties, that they were the products of his own timber and that Inman was to receive the entire profit from the ties themselves. In this view of the matter the action could have been brought by Inman alone, but since the written contract was made with Inman and Foster as individuals it was at least proper that both should join in the action. It is at least entirely clear that if Foster was improperly joined as a party the remedy was by special demurrer and no possible prejudice has been suffered by defendant. The judgment is certainly a bar to any suit that might be brought by either of the plaintiffs for the same cause of action.

But if the foregoing objection should be considered meritorious its effect is nullified by the assignments introduced in evidence. On January 3, 1908, a communication was addressed to L. E. White Lumber Company in the following language: "Dear Sirs: Please transfer all credits standing to the account of Messrs. Inman & Foster to the account of W. E. Foster and oblige, Yours truly, Inman & Foster, per W. E. Foster, John Inman." Defendant recognized this order as an assignment and acted upon it. Appellant is therefore in no position to question it, although as a matter of fact it was made as a mere matter of convenience to enable Mr. Foster to collect the money due for the ties without being subjected to the trouble of finding Mr. Inman.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

But, accepting the theory that the claim was transferred to Foster, then any difficulty in this contingency is obviated by the reassignment of Foster to Inman as follows: "The undersigned W. E. Foster hereby assigns to John Inman, Jr., an undivided half interest in all moneys due to said Foster and Inman, Jr., in that certain contract dated May 23, 1907, between the L. E. White Lumber Company, a corporation, and the said W. E. Foster and John Inman, Jr., for the sale and delivery of certain ties to said L. E. White Lumber Company. W. E. Foster." As to this, the contention is made by appellant that as the contract under which the ties were delivered provided for the delivery of from 10,000 to 20,000 of the kind of ties in question, and as 19,303 had been paid for, this assignment could operate only to transfer a half interest in the balance, to wit, 697 ties. Appellant, however, cannot successfully urge this objection. The court was entirely justified in holding that all the ties were delivered under the contract. Appellant could have declined, of course, to receive any number in excess of 20,000, but after accepting and using them appellant manifestly assumed the corresponding obligation to pay for them. In the case of Randall v. National Ice Co., 19 N. Y. Supp. 633,[1] there was a contract to deliver 800 or 900 tons of ice. The party delivered 1,314 tons, and sued for the excess over the amount named in the contract. The court said: "Having received this ice in excess of the amount called for by the contract the law would hold the defendant liable to pay for the same, and, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, at the price stipulated in the contract." This case was appealed to the Court of Appeals and the decision affirmed. 138 N. Y. 644, 34 N. E. 513.

In Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443, it is held, as stated in the syllabus, that "when a person performing labor at an agreed price and for a stated time continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term of service agreed without a new agreement, the law presumes, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the terms of the original contract are continued; and, in an action of assumpsit for work and labor performed after the agreed period, the original contract is admissible in evidence as showing the terms under which the labor was performed." But, if this were not so, plaintiffs could at least recover the reasonable value of the ties in question. No inquiry was made as to the reasonable value, but the contract itself is evidence of this, and controlling in the absence of all other evidence. Adams v. Burbank, 103 Cal. 646, 37 Pac. 640; Hermann v. Littlefield, supra; Donegan v. Houston, 5 Cal. App. 626, 90 Pac. 1073.

The only plausible objection to this theory is that it is inconsistent with the allegations of the complaint. Therein it is alleged that defendant agreed to pay a definite sum for the ties. Under such a complaint it is held, though, in the Donegan Case, supra, that plaintiff many recover debts due upon different contracts. It is stated that "the plaintiff may recover in one count under an executed express contract for grading completed, and also under an implied contract for extra work, as together constituting the whole indebtedness due, and, where an account was stated for the whole indebtedness, the law implies a promise to pay it." But even if the complaint should have been more specific it is clear that defendant suffered no injury, since there was no evidence of any difference between the reasonable value and the agreed price.

The contentions of appellant seem to us destitute of merit, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 495

DIEHL v. SWETT-DAVENPORT LUMBER CO. (Civ. 834.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 12, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 220*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

The general rule is that one who remains in the service of his employer after notice of a defect in the machine operated by him, which increases the danger to which he is exposed, assumes the increased risk; but where the employé, electing not to abandon his employment, gives notice of a defect in the machine operated by him, and the employer promises to remedy the defects, the employé does not assume the increased risk, and unless the employer remedies the defect within a reasonable time, and accident results, the employer is liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 641–644; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 220*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—TIME TO REMOVE DANGER.

When the employer is notified by the servant of defects in the machine operated by him, the promise of the employer that the danger will be removed, without naming a definite time, is in effect an agreement by the employer that he assumes the risk incident to the danger for a reasonable time.

---

[1] Reported in full in the New York Supplement; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 64 Hun, 636.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 641–644; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 220*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—TIME TO REMOVE DANGER.

When the promise of the master upon notice by the servant of defects in the machine operated by him is that the repair shall be made upon the happening of a certain event, the master assumes the risk until the event has happened, and a reasonable time thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 641–644; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 220*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK — PROMISE TO REPAIR.

In an action by a servant for injuries caused by falling through a hole in a platform against a planing machine, where the testimony showed that the master had made a definite promise to repair the platform upon the completion of a particular job, and that he was still on that job when the accident happened, plaintiff did not assume the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 641–644; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 235*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—REPAIRS.

Where a person is specially employed by the master to make repairs, it is not the duty of a servant, injured through lack of repair, to make them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 711, 713; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 274*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries by servant from falling through a hole in a platform against a planing machine, evidence for plaintiff, that the engine driving the machine was too small for its load, and at times it was necessary to shut down the machine, and that when the machine was again started the increased burden reduced the pressure of the steam, and therefore strict orders had been given not to shut down the machine, unless absolutely necessary, was competent for the purpose of explaining why plaintiff did not stop the machine before attempting its adjustment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 945, 946; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 237*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the court specifically instructed that if the evidence was evenly balanced, the verdict must be for the defendant, it was not reversible error to instruct that if the evidence tending to prove a fact is of greater weight than all the evidence tending to disprove that fact, and if the evidence tending to prove the facts plaintiff is required to prove is of more weight than the evidence tending to disprove such facts, then the plaintiff has proven such facts by a preponderance of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 548–551; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction requested by defendant, in an action for injuries by a servant in a factory, "that after an accident has occurred it may be easy to see what would have prevented it, but that of itself does not prove that reasonable or ordinary care would have anticipated and guarded against it. For plaintiff to show what would have prevented the accident complained of is not proof of negligence on the part of the defendant"—has no application to a case where the accident arose from some admitted defect which had been called to defendant's attention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1150–1154; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Henry N. Diehl against Swett-Davenport Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Wilson, for appellant. Bishop, Hoefler & Harwood, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while in the employ of the defendant corporation in operating a planing machine at defendant's mill. The planing machine was provided with a wooden platform which was necessary for its proper operation. On the day that plaintiff began to operate the machine, one of the surface boards of the platform was broken by a timber falling upon it. This defect was known to the defendant's superintendent. For several weeks plaintiff operated the machine while it was in this condition, during which time he complained on a number of occasions to defendant's foreman regarding this defect. The foreman promised to remedy the same, and plaintiff's testimony is that because of such promise he remained in defendant's employ. On the day of the injury, and while the plaintiff was operating the machine, it became necessary for him to go upon the platform to adjust the gauge, and while so employed, the machine being in motion, his foot slipped into the hole in the platform, causing him to be thrown against the knives connected with the machine, and his right arm was cut off at the elbow. The jury brought in a verdict for $5,000, upon which judgment was entered. This appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The defendant asks for a reversal of the judgment and order upon several grounds, viz., that the trial court erred in the admission of evidence, that it improperly instructed the jury, and erroneously refused to give certain instructions requested by the defendant. It is also contended by defendant that the evidence does not sustain the verdict, and that the amount of the damages given is excessive. We will consider these questions in the order stated.

On the trial of the cause, plaintiff introduced evidence showing that at times during the operation of the machine at which the accident occurred it was necessary to shut it down, for the reason that the engine driving the same was too small for its load, and that when the machine was again started the increased burden thereby put upon the engine would reduce the pressure of the steam, and that, for this reason, strict orders had been given that the machine should not be shut down, unless absolutely necessary. Defendant contends that the court committed error in admitting this testimony, for the reason that it was immaterial, and also tended to confuse the jury and to make them believe that the defendant was negligent generally in the conduct of its business. The answer of the plaintiff to this contention is that the evidence in question was offered for the purpose of explaining why he did not stop the machine before attempting its adjustment, and we think it was competent for that purpose.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Defendant next contends that the court erred in giving to the jury that part of instruction numbered 9, to the effect that if the evidence tending to prove a fact "is of greater weight than all the evidence tending to disprove that fact," and also, if the evidence tending to prove the facts plaintiff is required to prove "is of more weight than the evidence tending to disprove such facts," then the plaintiff has proven such facts by a preponderance of evidence. Defendant argues that the words quoted in effect, inform the jury that if the plaintiff produces evidence to prove the facts necessary to confer upon him a right to recover against the defendant, then he shall recover, unless the weight of defendant's evidence in disproof thereof is of more or greater weight, and that such an instruction implies that plaintiff can recover without a preponderance of evidence. We think the instruction contains no such implication. Under this instruction the evidence, which must be of more or greater weight, was the plaintiff's, and not the defendant's. By it the jury was merely instructed that the plaintiff's evidence of the existence of certain facts must be of more weight than the defendant's evidence tending to disprove such facts; which was only another way of instructing that before a plaintiff is entitled to recover he must have produced a preponderance of evidence in his favor. If the evidence were equally balanced, plaintiff's evidence could not be of more weight than the defendant's. Besides this, in the very first portion of the instruction complained of, and repeatedly in other portions of the charge, the court directly stated that in order for the plaintiff to recover he must establish the facts of his case by a preponderance of evidence. Moreover, the court specifically charged the jury that if the evidence was equally balanced, the verdict must be for the defendant. The instruction in question standing alone was not subject to the objection urged, and certainly was much less so when the instructions are read and considered as a whole.

Defendant also complains of the action of the court in refusing to give a portion of one of its requested instructions. The part rejected was as follows: "After an accident has occurred, it may be easy to see what would have prevented it; but that of itself does not prove that reasonable or ordinary care would have anticipated and guarded against it. For plaintiff to show what would have prevented the accident complained of is not proof of negligence on the part of the defendant." In place of this proposed instruction the court charged as follows: "The defendant in this case cannot be held guilty of negligence, if the evidence shows that he failed to provide against an accident that would not have been foreseen by a reasonably careful person, or against an accident such as reasonable prudence would not have anticipated the need of guarding against." We think the instruction given stated the law applicable to the case, and that the defendant under the evidence in this case was not entitled to the one offered by him. While that instruction might have been applicable in a case where some precaution against accident had been omitted, the advisability of which had been made apparent by the happening of the accident, it was hardly to the point in the case of an accident arising from some admitted defect which had been called to the attention of the party charged. Here the whole cause of action was based upon the defect in the platform, known to the defendant and its superintendent.

Error is also charged to have been committed by the trial court in refusing to charge the jury, in effect, that an employé may rely on the promise of his employer to repair defects existing in a machine which the employé is operating only for so long a time as is reasonably necessary to repair the defect. This proposition is involved in defendant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and in our opinion is the principal question involved in the case. Undoubtedly the general rule is that one who remains in the service of his employer after notice of a defect in the machine operated by him, which increases the danger to which he is exposed, assumes the increased risk. Where, however, the employé, electing not to abandon his employment, gives notice of such defect in the appliance used by him, and the employer promises to remedy the defect, the relationship of the parties undergoes a change. The promise of the employer that the danger will be removed, without naming a definite time, is in effect an agreement by him that he assumes the risk incident to the danger for a reasonable time. Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 Pac. 521. But when the promise is that the repair shall be made upon the happening of a certain event, the master assumes the risk until the event has happened and for a reasonable time thereafter. In this case the promise to repair was made on several occasions, and during a time that the defendant was engaged upon "rush" orders, which it had not completed at the time of the happening of the accident. But defendant contends that in this case the plaintiff was not justified in relying upon the promise to repair, for the reason that the promise was too indefinite, and for the further reason that the time between the promise and the injury was longer than was reasonably required to make the repairs. From all the testimony it appears that the promise to repair was definite, and referred to the completion of a specific job upon which the defendant was very busy, and that it remained busy upon this particular job from the time of the promise until the accident occurred. The case of McFarlan Carriage Co. v. Potter, 153 Ind. 107, 53 N. E. 465, cited in Anderson v. Seropian, supra, is on all fours with the case at bar. In that case it appeared that the table of a machine was defective, and that plaintiff was injured by reason of the defect, operating independently of the saw, after a promise had been made to repair it as soon as the particular work then in hand was completed; and it was held that the employer was liable, although it was not shown how long it would take to finish that work; it appearing, however, that the injury occurred within the time the defect was promised to be remedied. It is unnecessary to review the authorities upon this point. A number are cited in Anderson v. Seropian, supra, where the reason for the rule is clearly stated. Applying these principles to the present case, the instruction was properly refused, and there was sufficient evidence to justify the verdict.

Defendant also contends that the repairs to the platform did not require mechanical skill, and that therefore it was the plaintiff's duty to make them. This point is without merit. Plaintiff claimed that the necessary materials to make the repairs were not on hand, and that, besides, plaintiff was ordered by representatives of the defendant to continue the operation of the machine until the completion of the job. Moreover, he had no authority to make repairs, as there was a person specially employed for such purposes. Anderson v. Seropian, supra.

It is also contended that the trial court erred in refusing to submit to the jury, at defendant's request, the special issue set forth in the thirty-fifth assignment of error. The issue proposed was fully covered by the third issue given by the court, and that being so, was properly refused.

There is no merit in the point that the amount of the verdict was excessive.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

14 Cal. App. 414

CLARK v. TULARE LAKE DREDGING CO.

(Civ. 739.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 999*)—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—JURY CASE.

A verdict will not be questioned on appeal, if there be nothing to show that it has been planted on evidence inherently improbable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3912–3924; Dec. Dig. § 999.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—BURDEN OF PROOF—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for the death of a boy 16½ years of age, employed as a leverman on a dredger, the burden was on defendant to show by a preponderance of the evidence that his contributory negligence was the proximate cause of the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877–908; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—YOUTHFUL EMPLOYÉ—WARNING.

Where a boy 16½ years of age, inexperienced with machinery, was employed as a leverman on a dredgeboat, it was negligence to put him in charge of the machinery, even if he was warned that this unusual position was hazardous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 180–192; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—BURDEN OF PROOF—WARNING.

In an action for the death of a youthful and an inexperienced employé in charge of dangerous machinery, the burden was on defendant to show that those in authority warned deceased of the danger in such a manner that he fully appreciated the danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877–908; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for the death of an inexperienced servant, injured while in charge of dangerous machinery, it was for the jury to say whether deceased was warned of the danger in a manner to impress on him a full appreciation of the hazard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1010–1050; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 994*)—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, declaring that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, section 2061 providing that they are judges of the effect and value of evidence, and section 2061, subd. 2, that they are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number, a verdict that a warning of danger to a youthful and inexperienced servant was not given, or that if given it was insufficient, cannot be reviewed, though no one directly contradicted the testimony of defendant's witnesses that they had given deceased such warning.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3901-3906; Dec. Dig. § 994.*]

7. Master and Servant (§ 276*)—Injury to Servant—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an action for death of a servant while in charge of dangerous machinery, evidence held to support a verdict for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

8. Death (§ 99*)—Damages—Loss of Minor's Services.

In an action by a mother for the negligent death of her son, 16½ years of age, it appeared that deceased at the time of his death was contributing to plaintiff's support; that his services were reasonably worth the sum of $85 per month, though he was receiving only $40 per month; that he was intelligent and apt at learning. Held, that the verdict for $5,000 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-130; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

9. Death (§ 88*) — Damages — Loss of Society.

In an action by a mother for the death of her son, 16½ years of age, the jury may consider as an element affecting the pecuniary value of the services of deceased to plaintiff the fact that plaintiff has been deprived of the comfort, society, and protection of her son.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

10. Death (§ 87*) — Damages — Measure — Loss of Services.

In an action by a mother for the death of her minor son, plaintiff can recover an amount which will justly compensate her for the probable value of the services of deceased until he had reached his majority, taking into consideration the cost of his support and maintenance from the time of death until such majority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

11. Death (§ 87*)—Damages—Services of Minor.

In an action for the death of plaintiff's minor son, plaintiff may recover for the probable value of the services of deceased until majority, regardless of the fact that at the time of his death he was intending to return to school after earning sufficient money therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

12. Appeal and Error (§ 1048*)—Harmless Error—Examination of Witness.

Where, in an action for the death of a servant, a witness was asked if he remembered a conversation with deceased, and denied having had such conversation, even if such question called for improper testimony, no harm resulted therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4140-4160; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

13. Evidence (§ 219*)—Admissibility—Attempt to Suppress Testimony.

In an action for the death of a servant while employed on defendant's dredger, evidence was admissible that a machinist employed by plaintiff with a view of becoming a witness, made an effort to go aboard defendant's dredger to inspect the machinery, to enable him to describe the same, and that those in charge of the dredger refused to allow inspection, as tending to establish an effort to suppress testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 762-770; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

14. Trial (§ 28*)—Order for Inspection of Premises.

Code Civ. Proc. § 128, subd. 5, clothes courts with control over every person connected with a judicial proceeding in so far as such proceeding is concerned. Section 610 authorizes the court to order an inspection of machinery by the jury. Held that, on trial of an action for the death of a servant caused by dangerous machinery, the court was authorized to make an order that a witness for plaintiff be allowed to inspect the machinery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 77-79; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

15. Master and Servant (§ 153*)—Injury to Servant—Youth and Inexperience.

Where a master employs a servant to do dangerous work, who, from youth or inexperience, may fail to appreciate the danger surrounding him, it is a breach of duty for the master to expose such servant, even with his consent, to such danger, without giving him such full instructions as to enable him to fully comprehend them, and to do the work safely, with proper care on the servant's part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 314-317; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; John G. Covert, Judge.

Action by Myra M. Clark against the Tulare Lake Dredging Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dixon L. Phillips, for appellant. Frank H. Short and H. P. Brown, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action for damages for the death of a minor son of plaintiff alleged to have been caused through the negligence of the defendant, a corporation. The cause was tried by jury. The plaintiff, in her complaint, claimed damages in the sum of $10,000. The jury, however, returned a verdict for the sum of $5,000, for which amount the court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff. This appeal is from the judgment so entered and from the order denying defendant a new trial.

The general points made by appellant are that the evidence does not support the verdict; that the court erred, to the prejudice of defendant, in the admission and rejection of certain testimony, and that the court erred, to defendant's damage, in giving and refusing to give certain instructions, and by the modification of others which were requested by defendant. The specific contention with respect to the specification of the insufficiency of the evidence to uphold the verdict is that the proofs disclose that the proximate cause of the accident by which the deceased received the injuries culminating in his death was his own negligence, and upon this ground a motion for a nonsuit was, upon the close of the case for plaintiff, presented and urged by defendant, said motion having been denied by the court. A similar motion on the same ground was made and denied on the close of the case by both sides. The consideration of this point will, of course, necessitate a careful scrutiny of the testimony, particularly so in view of the fact that a coemployé of deceased was the only other person present—one John Burnett—when the accident occurred, and was, therefore, the only living eyewitness who was or could be produced at the trial.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It appears that the deceased, Ray Clark, at the time of his death, was a minor of the age of 16 years and 6 months, approximately. He had been for a few weeks prior to his death an employé of defendant on its dredger, which was being operated in Tulare Lake, in Kings county. On the 1st day of May, 1907, while thus engaged, according to the averments of the complaint and the undisputed evidence, his foot "was so caught and entangled in a large shaft (connected with said dredger) and the machinery running and operated thereby that his foot and leg were crushed, broken, and mangled," and from the effects of the injuries so received he died on the 2d day of May, 1907. From the evidence it further appears that the deceased was one of three children of the plaintiff, from whom the father of said children had been separated and had lived separate and apart for some eight years prior to the trial of this action, and had during that period contributed nothing toward the support of his family. At the time of the employment of the deceased by the defendant and for some time prior thereto, the plaintiff resided with her children and her aged mother near Merced, although the deceased, at the time he accepted, through his mother, employment with defendant, was and had been for some time attending school in the city of Fresno. The accident causing the death of the deceased happened at about the hour of 2 o'clock in the morning, the deceased and said Burnett, the coemployé to whom we have referred, being at that time on the night "shift."

As stated, the deceased was, through plaintiff, employed by the defendant in the month of April, 1907. As to the circumstances of said employment, the plaintiff testified: "Mr. Lewis (president of defendant) said that he wanted him for a leverman. I asked him if he thought he could do it. He had already seen the boy, and he said yes, he thought he could do it nicely. That he seemed to be a fine looking boy, and he was well pleased with him, and that he would teach him how to do it or have him taught. And that it was a perfectly safe place up in the lever room, and that he was going to put him to work in the lever room. He asked me if the boy—or rather it came up in the conversation—if the boy knew anything about machinery. I told Mr. Lewis no, he did not, and I wanted him to be put in there where there was no danger. Mr. Lewis said there was no danger. That he liked the appearance of the boy and would teach him. Ray asked me about going to work for Mr. Lewis, I told him yes. He wanted to go and earn some money to finish up his schooling and help me. I told Mr. Lewis that, and he told me that he would take good care of Ray and that his wife would look out for him. I told him the boy hadn't been away from home much."

The witness C. E. Traves gave the details of a conversation with defendant's superintendent, had prior to the time at which negotiations for the employment of deceased were carried on with plaintiff, in which the proposed employment of the boy and the character of the duties which it was proposed that he should perform on the dredger were discussed. The witness testified: "I am 52 years old. My occupation or business is mechanical engineer and machinist. Have had about 25 years' practical experience in mechanical engineering. I know Mr. Lewis, I know Mrs. Clark, and I know the boy that was killed. Mr. Lewis came to my place of business at Fresno and wanted to get a man. I told him I didn't know of any, but I knew a good boy. I asked him what he wanted him for, and he said he wanted him to handle levers, and I said to handle levers on what, and he said on the dredger—down to our dredger. I said this boy has no experience, but he is willing to learn, and he is about the only support of his mother. And he said we don't want experienced hands because the captain would rather have the men and break them in, as he gets better men than we do with some man that is already broke in. So I brought the boy down, or sent the boy down, rather. I told Mr. Lewis that the little boy did not know anything about machinery; that he was inexperienced, but that he wanted to learn, and was ambitious and wanted to learn. Mr. Lewis replied that he wanted a leverman. Mr. Lewis said there was no danger whatever above in the lever room and that it would require but very little skill. He said it was away from the machinery and above, the lever room was."

Burnett, the coemployé of and on duty with deceased when the accident happened, described the dredger as follows: "Its hull is probably 50 or 60 feet long and about 20 or 25 feet wide. There is a bulk heading around it and an open space in the front part, and the engine is on the inside of that, and the shaft just in front of the engine. Forward and on the outside of the bulk heading is the turntable and boom. Above the roof in the forepart is the lever house and cables from the drums running through sheaves at the end of the boom and makefast to the clam-shell bucket. * * * There are three levers in that lever room, but only two operated, and there is a lever that is operated by the boat. There is no other machinery in this lever room. These levers operated the machinery that is down below; that is, it operates the friction where the drums are, operates the drum that rolls and reels up the cable to hoist the bucket and to swing the boom around. * * * The levers operate certain machinery that is inside the inclosure, and the machinery consists of drums and spools. * * * In describing to the jury the spools and drums that are operated by these levers I will do so in relation to the location of the engine. The engine is located on the inside in the central part. The engine transmits the power to the cogwheels. I am not much of a machinist and it is pretty hard for me to remember. Just in the fore part of the engine there is a wheel—a cogwheel—as near as I can remember, and connected with that is a larger cogwheel directly in front of it." Further description of the machinery and its operation will appear from this witness' testimony respecting the circumstances immediately preceding and attending the accident, from which it will further be observed that as to the precise manner in which the accident happened Burnett was unable to furnish any particular information—that is to say, that the witness could not tell exactly how the foot of the deceased was caught in the spider wheel. This paucity of information may be accounted for in the fact that, when the accident occurred, both deceased and Burnett were engaged in attempting to readjust or restore to its proper place a steel cable which had left its groove on the drum and doubtless their minds and attention were entirely absorbed by that performance. We will, however, present the story of the accident, as far as he was able to describe the circumstances thereof, as related by Burnett himself on the witness stand. After giving his age as 25 years and stating that he worked on the dredger in the capacity of a leverman before and at the time Ray Clark was killed, and declaring that there was very remote danger involved in the operation of the levers, this witness testified, in part, as follows:

"At the time Ray was killed, we were trying to clear a 'fouled' cable. It is a steel cable on a drum, and it should run in its proper groove. Each turn of the cable should run alongside of the other preceding turn. But, instead of that, it got outside in some manner of itself and that turn got twisted in some way, became fouled—that is what I mean by being 'fouled.' * * * That spool goes around and takes up the cable and this spool by revolving it became fouled, the cable became crossed over and was piling up. * * * In the first place there was a noise, a sort of knocking noise that seemed to come from the end of the boom, and I believe I called Ray, to stand on the fore part of the dredger to see if he could locate what was wrong. I believe that he went aft, I couldn't say, but I believe when I came down he said that the cable was fouled on the drum, and we went I believe to try to clear it. * * * I don't remember what we said. I know that we decided that we would try to clear the cable; don't remember what words we said, though. * * * Well, we got bars; something to pry the cable over to its proper place. * * * And part of the time I tried to get the slack of the cable in the fore part. I tried to get the slack pulled in of the cable while Ray was trying to clear it with the bars on the drum. And I believe he stepped upon this block (which was located within a few inches of the wheel in which deceased's foot was caught) and in some manner got his foot in the spider wheel that was revolving just back of him, and was taken over and crushed. * * * The wheel is located directly in front of the engine. * * * It is called a spider wheel; I suppose it is made of cast iron, but in the center the standards or spokes are wider than at the top. I think the diameter is about two and a half feet and it is connected with what we call a friction which jams into the other wheel —it is a friction wheel, but there was no immediate connection between the wheels and the lever. * * * Q. Tell us the dimensions of that wheel or any of those wheels around there, if you can. Ans. Well, I have down here two feet seven and a half inches, the diameter of the wheel. * * * It might not be exact measurement, but quite close, I believe. I took this measurement at the time the wheel was actually revolving. * * * The length of that block that Ray was standing on, the place where he was standing, is 18 inches. That is in the place for him to stand—where he was standing. That is the entire length of the block—that is, from the bearing to the end of the block where he was standing was 18 inches. The block is located between the drum and the wheel, that is what I call the spider wheel, which is about two feet seven and a half inches in diameter. * * * The distance from the block to that wheel in the center is from an inch and a half to three and a half inches. * * * This block was lying, horizontally, alongside of the wheel; that is, fore and aft. * * * The wheel is attached to a shaft, * * * and revolves the long way of the dredger. * * * The block that I have mentioned was also lying the long way of the dredger. * * * The distance from the block to the center of the wheel is an inch and a half—that is, from the center of the wheel—the parts, the ends or rim of the wheel, it would be three and a half inches. * * * At the time Ray was busy unfouling this cable I was bringing down the slack of the cable; that is, pulling from forward—aft toward the drum. I know that I was just about in front of the drum. I was probably two or three feet, maybe four feet, away from him, I was moving around at the time. He was facing the side of the dredger and so was I. I was looking practically in the same direction as he was and pulling on this cable for this slack so he could pry off the cable and make it move properly. We did not succeed in clearing the cable because the accident occurred. * * * When Ray was caught in this wheel he cried out and as soon as I turned around to my right I saw him going over the wheel, and I jumped around and stopped the lever, and pulled him out and called for help. The time that elapsed between the time that I first heard his cry for help and the time I succeeded in stopping this wheel from rotating was just a few seconds, just as quick as I could get to the engine to stop it; just as soon as the engine stopped the wheel stopped. The engine probably made one or two revolutions after shutting off the distillate, then stopped. This engine makes about 20 revolutions a minute. When I got back to where Ray was I pulled him clear of the wheel. There was no one else there when I got there. His legs were underneath the wheel, and he was lying flat on his back; he was lying back on the deck on his back, and his legs were underneath this wheel—he was lying there. The wheel I think is about three or four inches off of the deck as near as I can remember; that is the outer rim of the wheel is about four inches above the floor of the deck. * * * I think Ray, when endeavoring to release the cable, was standing over here in the fore part of that block. I believe that he had both feet on the fore part of it, but he would be moving around half of the time and maybe at some time he was standing with both or one foot across there, but I am not certain, as I was looking the other way; but at times he was standing with one foot on one side and then shifted one to the other, shifting his position. I don't remember seeing him standing that way. We were moving around, and I was looking the other way at the time." Continuing, Burnett declared that he was not in charge of the machinery of the dredger on the occasion of the fatal accident; that his duties at that time were to operate the levers in the lever room, and that Ray Clark was, on said occasion, the "deck hand," and as such had charge of the machinery. He testified that it was the duty of the deceased to "oil the machinery and watch and see that nothing went wrong—nothing got heated down below there. * * * Ray also run the engine and supervised the machinery and was doing this at that time." He stated that the dredger was lighted fairly well, although he admitted that, being oil lamps, they did not produce a particularly brilliant light. A hand lantern was necessary to be used about the dredger after dark. He admitted that, when the machinery did not work as it should, he, "being older than Ray, assumed the lead. * * * Ray was running the engine on the dredger on that watch, of course. That watch consists of myself and Ray Clark, a deck hand, just two of us, and the watch was from 12 at night to 6 in the morning—six hours work. * * * This was not the first dredger of that kind that I ever worked on. Previous to working on this dredger, I worked on other dredges near Stockton, where they built dredgers, and then I worked as a fireman on the dredger."

On cross-examination Burnett said that "there was plenty of room on the floor of the deck for him to stand there and do this prying with the bar on this cable," the inference from this statement being that deceased would then have been in a position in which his foot could not have come in contact with the spider wheel. The block on which deceased stood was some 18 inches higher than the deck floor. Burnett had no distinct recollection whether the wheel in which deceased's foot was caught had guards around it or not.

The witness Traves, who is a practical machinist, visited and inspected the dredger during the trial, and, after describing the machinery by which the dredger is operated and the manner of its operation, testified that the wheel in which the deceased's foot was caught had no guards around it. "I examined the machinery carefully this morning," he continued, "and know how it is assembled and put together, and I know the usual practice of guarding and protecting such machinery as I saw there." He further testified that there was no other way in which the deceased could have done the work which it was necessary for him to do to replace the cable in its proper groove than in the very manner in which he did attempt it. He said that he might have gone "clear around the dredger and come back on the other side," but that, had he done so, "he would have to step up on the same place and do the same work on this side. He couldn't do that very well on account of that large gear. There is a number of other gears going there; he couldn't get in there in the first place."

The plaintiff testified, in rebuttal, that, after the death of her son, she held a conversation with Lewis, president of defendant, relative to her son and the manner of his death. She said that Lewis "said he was sorry that the accident occurred, but that wouldn't bring back my boy. He said that he did not intend to keep him there; that the boy wasn't capable of that work, and that he had a man engaged to take that place, and that man had been allowed to go to a picnic, I believe at Laton. He said that if the man had been there that day you would have your boy. It seemed to be fate. I remember his using that particular word; that it seemed to be fate in the way I lost the boy. That this man wanted to go to that particular picnic and he let him go. That he didn't intend to keep Ray at all. He did not consider him competent to do that work, and was not intending to keep him there." In this connection, it may at this time pertinently be stated that Lewis admitted having in substance said to Mrs. Clark, on the occasion referred to by her, that "he had another man engaged to do the work that Ray was doing the day he met with the accident, but that this man wanted to attend a picnic at Laton, and that if he had not gone down to the picnic her boy would have been living yet."

For the defense, Lewis, president of the corporation defendant, testified, in part, as follows: "A day or two before I saw Ray at Corcoran, I saw Mr. Traves, the witness in this case, at a shop in Fresno. * * * I asked Mr. Traves if he knew of any experienced leverman and he said no. I told him I could use some gas engine men and that they could have an opportunity to learn and that Mr. Huntington (general superintendent of the dredger) had told me I could get better levermen by learning them aboard the machine than by shipping them down from the city. * * * Mr. Traves said he did know some young men and he said one of them had been in the shop that morning. He said he didn't know but what he would see him again probably and send him down. I told him all right, send him down. I told him that we paid $40 a month and board to beginners—we paid $60 a month at that time to experienced levermen; that a man qualifying himself as leverman would get a raise in pay. * * * After I saw Ray at Corcoran that I have just spoken about, I saw Mr. Traves that same day in Fresno. I think I went to his shop. He was doing some work for us. At all events he brought Mrs. Clark and introduced her to me in the afternoon at the Santa Fé depot. * * * I liked the looks of the boy, and thought he would make a good subject to make a leverman of, and have an opportunity to learn the levers, and if he got proficient in that he could get leverman's wages, which was $60 per month. Mr. Huntington was superintendent of construction and had control of things generally under me. Ray was a well set-up youngster; he told me he was about a certain age and he looked it. He was a bright boy, intelligent looking, and his movements were quick, I think he was about 5 feet 4 or 5 inches in height and might have weighed 140 pounds. I thought I would give him an opportunity to learn the work and when Ray went to the dredger to work they put him to running the gasoline engine on the dredger. I did not direct his work on the dredger at all. I did not give any instructions to the men about him. The boy was on watch 12 hours a day. The rate of wages that the defendant was paying were allowing the deceased for his work on the dredger during the time that he worked there was $40 per month."

C. T. Huntington, general superintendent of the dredger, stated that his business was that of the assembling of machinery for dredger work, and the construction "and placing in operation dredgers and particularly what is called clam-shell dredgers. * * * In this state I have been working on dredgers of this kind for about 12 years in all capacities, from fireman to captain, and during the last 4 years I have been superintendent of the construction and of the assembling of the machinery itself. * * * When Ray Clark came there to go to work the most of the machinery was to be assembled and this shaft that is spoken of had not been assembled. Ray was there and working from the 10th of April, 1907, and he was helping the crew assemble the machinery. * * * Before I began to try out the machinery to test it, to see whether it would do the dredging, I instructed each man individually to be very careful about getting around any moving portion of the machinery, explaining to him that a gas engine couldn't be stopped instantly, and to get caught in the machinery meant a serious accident. * * * When we went or started to operate the dredger to see whether it would do the work Ray was doing what we call deck work. That is to say, his duties consisted of looking after the gas engine and machinery, and oiling the machinery at regular intervals, and keeping general supervision of things, and to see that everything ran smoothly on deck. I gave instructions to the deck hands and to Ray Clark that in the event that anything should happen or go wrong or serious trouble, they were to call me. * * * I had occasion to say something to Ray Clark about going in and about that machinery. I spoke to him as I spoke to all the rest, cautioning him. * * * After I had given these instructions to Ray and all the others in the first instance, I did not say anything further to Ray about going about the machinery." On cross-examination Huntington said: "If I said on my direct examination that I showed Ray how to start the gas engine, I didn't mean it. I don't remember having said that and if I did say it, I am mistaken. * * * It is dangerous to go near this revolving wheel which is left uncovered; and it is not usual to guard such wheel and it is entirely unnecessary."

T. Wiley, who testified that, after the machinery was assembled and placed on the dredger, "the work that was assigned to me and my duties were nothing in particular and everything in general," said that, "as it was brought to my notice that Ray Clark was inclined to be careless about dangerous machinery, I told him personally, over and above collectively to the crew, that it was dangerous—certain parts of it were dangerous—and especially these wheels that were turning in close proximity to those pedestals. I mean by these wheels the spider wheel, because they were shown to me very distinctly and pointed out, and I carried out my orders to that effect." By cross-examination of this witness, it developed that he had ceased work for defendant, and that at about the time preparation was being made for the trial of this action he was stopping in Los Angeles. He said, referring to Lewis, president of defendant, "I wrote him about two months ago that I would like to go down on the Colorado river and he wrote me, saying he wanted me to make an affidavit before I left. I wrote him that I would rather take charge of the dredger, so I got a telegram from him about two weeks ago to come and take charge. We started up the dredger just about a week before this suit commenced. I am at present captain of the ship and have the supervision of the whole matter and at nighttime I am not disturbed for minor things that happen, and I am not called when the cable is foul as it was when Ray was killed. If the cable is fouled those in charge have to disentangle it. (Italics ours.) * * * I have had about 25 years' experience in running machinery."

Testimony offered by both sides, was received by the court as to the height and weight of deceased. Lewis said that, in his opinion, the deceased was about 5 feet 4 or 5 inches in height and "might have weighed 140 pounds." In this connection, he declared that Ray was a lad of intelligence and appeared from his talk to be familiar in a general way with machinery. Wiley expressed the opinion that deceased was about 5 feet 6 or 7 inches and that he would weigh about 150 pounds; that "he was well built, a stout young man." Plaintiff testified that she knew exactly the height and weight of her deceased son at the time of his death, and said that "he was just a fraction of an inch shorter than I am," and that he weighed 138 pounds, and that "he was not fleshy." Francis Cunningham testified: "I measured plaintiff's height this forenoon. She is exactly 5 feet 2¾ inches in height. And I consider that a correct measurement, as I used the same measure as I use in registration."

We have now presented, in substance, a fair statement of the evidence from which the jury reached the conclusion, under the court's instructions containing the law pertinent to the case, that the proximate cause of the death of plaintiff's minor son was the culpable negligence of the defendant. But, as stated, the defendant vigorously protests that the evidence clearly discloses gross negligence upon the part of the deceased, and that but for such negligence he would not have met with the accident which cost him his life. Upon most all the salient facts in the case there is a conflict in the evidence, but it is, of course, the duty of this court to treat all the facts brought out by the evidence which are necessary to support the verdict as having been found to be true by the jury, notwithstanding the fact that there may be evidence in flat contradiction of such facts. Obviously, under our system, the jury are the exclusive judges of the weight of all evidence and the credibility of all witnesses, and it is, as has often been repeated, peculiarly within their right and province, when considering the evidence, to give to it whatever weight it may in their deliberate judgment be entitled to, or, if it be their judgment that it is entitled to no weight in the determination of the ultimate issue disregard it altogether. And, having done this in a given case, their conclusion cannot be questioned by an appellate court, if there be nothing to show that their verdict has been planted upon evidence which is, on its face, or inherently, improbable and unbelievable. While a verdict returned for defendant on the evidence before us would undoubtedly stand upon a firm foundation, viewed from the standpoint of an appellate court, we, on the other hand, doubt not that a careful examination of the record by the light of the constitutional provision limiting the power of appellate tribunals in this state to the consideration of questions of law only, can lead to no other conclusion than that the evidence displayed before us is sufficient to render the conclusion of the jury immune from successful attack here.

We have before us a case where a lad of tender years, of immature judgment, and without previous experience in dealing with and in handling complicated and dangerous machinery, at an hour of the night when a boy of his age should be conserving by sleep his developing physical power, is put in entire charge, according to the only witness to any of the circumstances attending the accident, of the most dangerous part of the machine or the dredger on which he was employed, after having been expressly engaged to perform other service—that of a leverman —the performance of which was attended by very remote, if any danger, according to Burnett. He had then had, let it be noted, only three weeks' experience of any character on a clam-shell dredger.

Lewis, president of the defendant, himself testified that he employed the boy as a leverman, and the plaintiff testified that Lewis promised her, when the contract of employment was made, to assign the deceased to duties on the dredger in the execution of which he would be free from danger of accidents. Lewis further admitted, at least in effect, that the day the lad lost his life he was engaged in performing the duties of another employé, who had absented himself from the dredger for the purpose of attending a picnic. He said to plaintiff, after the tragic death of her son, that had said other employé remained on duty that day the deceased "would have been living yet." The irresistible inference from this statement is, it seems to us, that the deceased had been assigned to duties on the day of the accident which he was not only not employed to perform, but which he was not in truth qualified to perform. Burnett, who, though called as a witness for the plaintiff, apparently displayed little disposition to squarely and unhesitatingly detail the circumstances of the accident, said that the deceased was in charge of the deck and the machinery on that night. It is true that this witness stated that, when the cable became disarranged, he and deceased "mutually decided" to attempt restoring it to its proper groove on the drum, the manifest purpose of such statement being to convey the impression to the jury that deceased voluntarily and without suggestion by or directions from the witness, took the part that he (deceased) did in assisting in an attempt to restore the cable to its proper place. But, assuming that the deceased acted in the matter largely, if not entirely, upon his own initiative and volition, it still remained for the jury to say, from a consideration of all the evidence, whether he acted negligently or without due care in the performance of a duty which, it clearly appears, from the fact of having been taken from the service for which he was expressly employed and placed in charge of that part of the dredger where the greatest degree of danger existed, was forced upon him by those in authority.

It must be borne in mind that the burden was upon the defendant to establish by a preponderance of the evidence its defense of contributory negligence by deceased, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the accident and its direful consequences. There is no direct evidence showing negligence on the part of the deceased. The precise manner in which he received the injuries which produced his death is, as before stated, unknown, so far as this record is concerned. On the other hand, there are circumstances from which the jury could with good reason infer negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the accident would not have occurred and the boy's life forfeited but for such negligence. To begin with, the act of the defendant in putting the deceased in charge of the machinery under the circumstances was negligence, even if it be true that the boy was warned that this, to him, unusual position involved a hazardous undertaking. Then there is the testimony of Burnett to the effect that the lights on the dredger at the time of the accident were not "particularly bright," and the testimony of Traves that the spider wheel in which the deceased's foot was caught was without the guards usually placed about such wheels.

The burden was upon the defendant to show that those in authority over the dredger not only warned the boy of the danger attendant upon the discharge of the duties of a "deck hand" having charge of the principal machinery of the dredger, but it was also incumbent upon it to show that, if such warning were given, it was so given as that the deceased fully appreciated and realized the danger by which he was thus surrounded. And, at last, it was for the jury to say, from a review and consideration of the whole record, whether the deceased was warned by his superiors of the danger or risk to which he was negligently subjected, and, if so, whether such warning was such as to properly impress upon his judgment a full appreciation of the hazard.

It is very clear, from the verdict, that the jury concluded either that such warning, if given, was not sufficiently explicit and specific to influence the judgment of the deceased in any perceptible degree, or, in other words, not so comprehended by him that he fully realized the danger surrounding him, or that deceased was not cautioned at all by his superiors. It is no answer to say that, no one having been produced to directly contradict the testimony of Huntington and Wiley with regard to cautioning deceased about the danger of the machinery, the jury were not authorized to find that either no caution or insufficient caution was given. How can this court determine how the testimony of Huntington and Wiley on this point impressed the jury? It may be that the very manner of giving their testimony was itself, in the judgment of the jury, a complete contradiction of the truth of their statements. It may be (and who can gainsay their right to have done so?) that the jury felt justified in disregarding in toto the testimony of these witnesses. And, if they did, may an appeal court declare that they were wrong in so doing and in effect say to the jury: "You misinterpreted the manner in which these witnesses testified. You should have given their statements full weight and credit, and, as no other testimony was brought before you directly contradicting them, you should have found that the deceased was sufficiently warned as to the great danger of the machinery to have fully put him on his guard"? And so would this court be compelled to hold if we were to say that the testimony of Huntington and Wiley should have been, in the absence of direct contradictory proof, accepted by the jury as conclusive upon this point. And thus would this court clearly invade the province of the jury by passing upon the weight of testimony and the credibility of witnesses. Our Code explicitly declares that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses (section 1847, Code Civ. Proc.); that they are the judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them, except when it is declared to be conclusive (section 2061, Code Civ. Proc.); and that they "are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2. No one has ever doubted the right of a judge or jury to believe one witness as against another where they have testified in direct opposition to each other, and the power and right of the judge or jury, in dealing with questions of fact, is no different and no less where the witnesses all testify one way, and when a verdict has been returned in opposition to the testimony of all the witnesses, such verdict, it seems clear to us, must be accepted by appellate courts in this state as a rejection of such testimony on the ground that it is unworthy of belief and weight, unless from the face of the record itself it can be said that the jury's action is inherently unjustifiable. And interference with a verdict by an appeal court because it appears on the face of the record on appeal to be opposed to the testimony of all the witnesses cannot be, logically, any less an invasion of the province of the jury than if there appeared to be a direct substantial conflict in the evidence. It often happens, it may be said as a matter of common knowledge, that the most complete and conclusive contradiction of the truth of a witness' testimony is his own manner on the witness stand when giving it. And it is the very fact that juries and trial judges have the peculiar advantage of determining whether witnesses have contradicted themselves, not in terms, but by their manner of testifying, that has given rise to the familiar rule that appellate courts will not and cannot set aside verdicts of juries or findings of a trial court based upon evidence in which there appears to exist a substantial conflict. It is the duty of this court to conclude that the jury either attached no weight to the testimony of Huntington and Wiley to the effect that they cautioned the deceased, or that, although they might have cautioned him, the deceased was not thus made to clearly realize and appreciate the great danger lurking in the powerful complicated machinery of which he was negligently put in charge.

It was, furthermore, for the jury to determine, from all the facts and circumstances, whether the deceased, in taking the position near the spider wheel for the purpose of prying or attempting to pry the cable back to its groove, acted under the directions of Burnett. The latter, it is true, testified, as we have seen, that he gave deceased no directions, but that they "mutually decided" to act in a certain way; yet, Burnett was older than deceased by about 10 years, and had had some previous experience with dredger machinery, having been employed on other dredgers. This fact, we doubt not, was known to the deceased, who perhaps recognized the former's superior knowledge of such machinery and of how to handle and replace parts which had become disarranged. Burnett admitted that "in these cases (referring to occasions when the machinery became disarranged) being older than Ray, I assumed the lead." From all the circumstances it is not difficult to understand how the jury could have justly come to the conclusion that Burnett "assumed the lead" on the occasion of the accident, and directed the course and movements of deceased in the attempt to rectify the difficulty with the cable. But no useful purpose can be subserved by pursuing this question further. It must suffice to say that we have examined the testimony with extreme care, and have thus been led to the discovery of no just reason for interfering with the verdict upon the proposition that there is insufficient evidence to justify it.

Nor can we say that the verdict is excessive or beyond what the evidence justifies as fair and just compensatory relief. The boy was, at the time of his unfortunate death, lacking in his majority by 4½ years. Plaintiff testified that he had contributed, and was, when killed, contributing to her support. She was entitled to this during the remaining 4½ years of his minority. The earnings of the lad during these remaining years of minority cannot, as is the assumption, justly be computed alone upon the wages he was receiving at the time of his death. One of the witnesses, Williams, an engineer by occupation, testified that the services which young Clark was performing when killed were reasonably worth the sum of $85 per month. Besides, it is proper to assume that had he lived and continued in the employment for which he was originally engaged—that of leverman—he would, as he progressed in skill in that capacity, be entitled to an increase in salary from time to time until he would have received the highest rate paid for such services. He was, according to the witnesses, intelligent and apt at learning, and the jury were the sole judges of what, from all the evidence, his probable earnings would be during the remainder of his minority had he lived. Moreover, the jury were authorized, as the court properly instructed them, to consider and take into account, as an element affecting the pecuniary value of the service of deceased to the plaintiff, the fact that plaintiff has, by his death, been deprived of the comfort, society and protection of her son. Beeson v. Green Mountain, etc., Co., 57 Cal. 38; Lange v. Schoettler, 115 Cal. 388, 47 Pac. 139; Harrison v. Sutter Street R. R. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 1019; Fox v. Oakland Con. St. Ry., 118 Cal. 67, 50 Pac. 25, 62 Am. St. Rep. 216; Dyas v. Southern Pacific Co., 140 Cal. 308, 73 Pac. 972. And, obviously, this element of loss of society, comfort and protection of the son to be reckoned in determining the pecuniary value of the service of the deceased to his mother is difficult to measure in mere dollars and cents, and manifestly must, with the whole question of damages, be left to the good sense and sound discretion of the jury to be exercised in the light of all the circumstances of the case. As is said by the authors of Graham & Waterman on New Trials, p. 451, "in cases of this class there is no scale by which the damages are to be graduated with certainty. They admit of no other test than the intelligence of a jury, governed by a sense of justice. It is, indeed, one of the principal causes in which the trial by jury has originated. * * * The law that confers on them this power and exacts of them the performance of this solemn trust, favors the presumption that they are actuated by pure motives. It, therefore, makes every allowance for different dispositions, capacities, views and even frailties in the examination of heterogeneous matters of fact where no criterion can be supplied; and it is not until the result of the deliberations of the jury appears in a form calculated to shock the understanding and impress no dubious conviction of their prejudice and passion that courts have found themselves compelled to interpose." See Scally v. W. T. Garratt & Co., 11 Cal. App. 147, 104 Pac. 325, and cases therein cited.

It was the duty of the jury in this case, as the court in its charge clearly told them, to award to the plaintiff "an amount which would justly compensate plaintiff for the probable value of the service of deceased until he had attained his majority—the age of 21 years—taking into consideration the cost of his support and maintenance from the time of his death until he would have reached the age of 21 years," and we perceive no just reason arising from the record for holding that the verdict, under all the circumstances appearing, represents anything beyond a fair and reasonable admeasurement of the compensation to which plaintiff is entitled for the damage she has sustained.

There is very clearly nothing in the argument that, because the boy, prior to his employment by defendant, had been attending school, and that the purpose he had in view in seeking and securing employment was to earn means by which he might be able to give himself the advantages of an education, the time served in his attendance at school and the service he rendered to further his purpose in that laudable direction could not be considered as service of the minor to the plaintiff. No more important and imperative duty rests upon parents than that of giving their offspring the advantages of a sound educational foundation, and the earnings of a minor dedicated to such purpose become for that reason no less the result of service to the parents than if he should turn them over directly to those naturally responsible for his custody, care, maintenance and education to be used for some other purpose within the scope of the duties of the parents as such.

2. There are 41 assignments of error involving the court's rulings upon the evidence. We cannot give, nor is it necessary to give, all these special attention in this opinion. We shall, however, notice some of the exceptions on this score, and as to the others —indeed, as to all—it may be said generally that we have discovered nothing prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

The motions for a nonsuit were based upon the alleged ground that the evidence shows that the accident in which the deceased lost his life was proximately occasioned by his own negligence. The view which we have expressed respecting the point that the evidence does not justify the verdict is a sufficient answer to the contention that the exceptions to the court's adverse rulings on said motions are well taken.

Exception No. 2 is addressed to the ruling of the court allowing the witness Burnett to answer the following question over the objection of defendant: "You remember having a conversation with Ray Clark, just a short time before the accident occurred, and saying that the reason they didn't have more lights there (referring to the dredger) was because they were afraid of an explosion?" The witness denied having had such a conversation with the deceased at the time mentioned, and, even if the question called for testimony which was for any reason improper, manifestly no harm could have resulted to the defendant either by the question or the answer.

The witness Williams, with a view of becoming a witness for plaintiff, made an effort to go aboard the dredger for the purpose of inspecting the machinery, and thus equipping himself with such knowledge as would enable him to describe to the jury the dredger and the operation of its machinery. He was accompanied by counsel for plaintiff and one of the latter's surviving sons. The parties in charge of the dredger at the time would not permit them to go upon the dredger. Plaintiff introduced Williams to show the attitude of the employés of defendant in this matter, and the court, over an objection by defendant, permitted the witness to testify that the officers in charge of the dredger had flatly refused to allow him to inspect and examine its machinery while in motion or at all. It is claimed that the allowance of said testimony was prejudicial error. We do not think so. Williams is a machinist and a stationary engineer, and it was proper to admit testimony which would bring clearly before the minds of the jury a description of the character of the machinery which the defendant had put the deceased in charge of and the nature of the operation of said machinery for the purpose of illustrating the probable manner in which the accident occurred. The refusal by the defendant's employés to permit this inspection, knowing, as they did, the purpose for which it was to be made, was a circumstance—whether of much weight or little weight it mattered not—tending to disclose a disposition on the part of the superintendent or captain to prevent plaintiff from presenting as complete a case as the circumstances would permit. It was, in other words, a circumstance having a direct tendency to establish an effort on the part of the defendant to suppress testimony, and there has never been any doubt that testimony showing or tending to show an attempt upon the part of a party to a suit to cover up, conceal, or otherwise prevent pertinent facts from being presented to the court or jury is competent and proper.

Exception No. 16 involves the action of the court in making an order that a witness for plaintiff be allowed to inspect or examine the machinery. It is contended that the court acted in excess of its authority in making this order, and thus committed error which was damaging to the defendant's rights. There is, so far as we know, no express provision of law authorizing the course adopted by the court. But every court has certain inherent power—power which, exercised within reasonable and proper limits, authorizes it to go beyond its express powers where the interest of justice imperatively demands such a course. Moreover, by section 128, subd. 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, every court is in general language clothed with full control and power over every person connected with a judicial proceeding before it, in so far as said proceeding is concerned, and we fail to see in the action of a court compelling the production of any relevant and competent testimony which will make clear or tend to make clear the truth as to a disputed question of fact anything in contravention of either the letter or spirit of subdivision 5 of that section of our Code. We perceive no distinction between the proposition here and the one presented and discussed in the case of Johnston v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 536, 540, 89 Pac. 348, 351, where, in an action for personal injuries, the trial court was appealed to by the defendant for an order allowing the plaintiff to be examined as to her injuries and the effect thereof by physicians of the defendant's own choosing, testimony bearing upon that subject having been given by physicians who had been employed by and were introduced as witnesses for plaintiff. The court denied this application upon the ground that it had no power to make the order, and on appeal the Supreme Court held that the ruling was erroneous; that the court was authorized to make said order by virtue of the provisions of subdivision 5 of section 128 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, and quotes, approvingly, the following from the case of Wanek v. City of Winona, 78 Minn. 98, 80 N. W. 851, 46 L. R. A. 448, 79 Am. St. Rep. 354: "To allow the plaintiff in such cases to call in as many friendly physicians as he pleases, and have them examine his person and leave him wholly at the mercy of such witnesses as the plaintiff sees fit to call constitutes a denial of justice too gross in our judgment to be tolerated for one moment." See the innumerable cases in Johnston v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, cited to this point and in confirmation of the rule laid down in the Minnesota case.

In the case at bar, the only eyewitness to the accident was an employé of defendant. In fact, as counsel for plaintiff suggested at the trial, the plaintiff was compelled to secure her witnesses "from the ranks of the defendant." As stated, we see no difference in principle between the action of the court in the case at bar in ordering defendant to permit an expert witness for plaintiff to examine its machinery and the order which the Supreme Court declares that it was prejudicial error for the trial court to have refused to make in Johnston v. Southern Pacific Co. Most certainly the same reason exists why the court in this case should have made the order complained of as exists for making an order for the purpose for which the order in the cited case should have been made. If the testimony relative to the nature and character and construction and operation of defendant's machinery had been confined exclusively to that received through defendant's own employés, it is safe to say that the jury would have received an unsatisfactory description of the general and the particular situation on the dredger on the occasion of the accident as to all the important objective or physical facts that might or did tend to reflect some light on the manner and circumstances of the accident. And the testimony of the expert, having been confined to a description of the machinery and the manner of its operation, could no more operate prejudicially against the rights of the defendant than a diagram or a model of the machinery, a familiar method adopted by courts for clarifying testimony otherwise not easily or readily understood. Furthermore, the court could, in the exercise of its discretion, have ordered an inspection of the machine by the jury (section 610, Code Civ. Proc.), and manifestly this course would have involved greater risk of error than that pursued by the court. Our conclusion is that the court in no manner or degree transcended its power or authority in ordering defendant to allow plaintiff's expert to examine the machinery and give testimony relative thereto.

3. Instruction No. 1, given to the jury by the court, and which is objected to as erroneous, reads: "You are instructed that where a master employs a servant to do dangerous work, or to do work that must necessarily require him to move in and about moving machinery of a dangerous nature, who, from youth, inexperience, ignorance, or want of capacity, may fail to appreciate the danger surrounding him at such work, it is a breach of duty for the master to expose such servant, even with his own consent, to such danger, or to place him in a position where it shall become necessary for him to encounter the same without first giving him such full and complete instructions as will enable him to fully and completely comprehend them, and to do the work safely, and with proper care on the servant's part." The foregoing instruction is founded upon language used in the case of Foley v. California Horseshoeing Co., 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87, and very clearly states the law with regard to the duty imposed upon a master in his relations as such with a minor in his employ as a servant. That there is a well-defined distinction between the duty resting on a master toward a minor in his employ and the duty he owes to an adult servant, is a proposition thoroughly settled both in principle and by the cases.

In the case just referred to the facts are strikingly similar to those in the case at bar. There the minor, who was of the age of 14 years, was originally "employed by defendant to punch holes in horseshoes by means of a machine known as a horseshoe punching machine." Subsequently the boy was ordered by an assistant foreman of defendant "to adjust a portion of the mechanism operating the punching machine," to adjust which involved a hazardous undertaking. Plaintiff was not "familiar with the mechanism and the manner of adjusting the same, and was ignorant of the hazard." The boy, obeying the order thus given him, was engaged in correcting the defect when the machine, by reason of said defect, was suddenly set in motion and the injuries complained of were thereby sustained. It was contended that plaintiff, according to his own testimony, "knew the special danger and risk which, because of the defective appliance, must have attended the working of the machine, and that, having this knowledge, and his injury having resulted from this known defect, he stood as an adult with respect to his master's liability from any injury arising from it, and cannot recover." In reply to this contention, Mr. Justice Henshaw, in characteristically clear and forceful language, thus states the rule in cases of this character: "The question of the taking of a risk, the question of the assumption of responsibility in a given act, is determined as much upon the matter of judgment as upon the matter of knowledge. * * * Children are taught obedience. They are taught not to oppose their will and their judgment to those in authority over them; but in addition to this, and more important than all, the judgment of the child is the last faculty developed. * * * Knowledge he may have; facts he may acquire; but the ability to apply his knowledge or reason upon his facts comes to him later in life. The very accidents of childhood come from thoughtlessness and carelessness, which are but other words for absence of judgment. * * * Their conduct is to be judged in accordance with the limited knowledge, experience, and judgment which they possess when called upon to act, and it must, from the nature of the case, be a question of fact for the jury, rather than of law for the court, to say whether or not, in the performance of a given task the child duly exercised such judgment as he possessed, taking into consideration his years, his experience, and his ability." See, also, O'Connor v. Golden Gate, 135 Cal. 545, 67 Pac. 966, 87 Am. St. Rep. 127; Mansfield v. Eagle Co., 136 Cal. 622, 69 Pac. 425; Killelea v. California Horseshoe Co., 140 Cal. 605, 74 Pac. 157; Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 2 Cal. App. 148, 83 Pac. 173.

Instructions 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 15, which are also criticised, involve substantially the statement in different language of identically the same principle that is enunciated in the first instruction, and we need not, therefore, give the assignments as to them further attention.

Against the court's instructions there are other criticisms in which we see no merit.

The entire charge of the court, taken as a whole, stated to the jury the law applicable to the issues fully, fairly, and correctly.

After an exhaustive examination of the record, we have not been able to discover any reason which would justify interference with the judgment and order appealed from.

For the reasons herein given, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

14 Cal. App. 522

HAMMOND v. HASKELL et al. (Civ. 799.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 17, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 127*) — SURRENDER OF SHARES — AGREEMENT — PERFORMANCE — "WAIVER."

Where a note was executed in consideration of an agreement by the payee to surrender to a corporation its corporate stock owned and held by him, but the manner of the surrender was not prescribed, a delivery of the stock to the president of the corporation with whom and others the agreement was made was proper, and a failure to make objection to the mode of performance was a waiver within Civ. Code, § 1501, and Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, declaring that objections to the mode of an offer of performance which the creditor has an opportunity to state at the time to the person making the offer, and which can be obviated by him, are waived if not then stated, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 448, 476; Dec. Dig. § 127.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7375–7381; vol. 8, pp. 7831, 7832.]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 127*) — SURRENDER OF SHARES — CONSIDERATION — AGREEMENT — PERFORMANCE.

An indorsement on the certificate of stock surrendered, "Not accepted, no consideration," and a letter from the president and one of the other persons to the agreement reciting that they authorized no one to transfer the stock to them, and, as officers of the corporation, they could not cancel a certificate, were not an objection to the mode in which the payee surrendered the stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 448, 476; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 127*) — SURRENDER OF SHARES—CONSIDERATION—AGREEMENT—PERFORMANCE.

Where the payee of a note executed in consideration of his agreement to surrender to a corporation its stock owned by him delivered the stock to the makers, who made no objection, but who, by their silence, led the payee to believe that his act was accepted as a performance of his agreement, and they retained possession of the stock until after action was brought on the note, the makers were estopped from pleading nonperformance so as to show a failure of consideration, especially where it was not claimed that they sustained any damages by reason of the alleged breach of the agreement.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 448, 476; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

4. Corporations (§ 376*)—Purchase of Own Stock—Validity of Contract.

An agreement by the payee of a note to surrender to a corporation its corporate stock owned by him in consideration of the note is susceptible of the construction that the makers were making a purchase of the stock on their own account, and directed the delivery to the corporation for their benefit, and, so construed, the agreement is not invalid as involving a sale and transfer to the corporation of its own stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1530; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

5. Contracts (§ 153*)—Construction.

Where a contract is capable of two constructions, one making it valid and the other void, the first ought to be adopted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 734; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by L. F. Hammond against Loring B. Haskell and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Roland G. Swaffield, for appellants. John E. Daly, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover upon a promissory note made and executed by defendants to plaintiff. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendants Haskell and Pike appeal upon the judgment roll accompanied by bill of exceptions.

It appears from the findings that the note was made and delivered in consideration of an agreement whereby plaintiff promised defendant to return and surrender to a corporation known as the Home Bond & Building Association certain shares of stock which he owned and held in said corporation. Contending that they are not supported by the evidence, appellants attack certain findings to the effect that plaintiff indorsed the certificate for the said shares of stock so owned by him, and surrendered and delivered the same to defendant Loring B. Haskell on behalf of the said Home Bond & Building Association, who received and accepted the same from the plaintiff for and on behalf of the association; that at said time Haskell did not make any objection whatever to the mode of delivery so made by plaintiff to him on behalf of said corporation.

The note was delivered on November 19, 1907, and payable December 1, 1907. The testimony of Haskell is to the effect that he was elected president of the corporation on the date of the delivery of the note, and that about December 7th one Redburn handed him an envelope containing the certificate of the shares of stock of said corporation so owned by plaintiff, which certificate was indorsed to Loring B. Haskell and M. Pike; that upon receipt of same Haskell and Pike indorsed upon the certificate, "Not accepted, no consideration, L. B. Haskell, M. Pike," and, as thus indorsed, returned it to plaintiff with a letter, wherein, among other things, it was stated: "We authorized no one to transfer this stock to us, and as officers of the company we cannot cancel a stock certificate. We have also had notice from our principal creditor not to transfer a share of this stock at our peril. * * * We are trying to adjust matters and conserve the assets of the company for the benefit of all concerned. Mr. Pike and myself have put more cash into stock than any one else. We have also spent some of our personal cash, as well as our time, with no money in the treasury at present to pay us for a very trying, annoying service, since the company stopped active business. We feel that every one should stand up and share the loss, especially the officers and stockholders, and not try to put the burden on any few men." The agreement did not specify how or in what manner the stock should be surrendered to the corporation, and, in the absence of such specification, plaintiff very properly delivered the shares to Haskell, who was president of the company, and with whom and other defendants advancing the consideration therefor the contract was made. When the shares of stock were delivered to appellants they knew that such delivery was in performance of plaintiff's agreement to return and surrender the stock to the company. If they objected to the mode of performance, they should have stated such objections, thus enabling plaintiff to obviate the same; otherwise, the objections must be deemed to have been waived. Section 1501, Civ. Code; section 2076, Code Civ. Proc.; Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 Pac. 1115. The words indorsed on the certificate, "Not accepted, no consideration," could not be regarded as an objection to the mode or manner in which plaintiff offered to surrender the stock to the corporation. Neither is there anything in the letter showing that appellants objected either to the manner or time of the surrender of the stock. On the contrary, the letter indicates a desire on the part of appellants to repudiate the agreement and refuse to accept the surrender on behalf of the corporation, not on account of objections to the manner of performance, but because of the fact that they felt plaintiff should continue in the enterprise and share the loss, which appellants deemed inevitable. A further objection was that one of the principal creditors objected to the carrying out of the transaction.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Moreover, when plaintiff, shortly after December 7th, again delivered the shares of stock to appellants they made no objection to the mode of performance, but, on the contrary, so far as disclosed by the record, by their silence led plaintiff to believe that such renewed act on his part was accepted as a full and complete performance. They retained possession of the shares of stock, and not until they filed their answer was he apprised of the fact that they claimed nonperformance by reason of his failure either to deliver the stock in time or to the proper parties for and on behalf of the company. Such circumstances, even in the absence of a complete technical performance, should, in our judgment, estop defendants from pleading want of performance, especially where it is not claimed that defendants sustained any damage by reason of the alleged breach. Herberger v. Husman, 90 Cal. 583, 27 Pac. 428.

The validity of the agreement construed as a contract involving the sale and transfer to the corporation of its own shares of stock is not argued or presented. Conceding that such interpretation would render the contract invalid, nevertheless, this contract is susceptible of the construction that under its terms the defendants were making a purchase of the stock upon their own account and directing the delivery to the corporation for their benefit. "Where a contract is capable of two constructions, the one making it valid and the other void, * * * the first ought to be adopted." McVicer v. McKenzie, 136 Cal. 660, 69 Pac. 496.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 507

PEOPLE v. DRIGGS. (Cr. 180.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 16, 1910.)

1. FORGERY (§ 44*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

On a prosecution for forgery, evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 117–121; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

2. FORGERY (§ 16*)—EVIDENCE.

Where a forged lease was filed for record in the recorder's office at the instance of defendant and she paid the fees, it amounted to the uttering of the forged instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 51–53; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—INFORMATION.

An information charging defendant with forgery by feloniously, etc., making a certain lease and, at a subsequent date, of uttering the same, charged but a single crime, the offense defined by Pen. Code, § 470.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 339; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 681*)—EXPERT EVIDENCE.

That certain exemplars submitted to experts had not theretofore been established as genuine signatures was not error, where their validity was subsequently established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1611–1612; Dec. Dig. § 681.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 404, 491*)—EXPERT EVIDENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1944, when the court was satisfied that exemplars offered were genuine, it was proper to submit the same to an expert witness or to the jury for comparison with the signature in question, and a comparison might be made by the jury without the aid of experts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 892, 1080; Dec. Dig. §§ 404, 491.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 741*) — QUESTION FOR JURY.

The weight of opinion of experts or the result of comparisons between exemplars and the signature in question was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1713; Dec. Dig. § 741.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 269*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, on a prosecution for forgery, witnesses called by the people testified not as experts from comparison, but based their opinions solely upon familiarity with the signature of the person whose name was claimed to have been forged, and they were not examined in chief as to the exemplars, and no foundation was laid qualifying them as experts, cross-examination testing their qualifications in that regard was not permissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 949–954; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 216*)—COMPETENCY.

On a prosecution for the forgery of a lease, communications made by defendant to the notary who took the acknowledgment relating only to the acknowledgment and made to him merely in his capacity as notary were not privileged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 779; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 742*) — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where a witness admitted that he had testified falsely on former occasions and the transcript of his evidence abounded with admitted falsehoods, and he sought to explain why he had falsely testified, his credibility was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1138, 1719–1721; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

10. WITNESSES (§ 396*)—IMPEACHMENT.

It was proper to permit the whole of his testimony to be read to him that he might, as he desired, make corrections.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1261–1264; Dec. Dig. § 396.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George R. Davis, Judge.

Gertrude Driggs was convicted of forgery, and she appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 12 Cal. App. 240, 108 Pac. 64.

Paul W. Schenck and Geo. L. McKeeby, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Defendant was found guilty under an information charging her with the crime of forgery by willfully, unlawfully, falsely, fraudulently, and feloniously making, forging, and counterfeiting a certain lease, a copy of which is set forth; and, at a subsequent date, of uttering, publishing, and passing as true the same, with full knowledge, etc. From the judgment pronounced, and from an order denying a new trial, this appeal is taken.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Defendant offered no evidence and the verdict was based upon that given on behalf of the people. It is insisted that the evidence is insufficient, either to establish the forgery in the first instance or the subsequent utterance. We find competent evidence in the record to the effect that the signature to the lease was not that of Charnock, the purported lessor, and other evidence—by experts, it is true, but competent —to the effect that, by comparison of the signature to the lease with the admitted handwriting of defendant, employed as exemplars, the defendant attached the forged signature. The notary who made the acknowledgment testified that Charnock never acknowledged the signature and that his certificate to that effect was false, and that he attached his certificate of acknowledgment solely because defendant had stated to him that Charnock had signed the lease. The circumstance that the party who signed Charnock's name had attempted to make the signature appear as that of the lessor; in addition, that defendant represented that in fact the lessor had attached his signature, together with many other circumstances, all tend to show want of authority and were inconsistent with any other hypothesis. The evidence tends to show that defendant signed the name of the lessor, and that she had no authority so to do. There is evidence in the transcript tending to show that the lease, the subject of the forgery, was filed for record in the recorder's office at the instance and request of defendant, and that she paid the filing and recording fees. This was a sufficient uttering of the alleged forged instrument. People v. Baker, 100 Cal. 190, 34 Pac. 649, 38 Am. St. Rep. 276. The allegations of the information stated but a single crime. The offense charged was that defined by section 470, Pen. Code. No other offense was attempted to be charged. People v. Driggs, 12 Cal. App. 240, 108 Pac. 62, 64, and authorities there cited. Upon the whole record, we are of opinion that there is evidence embraced therein tending to support every material allegation of the information, and as a consequence no question of law in connection therewith is presented.

The fact that certain exemplars submitted to experts had not theretofore been established as genuine signatures is of no consequence, where, as in this case, their genuineness was subsequently established by uncontradicted testimony. Estate of Marchall, 126 Cal. 96, 58 Pac. 449. When the court was satisfied that the exemplars offered were genuine, it was proper to submit the same to the witness or jury for comparison. Section 1944, Code Civ. Proc. When so submitted and in evidence, a comparison may be made by the jury with or without the aid of experts. Castor v. Bernstein, 2 Cal. App. 706, 84 Pac. 244. The weight and effect of the opinion of experts, or the result of comparisons, was a matter for the jury. The admission in evidence of photographs of signatures and papers was within the discretion of the court, and no abuse in connection therewith is shown. People v. Crandall, 125 Cal. 132, 57 Pac. 785. After an examination of the various exhibits which are on file in this court, we feel able to say that no reasonable doubt can exist as to who wrote the signature upon the lease.

We find no error in the action of the court sustaining objections to certain questions propounded to witnesses called by the people, and who testified not as experts from comparison, but based their opinions solely upon familiarity and acquaintance with Charnock's signature. They were not examined in chief as to the exemplars, no foundation was laid qualifying these witnesses as experts, and the cross-examination testing their qualifications in that regard was not permissible.

We find nothing in the record supporting the contention that privileged communications were improperly admitted. The communications made by appellant to Ackerman, admitted in evidence, were only such as related to the matter of the acknowledgment and were made to the witness in his capacity as a notary, and we think properly admitted. The record discloses that Ackerman, the notary, admitted upon this trial that he had testified falsely upon former occasions, and the transcript of the evidence upon such former hearing abounded with admitted false statements. He sought upon this trial to correct the same and to attempt an assignment of the reasons why he had falsely testified upon previous examinations. His credibility and the effect which should be given his testimony was a matter for the jury, and, under the peculiar circumstances presented by this record, we see no error in the action of the court permitting the whole of his testimony, permeated, as it was, with admitted false statements, to be read to him that he might in such instances as he desired make the corrections; and it is a well-recognized proposition that under such circumstances an opportunity is afforded the witness to give reasons, if such he may have, why former statements were made.

The claimed error in relation to the giving and refusing of instructions is not supported by any reason why appellant thinks the action of the court in reference thereto was error prejudicial in its character, which, in People v. Fossetti, 7 Cal. App. 629, 95 Pac. 384, is said to be necessary. We have, however, examined the record in relation thereto and see no error in connection with the giving or refusing of instructions, nor any misconduct during the progress of the trial, either upon the part of the court or the district attorney, warranting a reversal.

The very voluminous record in this case is full of other exceptions taken during the progress of the trial, and some of which are presented by appellant in her points and authorities; but aside from those heretofore noticed, we find nothing meriting extended comment, nor any error in the record which can be said to have a prejudicial tendency, the onus of establishing which upon appeal is cast upon appellant. People v. Cain, 7 Cal. App. 168, 93 Pac. 1037. The verdict in this case seems to us to be the only one which a rational jury could return, and the denial by the court of a new trial proper.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 515

PEOPLE v. WILSON. (Cr. 261.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 17, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 12, 1911.)

1. Homicide (§ 177*)—Suicide Theory—Evidence.

The evidence that defendant sent to deceased the letter, signed in the name of an unknown person, containing powders recommended for his stomach trouble, and which being taken caused his death, the substance being strychnine, being dependent almost entirely on opinions of handwriting experts, and deceased having taken the powders without any steps to test their character, though he was cautioned that they might be poisonous, and reminded of a notorious poisoning case, defendant, whose theory was that deceased committed suicide, was entitled to introduce evidence that deceased was erratic at times, wrote letters to himself, and was able to write several kinds of writing, as this, in connection with the other facts, might reasonably aid the jury in determining whether deceased wrote, or might have written, the letter, and who caused the death; liberality in admission of evidence, which might in any way so aid, being required by the circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 306; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 452*)—Evidence—Opinions.

A witness, who has for a long time been a post office inspector, being shown an envelope purporting to be postmarked at station H, Philadelphia, and to have a cancellation mark of the postage stamp, is properly allowed to give his opinion that the postal mark is not genuine, in connection with his testimony that he knew that three years before the purported date there was no station H at Philadelphia, and his pointing out in detail the differences between a reproduction of the cancellation stamp in use at Philadelphia and the cancellation stamp on the envelope in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053–1055; Dec. Dig. § 452.*]

3. Criminal Law (§ 369*)—Evidence—Connection with Another Crime.

Evidence, if otherwise relevant to an issue in the case being tried, is not inadmissible because tending to connect defendant with another crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

John Walter Wilson was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

C. H. Wilson, Samuel M. Shortridge, A. M. Cunning, M. H. Farrar, and T. N. Harvey, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Maxwell McNutt, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HALL, J. The defendant was charged by information filed by the district attorney with the crime of murder for the killing of one Henry Bose, and upon his trial the jury returned a verdict, finding him guilty of murder in the first degree, and fixing the punishment at imprisonment for life. After the rendition of the verdict a change of attorneys for defendant took place, a motion for a new trial was made and denied. Upon the rendition of judgment in accordance with the verdict, defendant appealed to this court from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

Harry Bose conducted in the city and county of San Francisco a small business in the way of supplying globes for electric lights. The defendant was engaged in this business with Bose, either as an employé of Bose, or as his partner. Harry Bose at times suffered from stomach trouble. On the 2d day of December, 1908, he received through the United States mail by special delivery a letter addressed to him, signed "Charles M. Hawer, M. D.," and enclosing two powders, which by the terms of the letter were recommended as a cure for stomach trouble. The writer of the letter claimed to have learned from an unnamed friend of Bose that he suffered from stomach trouble, and represented that he, the writer, was sending the powders at the request of the friend. Harry Bose exhibited the letter and powders to several persons, including his mother and sister, and before retiring for the night, on December 2, 1908, took the powders as directed by the letter, and shortly afterwards died with the usual symptoms of strychnine poisoning. The powders contained a fatal dose of strychnine. There appears to have been no such person as "Chas. M. Hawer, M. D.," and certainly the evidence shows that Bose knew no such person. The theory of the prosecution was and is that the letter containing the two powders was written and sent to Bose by the defendant. There was no evidence that defendant and Bose were upon unfriendly terms, and the only motive suggested for defendant killing Bose was that defendant might upon the death of Bose acquire the business that Bose alone, or Bose and defendant, had been conducting.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Each of three experts in handwriting testified that the letter containing the two powders was in his opinion written by the same person who wrote various exemplars, including a dictated copy of the "poison" letter, proven to have been written by defendant. Besides this opinion evidence there was little that tended to prove that defendant wrote or sent the "poison" letter. In the "poison" letter the words "until" and "already" were both misspelled, thus, "untill" and "allready," and the same errors appear in the copy written by defendant at dictation. These errors, however, are common, and such as are made by many people. Some other circumstances are relied on as indicating guilt on the part of defendant, but it is clear that the backbone of the case for the people was the opinion evidence of the experts. Certain it is that upon the theory of the prosecution, Bose administered the powders with his own hand, and that the powders came into his possession under circumstances that would have excited the suspicions of a prudent person, and ought to have suggested caution in the use of the powders by the recipient. In this connection it may be noted that one witness, to whom Bose exhibited the letter and powders, cautioned him against using the latter, reminding him of the Botkin poisoning case, and tossed the powders into a waste basket, from whence Bose recovered them.

It is not claimed that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; and we have thus adverted to the salient features of the evidence as showing a case which we think demands of this court careful scrutiny of the rulings of the trial court attacked by appellant, and which rulings the counsel for the appellant earnestly contend deprived him of the benefit of material testimony.

Defendant advanced the theory that Bose committed suicide, and himself wrote the "poison" letter, and in support of this theory offered certain testimony which appellant contends tended to support such theory. It is the action of the court in excluding this evidence that appellant in part relies upon as grounds for a reversal of the judgment and order.

Where the deceased, with his own hands, administered the poison that caused his death, and the theory of the defense is that the deceased committed suicide, any evidence which tends to support such theory, or that tends to show that it may be true, is admissible. In such case the deceased, as well as the defendant, is, in a certain sense, upon trial, and evidence of any acts, conduct, or declarations of deceased tending to prove that he may have committed suicide is relevant and material. Nordan v. State, 143 Ala. 13, 39 South. 406; People v. Gehmele, Sheld. (N. Y.) 251. In the case at bar the crucial test as to whether or not deceased committed suicide is presented by the question, Did he write the "poison" letter? It is thus apparent that any evidence that would reasonably tend to prove that he wrote or may have written the "poison" letter was relevant and material to the issues involved in the case.

We now come to the particular rulings of the court claimed by appellant to have resulted in depriving defendant of the benefit of material evidence. Counsel for defendant asked a witness called for the defense, "Did you ever see deceased write any letters to himself?" and the witness answered, "I have." Of another witness he asked, "And, in your opinion, what was the character of deceased?" and the witness answered, "I think—I should say that he was rather erratic." In each case the district attorney, after the answer had been given, objected to the question, and the court after some discussion, in which both attorneys and the court took part, sustained the objection. The court did not in either case in express terms strike out the answer, but the discussion and ruling were such in each case as to indicate to the jury that the court did not regard the evidence as relevant or proper, and intended that the answer should be disregarded. Of another witness counsel for appellant asked the question: "Did you ever have any conversation with the deceased?" and the witness answered, "I did." Counsel then asked, "Relative to handwriting?" whereupon the district attorney asked, "What is the purpose of that question?" to which counsel for defendant replied, "We want to show by this witness that he boasted of doing several kinds of writing." A discussion between the court and attorneys followed, from which it is apparent that all concerned treated the question and offer as having been objected to by the district attorney. The matter ended by the court saying, "The objection is sustained." By these rulings we think the court deprived the defendant of the benefit of evidence relevant and material to the vital issue in the case.

Evidence that deceased was erratic, at times wrote letters to himself, and was able to write several kinds of writing, though when considered apart from all other facts and circumstances in the case might be of little weight as tending to prove that deceased wrote or may have written the "poison" letter, yet in connection with other facts in evidence we think this evidence might reasonably aid the jury in determining the question whether or not deceased wrote or may have written the "poison" letter. Confessedly deceased took two powders which upon the theory of the prosecution came from an unknown source. He took these powders without taking steps to test their character, although he was cautioned by at least one person that they might be poisonous. The danger was impressed on him by a reminder of the notorious Botkin poisoning case. The theory that defendant wrote the "poison" letter depended almost entirely upon the opinion evidence of experts in handwriting, which is a class of evidence which is subject to some infirmities, to say the least. The circumstances surrounding the death of Bose were such as to require the court, in the interest of justice, to be liberal in permitting evidence offered by the defendant that might in any way aid the jury in determining who caused the death of deceased. We think the excluded evidence was of this character, and should have been allowed.

For the purpose of supporting the theory that the "poison" letter came from defendant, the prosecution produced several envelopes that were found in the possession of defendant shortly after the death of Bose, and which appeared to be the same kind in all respects as the envelope containing the "poison" letter. These envelopes, however, appeared to be addressed to defendant, and bore what appeared to be the post and cancellation mark of the United States post office at divers places outside the state of California. It thus was necessary, in order to give the envelopes any evidentiary value against defendant, as tending to show that he had had in his possession a supply of envelopes similar to the one containing the "poison" letter, to prove that the post and cancellation marks on these envelopes were not the genuine marks of the United States postal department. For this purpose the prosecution examined as a witness one James O'Connell, who testified that he had been for nine years a United States post office inspector employed at San Francisco, and was able to tell whether a postmark was genuine or not. He was shown by the district attorney one of the envelopes above referred to, bearing what purported to be a postmark of the United States postoffice at station H, Philadelphia, Pa., dated March 3, 9:30 p. m., 1908, and also a cancellation mark of the postage stamp, and was asked if the postmark and cancellation mark on the envelope were the genuine postmark and cancellation mark of the United States post office. To this question the defendant objected as calling for a conclusion of the witness. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered that "The postmark is not genuine." Similar questions were asked of the witness and similar answers made concerning the post and cancellation marks on five other envelopes, without repetition of the objection.

It is now claimed that the court committed reversible error in overruling the objection. While the question is probably close to the border line, we do not think that the court erred in overruling the objection. The witness upon cross-examination stated in detail the facts and reasons why he was of the opinion that the postmark was not genuine. In such a case, even though the question should not have been allowed, a case will not always be reversed for the erroneous ruling, for the opinion usually has but little or no weight independently of the facts upon which it rests. Sampson v. Hughes, 147 Cal. 62, 81 Pac. 292. In the case at bar the witness had been at Philadelphia four years before the date of the trial, which would be three years before the date of the postmark, and testified that he knew that at that time there was no station H in Philadelphia. He also had in his possession a reproduction of the cancellation stamp in use at Philadelphia, and pointed out in detail the differences between such cancellation stamp and the cancellation stamp upon the envelope in question. "The general rule is that the testimony of a witness shall be limited to the facts of which he has personal knowledge, and that he shall not give his individual opinion thereon; but in many instances the opinion of a witness may be received in connection with his statement of the facts upon which it is based. The border line between fact and an opinion is often very indistinct, and the statement of a fact is frequently only the opinion of the witness." Healy v. Visalia, etc., R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 585, 36 Pac. 125. We think it was proper for the witness to give his opinion as to the genuineness of the postal mark in connection with his statement of the facts upon which it was based.

Neither was the testimony objectionable as tending to connect the defendant with the commission of a crime not charged. If otherwise relevant to any issue involved in the charge before the court, the mere fact that the evidence may tend to connect the defendant with some other crime is not ground for rejecting such evidence. The evidence in question was relevant to an issue involved in the case on trial.

Inasmuch as the judgment and order must be reversed for the errors committed by the court in excluding testimony as hereinbefore indicated, we do not find it necessary to pass upon the questions raised by the affidavits concerning newly discovered evidence, and the failure of the court to render judgment within the time required by section 1191 as amended in 1909. Upon a retrial, the defendant will have an opportunity to introduce the testimony of experts upon handwriting, and any other relevant and material testimony, and if he shall be again convicted the court will no doubt strictly follow the provisions of section 1191 of the Penal Code in the matter of rendering judgment.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

14 Cal. App. 512

Ex parte MILLS SING. (Cr. 181.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 16, 1910.)

1. STATUTES (§ 183*)—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

In construing a statute to ascertain the legislative intent, regard must be had not so much to the exact phraseology as to the general tenor and scope of the legislative scheme embodied in the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 261; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 195*)—CONSTRUCTION—DOCTRINE OF EJUSDEM GENERIS.

The doctrine of ejusdem generis is but a rule of construction to aid in ascertaining the meaning of the Legislature, but does not warrant the court in confining the operation of a statute within narrower limits than was intended by the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 273; Dec. Dig. § 195.*]

3. INFANTS (§ 16*)—"DEPENDENT CHILD"—OFFENSES—STATUTES—"ANY OTHER PERSON."

Under the juvenile court law (St. 1909, c. 133) defining, in section 1, a "dependent child" as any child found wandering and not having any home or proper guardianship, or who has no parent or guardian capable of exercising proper parental control, or whose home, by reason of neglect of his parents or guardian or person in whose custody he may be, is an unfit place, and providing in section 26 that in all cases where any child shall be dependent or delinquent, the parent or parents, guardian or person having the custody of such child "or any other person" who shall, by any act, contribute to the dependency or delinquency of the child, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, any one who contributes to the dependency of a child, whatever may be his relation thereto, becomes subject to punishment, the words "any other person" including all persons committing the acts specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 16.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 434–437; vol. 8, p. 7577; vol. 2, pp. 1991–1993.]

4. STATUTES (§ 205*)—CONSTRUCTION—MEANING OF WORDS.

The court, in construing a statute, must consider together all its provisions, and they must be reconciled as far as possible, and particular provisions must be so construed as to promote the general purposes of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 282; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

Application for a writ of habeas corpus by Mills Sing. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Geo. L. McKeeby and Paul W. Schenck, for petitioner. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and J. A. Donnell, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Whether or not the writ shall issue in this case depends upon the construction which should be given section 26 of the juvenile court law. St. 1909, p. 225. That section provides: "In all cases where any child shall be dependent or delinquent under the terms of this act, the parent or parents, legal guardian or person having the custody of such child, or any other person who shall, by any act or omission, encourage, cause or contribute to the dependency or delinquency of such child shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," etc.

Petitioner's contention is that, applying the doctrine of ejusdem generis to the act in question, the words "any other person" are limited in their application to those who stand in loco parentis, and it being conceded that petitioner stands in no such relation he cannot be charged with the crime as defined by such section. "In the construction of statutes for the purpose of ascertaining the legislative intent, regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which that intent has been expressed as to the general tenor and scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the statute." Palache v. Pacific Ins. Co., 42 Cal. 418. An examination of the entire act discloses that section 1 of the act provides that the words "dependent child" shall mean, any child "(4) who is found wandering and not having any home, or any settled place of abode, or any proper guardianship; (5) who has no parent or guardian willing to exercise, or capable of exercising, proper parental control; * * * (7) whose home by reason of neglect," etc., "of his parents or either of them, or on the part of his guardian, or on the part of the person in whose custody or care he may be, is an unfit place for such child." It will be observed that dependent children may be of a class who have parents, guardians, or custodians, while others may be of a class with neither. It is apparent from a reading of the entire act that the Legislature was intending to provide protection to all children who, by the terms of the act, were either dependent or delinquent, by attaching a penalty to any act contributing to such delinquency or dependency. "The doctrine of ejusdem generis is but a rule of construction to aid in ascertaining the meaning of the Legislature, and does not warrant a court in confining the operation of a statute within narrower limits than was intended by the lawmakers." Black on Interpretation of Laws, p. 143. To give the narrow construction claimed by petitioner would be to say that the Legislature intended to confer a benefit by protecting one class of dependents with whom some one was standing in loco parentis, while at the same time those dependents with whom no one stood in such relation should be unprotected. To give the words "any other person" a broader and more comprehensive interpretation, by saying that it was intended to include all persons committing the acts specified, would make the act applicable to all who are so unfortunate as to be included in the term "dependent." As said by our Supreme Court in Welch v. Williams, 96 Cal.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

365, 31 Pac. 222: "In the construction of a statute, all its provisions must be considered together, and must be reconciled as far as possible, and particular provisions must be so construed as to promote and not to defeat the general purposes and policy of the law." We are of opinion, therefore, that any one who contributes to the dependency of a child, whatever may be his relation thereto, becomes amenable to punishment under the provisions of section 26.

The writ is therefore discharged and petitioner remanded.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

14 Cal. App. 468

HUNTINGTON et al. v. CURRY, Secretary of State. (Civ. 789.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1910.)

1. Street Railroads (§ 14*)—Incorporations—Statutes—"Railroad."

Civ. Code, § 291, providing that the articles of incorporation of any "railroad" must state the kind of road intended to be constructed, the places from and to which it is intended to be run, its estimated length, and that 10 per cent. of the capital stock subscribed has been paid in; section 293 providing that such a proposed corporation before filing articles must have subscribed to its capital stock $1,000 for each mile of contemplated work; section 294 providing that before the articles are filed there must have been paid for the benefit of the corporation, 10 per cent. of the amount subscribed; and section 295 providing that before the Secretary of State issues to such a corporation a certificate of filing of articles of incorporation, there must be filed in his office an affidavit that the required amount of stock has been subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof paid in—have no application to street railroad corporations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 22-28; Dec. Dig. § 14.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 5899-5908; vol. 8, pp. 7777, 7778.]

2. Street Railroads (§ 18*)—Articles of Incorporation—Motive Power.

The provision in articles of incorporation authorizing the operation of "street railroads" by electricity "or other motive power" does not authorize the conducting of an ordinary commercial railroad; but such reference to "other motive power" relates only to the provision of Civ. Code, § 497, that permission may not be granted to propel street cars otherwise than by electricity, horses, mules, or cable, "unless for special reason in this title hereafter mentioned," and to section 509, authorizing permission to a street railroad to lay a track for grading, and to use steam or any other power in propelling cars thereon, when public convenience demands it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. Street Railroads (§ 18*)—Articles of Incorporation—Field of Operation.

The provision in articles of incorporation authorizing the operation of street railroads in the city of L. "and in the territory immediately adjacent thereto in the county of L." does not take from the corporation the essential characteristics of a street railroad; a street railroad not becoming an ordinary commercial railroad by its road being extended, under the authority of its articles of incorporation and the franchises granted by local authorities, beyond the limits of the city in which its principal business is conducted, for no other purpose than to extend its local street car traffic.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Petition by Howard Huntington and others for mandamus to C. F. Curry, Secretary of State. Granted.

White, Miller & McLaughlin, for petitioners. Malcolm Glenn, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HART, J. This is a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as Secretary of State, to file certain articles of incorporation, to issue the certificate of incorporation, and "do all other acts and things which are necessary or proper to be done in the matter of filing, certifying and issuing articles of incorporation," etc. The articles of incorporation which respondent has refused to file in his office are annexed to and made a part of the petition.

From the allegations of the petition it appears that the petitioners, at some time prior to the 19th day of October, 1910, associated themselves together for the purpose of forming a corporation under the laws of this state, to be known as the "Los Angeles Railway Corporation"; that, pursuant to said purpose, there were prepared, in alleged compliance with the requirements of the law, articles of incorporation of said railway corporation, and said articles, so prepared, and "duly subscribed and executed," were filed in the office of the county clerk of the county of Los Angeles, who, upon the filing of said articles, made and delivered to petitioners a copy thereof, duly certified and attested by him as county clerk, under the seal of his office.

The petition further alleges that, on the 20th day of October, 1910, the petitioners presented said certified copy of articles of incorporation to the respondent for filing in his office, and requested him to file the same therein, but that, notwithstanding that at the time of said request and demand so made of and on respondent the sum of $2,000, the filing fee required by law, together with the sum of $187.50, the license fee for said corporation for one year, and the further sum of $7.50 for recording the articles of incorporation, issuing his certificate of incorporation, and issuing a certified copy of said articles of incorporation, were tendered to said respondent, as such Secretary of State, he refused and still refuses to accept said fees and to file said articles of incorporation, or to perform the other acts mentioned and required of him in his official capacity in such case.

It is averred that the refusal by the respondent to file said articles of incorporation is founded solely upon the ground that said articles of incorporation were not prepared in obedience to, and are therefore not in accord with, the requirements of sections 291, 293, 294, and 295 of the Civil Code of this state. The Attorney General has appeared here for the respondent, and vigorously insists upon the impregnability of the Secretary's construction of the sections of the Civil Code mentioned. The question to be decided is raised by demurrer to the petition.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Section 291 of said Code reads as follows: "The articles of incorporation of any railroad, wagon road, or telegraph organization must also state:

"1. The kind of road or telegraph intended to be constructed;

"2. The place from and to which it is intended to be run, and all the intermediate branches;

"3. The estimated length of the road or telegraph line;

"4. That at least ten per cent. of the capital stock subscribed has been paid in to the treasurer of the intended corporation."

Section 293 provides that each proposed corporation mentioned in section 291, "before filing articles of incorporation, must have actually subscribed to its capital stock, for each mile of the contemplated work, the following amounts, to wit:

"1. One thousand dollars per mile of railroads. * * *"

By the terms of section 294, before the articles of incorporation referred to in the "preceding section" are filed, "there must be paid for the benefit of the corporation, to a treasurer elected by the subscribers, ten per cent. of the amount subscribed."

Section 295 reads: "Before the Secretary of State issues to any such corporation a certificate of the filing of articles of incorporation, there must be filed in his office an affidavit of the president, secretary, or treasurer named in the articles, that the required amount of the capital stock thereof has been actually subscribed, and ten per cent. thereof actually paid to a treasurer for the benefit of the corporation."

The petitioners here did not, at the time of requesting and demanding the filing of the articles of incorporation involved in this proceeding, present therewith for filing the affidavit required by section 295, nor do their articles of incorporation contain the statement required by section 291, their contention being that the sections of the Civil Code referred to have no application to street railroad corporations; and after a careful examination and analysis of the Code sections pertaining to railroad corporations of both kinds, the ordinary commercial railroads and street railroads, we are persuaded that the position of petitioners is sound.

But the Attorney General first takes the position that the articles of incorporation concerned here themselves disclose that the proposed corporation is not thus confined to the operation of a street railroad, but that, should the organization be consummated according to law, it would be authorized, by a certain provision of the articles, to conduct and operate an ordinary commercial railroad. This contention proceeds from the following language in said articles enumerating the powers of the proposed corporation: "To construct, or acquire by purchase or lease, or otherwise, and to operate, control, maintain, improve, and extend street railroads propelled or operated by electricity or other motive power, within the city of Los Angeles, California, and within the territory immediately adjacent thereto in the county of Los Angeles."

It is claimed that the authority thus vested in the corporation to propel or operate street railroads by means of "other motive power" than electricity, etc., is evidence of an intention or purpose on the part of and will authorize petitioners to operate, under said articles of incorporation, a regular commercial, and not a street, railroad; that such intention or purpose is further disclosed by the fact that the laying of the tracks of the railroad proposed to be constructed or acquired and operated by said intended corporation is not, as is required of street railroad corporations by section 497 of the Civil Code, limited to the use of the streets of the city of Los Angeles for that purpose, since it is also provided that the tracks of such railroad may be extended to any point "within the territory immediately adjacent" to said city in the county of Los Angeles.

The argument in effect appears to be, as to the first of these two propositions, that had the petitioners intended to construct and operate, under their articles, a street railroad only, they would not have authorized themselves by their charter to operate such a road by means of any other motive power than those to the use of which section 497 limits street railroad corporations. By that section it is provided that in no case shall permission be granted by the governing board of any municipality to any street railroad corporation to propel cars upon railroad tracks laid for street railroad purposes "otherwise than by electricity, horses, mules, or by wire ropes running under the streets and moved by stationary engines, unless for special reasons in this title hereinafter mentioned." (Italics ours.)

We think that a sufficient answer to this contention may be found in the fact that the articles of incorporation expressly declare that the purpose of the corporation is "to construct or acquire * * * and to operate, control, maintain, improve and extend street railroads," and if the language in said articles to which the Attorney General objects clothes the corporation with more power as to the means of propelling its cars than it is entitled to under the law, it must be presumed that the local authorities through whom its franchises must be secured, if at all, will not override the law, but will require the corporation, by appropriate and legal conditions and restrictions, to conduct the business for which it has been given existence in all respects strictly according to the mandates of the statutes. But we are not prepared to say, in view of the language of section 509 of the Civil Code, that it is not proper to make provision in the articles of incorporation for propelling and operating street railroads by "other motive power" than by electricity, horses, mules, etc. Said section reads, in part, as follows: "The corporate authorities of any city or town, or city and county, may grant the right to use steam or any other motive power in propelling the cars used on such grading-track, when public convenience or utility demands it, but the reasons therefor must be set forth in the ordinance, and the right to rescind the ordinance at any time reserved." Of course, it is the policy of the law, founded on excellent reasons, that street railroads shall not be customarily operated by means of steam power, and it is clear that, under the section from which we have just quoted, such motive power may be used only on the happening of the contingency provided for by said section; yet we can perceive no harm, even if it is not required, in inserting in the articles of incorporation a provision authorizing the use of steam power when the occasion for its use, as contemplated by said section 509, arises. It is not to be assumed that the provision in the articles for "other motive power" than those means of propelling street cars expressly enumerated by section 497 is intended to invest the corporation with power in that respect, in any measure in excess of that prescribed by the several Code sections on that subject.

The fact that the articles of incorporation contain authority for the extension of the street railroads proposed to be operated by the intended corporation beyond the territorial limits of the municipality of Los Angeles to points within the limits of the county in which said municipality is situated does not take from it the essential characteristics of a "street railroad." There is a clear and well-defined distinction, in the contemplation of our law upon the subject of railroads, between street railroads and those other railroads, which may, for convenience, be designated "commercial" railroads, whose termini may be situated many hundreds of miles apart. Our Supreme Court has pointed out this distinction in many cases, notably in San Francisco, etc., Ry. v. Scott, 142 Cal. 222, 75 Pac. 575, wherein it is established that, for purposes of taxation, the term "railroads," as employed in section 10 of article 13 of the Constitution, is not to be interpreted to include street railroads, although the latter may be extended beyond the limits of one county and into another. It is perhaps true, as the Attorney General suggests, that, while the term "railroads" may not, for a certain purpose, include street railroads, for other purposes such railroads may come within the generic term "railroads." And, while the Scott Case is not an authority directly in point here, it is, nevertheless, valuable in the case at bar, in that it demonstrates that there is essentially a difference between the two classes of railroads following from the different sources from which they respectively derive their authority to construct, maintain, and operate railroads and the difference in the specific objects and purposes of the two.

In the Scott Case, supra, it is said: "The franchise of an ordinary railroad is obtained upon terms and conditions equally applicable to all roads of its class by a compliance with the general law, which empowers corporations to construct and operate a railroad between the designated termini, located, it may be, in counties widely separated. Civ. Code, § 291. At the time the Constitution was adopted, the law provided that franchises for the construction and operation of street railroads along the streets and public highways could be obtained only from the governing body of the city or town in which it was situated. Civ. Code, § 497. The law has been changed in some respects since that time, but the substantial provision still remains that the franchise can only be obtained through the action of the council or governing body of the municipality. Civ. Code, § 497; St. 1901, p. 265; St. 1903, p. 90. * * * The only way by which a company can operate a street railroad in more than one county is by obtaining separate franchises from the local authorities of the respective counties, so located that the ends of the two roads coincide at the county line, so that the two can be in fact operated as a continuous line running from one county into another. But the franchises must remain separate and distinct, and local in origin, situation and character. (Italics ours.) * * * In the case of an ordinary railroad, the right which it may acquire to operate its roads along a public street is, strictly speaking, a mere right of way, similar to the right it may acquire from landowners along the route. It is a part of its roadway, and not a part of the franchise, within the meaning of the word in the phrase in question. It imposes no implied obligation upon the grantee or donee to facilitate the local public use of the street by carrying persons from place to place thereon. The right which a street railroad obtains from the city to lay its track and operate its road on a street, on the contrary, is the most valuable part of its franchise. It carries the obligation to serve the public in the use of the street, and is in furtherance of the original use. It does not receive this franchise by becoming incorporated, as an ordinary road receives its franchise to operate its road between its termini, but obtains it afterward by special grant from the municipality, and the thing thus obtained includes both the roadway and the franchise." See Railroad Com. v. Market St. Ry., 132 Cal. 677, 64 Pac. 1065; Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 47 Pac. 1023, 37 L. R. A. 622; U. R. Co. v. Colgan, 153 Cal. 53, 94 Pac. 245.

Thus it will be observed that there is a marked distinction between the two classes of railroads, both as to the mode and manner in which they are authorized to do business and their objects and purposes. And we think that this distinction has been observed and recognized by the Legislature in its varying legislation with regard to the two classes of roads, as we shall later on more particularly undertake to show.

Aside from the proposition that a street railroad corporation must, after it has become such, under our law, consummate the purposes of its organization in a distinctly different manner from that by which an ordinary railroad corporation may, after establishing its legal entity, carry on the business for which it is organized, the important feature which, in our opinion, differentiates the two, and upon which line of differentiation the Legislature has framed our system of laws with respect to railroad corporations, is to be found in the fact that the street railroad is designed to solely and exclusively transact a purely local traffic; a traffic which it would be impracticable for the ordinary railroad to carry on, even in those cases where its road runs through certain streets of a city as a necessary part of its main road. But we think the phrase "street railroad," as used in our Civil Code, has acquired and imports a much broader signification than the word "street," taken alone, would imply. Instances are numerous where street railroads are extended a considerable distance beyond the limits of the city or town to points where there are maintained pleasure parks and gardens for recreation and amusement (which is asserted to be a part of the scheme of the proposed corporation), and, necessarily, in such cases, there will generally be found long stretches of country which such roads must lay their tracks upon which are not within the city limits and over and through which streets are not laid out. May it be said that, merely because the road leaves the city limits for that purpose, it then, ipso facto, ceases to be a street railroad, but takes on the character of an ordinary railroad, subject to the regulations prescribed by the Legislature for the incorporation, organization and operation of such roads? We think the answer is obvious; for we do not think that any court can be found that will sanction the proposition that, where a corporation is legally formed solely for the operation of a street railroad business and the road is extended, under authority of its articles of incorporation and the franchises granted by the local authorities, beyond the limits of the city in which its principal business is conducted for no other purpose than to extend its local street car traffic, such road for that reason becomes in fact an ordinary railroad. No one would say or for a moment contend that because the street railroad company of Sacramento (if it be true) has extended its road to Oak Park or East Sacramento, suburbs of said city, situated outside its municipal limits, thus accommodating a large number of people, many of whom no doubt transact business in said city, becomes any less a street railroad. It in no manner or sense thus becomes a competitor of the ordinary railroads; its purpose and mission being, as are the purpose and mission of all street railroads, to meet a demand which the ordinary railroad, in the very nature of things, cannot meet. The purposes and objects of the two classes of roads may, by way of illustration, be likened to the relative positions of the wholesale and the retail merchant dealing in the same kind of commodities. In a general sense there is, of course, an analogy between them as merchants, but their special objects and purposes are essentially and distinctively different; the one supplying the trade, the other directly supplying the consumer.

But the most important contention of the Attorney General is that the provisions of sections 291, 293, 294, and 295 of the Civil Code apply to all railroads, regardless of their character or the particular purpose for which they are designed. We do not assent to this contention.

In addition to what we have already said in support of our view that there is of necessity, in many material respects, a marked distinction—one that is recognized by the Legislature throughout all its legislation with respect to railroads—between street railroads and ordinary railroads, there are other considerations which, in our opinion, confirm the proposition in its application to the present question. In the first place, it is as clear and unquestionable as any proposition can be that it would be absolutely impossible for proposed street railroad corporations to comply with all the requirements of section 291 of the Civil Code, unless the argument goes to the extent of maintaining that on every occasion that such a corporation, having designated the termini of its road in its articles, desired or found it necessary to extend its road to meet new conditions, which are, with respect to street railroads, constantly arising in growing cities, it would, for that purpose, be compelled to file additional or other articles of incorporation. Of course, the Legislature intended to impose upon a street railroad company no such obligation as one of the prerequisites to its right to establish itself as a corporation. And no less impossible would it be for the average street railroad corporation to embrace in its articles of incorporation a statement of the "estimated length of the road" it intended to construct and operate. This would be especially true in large and growing cities. For illustration, we may say that it is known, as a matter of common knowledge, that there are ordinarily large portions of the territory of the larger cities which are slow to build up or to increase in population, and that it is only where such outlying districts grow in population to that extent that there is a demand for street car accommodations, remunerative to the company, that street railroad corporations are justified in extending or will extend their service to such districts. New streets are often opened up and old ones extended or lengthened and thus new conditions arise which necessitate the extension of the local car service. It must therefore be plainly manifest that no street railroad corporation could insert in its articles of incorporation a statement of the probable length of its road. But there is another and more potent reason than any that has yet been suggested which would render it impossible for a street railroad company to give an estimate of the length of its road, and that reason grows out of the fact that municipalities themselves have full and complete control of and power over their streets, and whether such streets may or may not be used by street car companies rests entirely in the discretion of the governing bodies of such municipalities. If, therefore, a street railroad company should, in its articles of incorporation, either designate the termini of their road or give an estimate of the length thereof, or do both, it would still remain with the local authorities to say whether the termini should be as designated or the length of the road as estimated. In other words, the termini and the length of a street railroad are subject to the determination of the local authorities by the franchises which the law provides must come, after the company has been incorporated. Thus it must appear to be very plain that it is impossible for such corporations to designate in their articles of incorporation the termini of their road or roads, or to insert therein even an approximate estimate of the length of such road, or anything like such an estimate as is clearly intended shall be given, and which undoubtedly can accurately be given, by the ordinary railroads.

If, then, for the reasons suggested, these provisions of section 291 are not applicable to street railroads, may it still be held that the other provisions of said section and of the other sections mentioned are, nevertheless, applicable to such railroads? A negative reply to this question will, we think, be found in a further examination of the several titles and sections of the Civil Code bearing upon corporations and their formation.

That the Legislature recognized and intended to classify street railroad corporations as distinct from the ordinary railroad corporations, we think is a proposition which offers little, if any, ground for serious controversy. While there is no provision of the Code expressly classifying corporations, it is, nevertheless, to be observed that the Legislature has practically classified them. There are provided for in the Code 22 different classes of corporations, as to which there is specific legislation, each of said corporations being treated under a separate title; and it is to be remarked that, in the determination of the proposition whether the Legislature recognized and intended to treat as different and distinct ordinary railroad and street railroad corporations, it is a fact of cogent and persuasive significance that the specific provisions relating to said corporations are, respectively, to be found under separate and distinct titles. This circumstance, in connection with the legislation respecting railroad corporations as found in our Civil Code, is, itself, it seems to us, conclusive of the intention of the Legislature to treat the two classes of railroads as different and distinct from each other. This is manifestly not a strained or unnatural interpretation of the intention of the Legislature, but an interpretation which fully harmonizes with the essential distinction in the manner or mode in which the two corporations obtain their right to lay their tracks and operate their roads. Thus it will be noted that we have before us, as a guide to reaching the intention of the Legislature with respect to the meaning and scope of the sections of the Civil Code under consideration, these significant propositions: (1) That it is impracticable to apply subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 291 to street railroad corporations; (2) that street railroads are treated in said Code under the title "Street Railroads," whereas, the specific provisions as to ordinary commercial railroads are presented in the Code under the title "Railroad Corporations." In addition to the foregoing considerations, there is the mandate of section 510 which reads: "Street railroads are governed by the provisions of title three of this part, so far as they are applicable, unless such railroads are therein specially excepted." By the foregoing language, the Legislature very plainly emphasizes its intention to segregate railroads into two distinct classes, and as so segregated to enact as to each legislation peculiarly applicable thereto. If this does not necessarily follow from the terms of section 510, or if both classes of roads were to be governed by all the provisions of the Code relative to railroads, so far as they are applicable, why enact section 510? And if it was intended that, so far as applicable, all said provisions should apply to street railroads, would not the Legislature have expressly and specially so declared, as it has done with respect to the provisions of title 3? There is but one answer to these questions, it seems clear to us.

It is, however, argued that the reason for requiring that it be disclosed by the articles of incorporation and the affidavit that 10 per cent. of the required amount of the capital stock subscribed has actually been "paid to a treasurer for the benefit of the corporation" applies with equal force to street railroad, as well as ordinary railroad, corporations. This may be conceded; but the reply is that the right to incorporate and the prerequisites to the formation of corporations come from the Legislature, and if that body has not seen fit to require one class of corporations, in order to become such, to do things which are required of other classes, it is not for the courts to supply the omission, however weighty and forceful the reasons may be that such omission should be supplied.

Our conclusion is that sections 291, 293, 294, and 295 have no application to street railroad corporations, and that it is therefore unnecessary for petitioners to insert in their articles of incorporation the matters set forth in subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 of section 291 of the Civil Code, or to file with the Secretary of State the affidavit provided for by section 295 of said Code. In other words, we think the articles of incorporation presented for filing to respondent, and of which a copy is annexed to the petition herein, are sufficient in all particulars, and that it is the duty of the Secretary of State to file the same upon the receipt of the proper fee therefor.

The demurrer to the petition will be overruled, and in accordance with this order let a writ of mandate issue out of this court to the respondent, Hon. Charles F. Curry, as Secretary of State, requiring and compelling him to file said articles of incorporation in his said office of Secretary of State.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

159 Cal. 30

DUNGAN v. CLARK. (Sac. 1,849.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1910.)

1. Justices of the Peace (§ 36*)—Jurisdiction—Controversy Involving Title to Land.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 838, providing that no issue involving the title or possession of real property shall be tried in justices' courts, and requiring the certification of such an action to the superior court, an answer in an action in justice's court on a note, which alleged a failure of consideration for the reason that the payee did not own or possess an interest in a pump plant on land which he assumed to sell as a consideration for the note, raised the question of title, as, to maintain the defense, the maker must offer evidence that the payee was not the owner of the plant constituting real property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 83–97; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. Justices of the Peace (§ 36*)—Jurisdiction—Controversy Involving Title to Land.

Where the title or claim of title, the possession or right of possession, of real property, or any right growing out or dependent on either, is alleged in the pleadings in an action before a justice as an issuable fact, the case involves title or possession of real property and must be transferred to the superior court under Code Civ. Proc. § 838.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 83–97; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

3. Justices of the Peace (§ 75*)—Jurisdiction—Transfer to Superior Court.

Where an action begun in justice's court was properly certified to the superior court on the ground that title to real estate was involved by reason of the answer, the fact that the finding on the issue of title urged as a defense was adverse to defendant did not affect the jurisdiction of the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 243–245; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

4. Courts (§ 212*)—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Trial Court.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction on appeal from a judgment of the superior court, where the superior court was without original jurisdiction under section 5, on the ground that the action was a simple action at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, did not amount to $300.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 511–516; Dec. Dig. § 212.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by A. C. Dungan against T. E. Clark. From a judgment for plaintiff and from subsequent orders denying motions to vacate the judgment and to quash an execution, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. E. Clark, in pro. per. Bradley & Bradley, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was commenced in a justice's court of Tulare county. The complaint was in two counts, one to recover $125 together with $25 attorney's fees on a promissory note, and the other to recover $53.99 for electrical power furnished to the defendant at his request.

The defendant filed a verified answer, setting up as a defense to the action on the note that said note was delivered in consideration of the sale by plaintiff to defendant of a half interest in a pumping plant situated upon a described tract of land, and a like interest in a pipe line extending from said pumping plant to defendant's premises; that the consideration for the note wholly failed, for the reason that plaintiff did not own or possess the half interest which he undertook to convey. The defendant alleges that in consequence he has never been able to obtain from said pumping plant any water for the irrigation of his land. Upon the coming in of this answer, the justice, finding that the question of title and possession of real property was involved, certified the pleadings to the clerk of the superior court of Tulare county. Code Civ. Proc. § 838. The case was tried by the superior court, which, after making findings to the effect that all the allegations of the complaint were true and that none of the allegations or denials of the answer were true (except that the consideration of the note was the sale of a half interest in the pumping plant and pipe line, and that plaintiff had conveyed such interest to defendant), entered judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from subsequent orders denying motions to vacate the judgment and to quash an execution.

On all three appeals the appellant presents the same point, which is that the action was one within the exclusive jurisdiction of the justice's court, and that the superior court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine it. The suit being one "on an action arising on contract to recover money only," in which "the sum claimed, exclusive of interest, does not amount to $300," the complaint was properly filed in the justice's court. Code Civ. Proc. § 112. The appellant's argument is that the answer fails to show that the title or possession of real property was involved in such manner as to justify a transfer of jurisdiction to the superior court.

Section 838 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the parties to an action in a justice court cannot give evidence upon any question which involves the title or possession of real property * * *; nor can any issue presenting such question be tried by such court; and if it appear from the answer of the defendant, verified upon his oath, that the determination of the action will necessarily involve the question of title or possession to real property * * * the justice must suspend further proceedings, * * *" etc., and certify the pleadings to the clerk of the superior court, which court shall have the same jurisdiction as if the action had been commenced therein. The purpose of this section is to secure to the superior court the right to hear and determine the causes that are, by the Constitution, placed within its jurisdiction. The defendant, by the verified answer here filed, based his defense upon the proposition that the plaintiff had no title to the pumping plant and pipe line which he assumed to transfer as a consideration for the note sued on. That the pumping plant and pipe line were real property is not questioned. To maintain his defense, the defendant was bound to offer evidence to show that plaintiff was not the owner of this real property, and the court was required, in order to determine the rights of the parties, to decide whether or not plaintiff was such owner. Under the construction given to Code of Civil Procedure, section 838, by this court, the question of title was involved. It is true that in Schroeder v. Wittram, 66 Cal. 636, 6 Pac. 737, one of the opinions contained expressions to the effect that the justice's court is not ousted of jurisdiction where the title of real property is only incidentally involved. But, as is pointed out in later decisions (Copertini v. Oppermann, 76 Cal. 184, 18 Pac. 256; Hart v. Carnall, etc., Co., 103 Cal. 132, 37 Pac. 196), the opinion in question was not that of a majority of the court, and is not to be regarded as authority. In the Copertini Case, the court quoting from the opinion in Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338, adopts this language: "The idea intended to be embodied in the phrase 'cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property' may be expressed by the paraphrase: 'Cases at law in which the title or possession of real property is a material fact in the case, upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery or the defendant for a defense.' When the title or claim of title, the possession or right of possession, of real property, or any right growing out or dependent upon either, is alleged in the pleadings as an issuable fact, the case is within the meaning of the constitutional provision." Similarly in Hart v. Carnall, etc., Co., supra, it is declared that: "If the issue of title or possession is so involved that it must be decided in order to determine the case, the superior court has original, and this court appellate jurisdiction, whether the involution may be said to be merely incidental or not." See, also, Raisch v. Sausalito Land Co., 131 Cal. 215, 63 Pac. 346; King v. Kutner-Goldstein Co., 135 Cal. 65, 67 Pac. 10. The justice was therefore right in certifying the pleadings to the superior court, which, under the averments of the answer, had original jurisdiction of the action.

There is clearly no merit in the suggestion of appellant that the superior court lost jurisdiction, because it found against some of the affirmative allegations of the answer. These were the averments that plaintiff had no title to the property which he undertook to convey in consideration of the note, and that thereby defendant lost his opportunity to obtain water. The fact that the finding on the issue of title urged as a defense was adverse to defendant cannot affect the jurisdiction.

It may be noted that appellant's contention that the case is one within the exclusive jurisdiction of the justice's court is destructive of its own purposes. For, if the superior court is without original jurisdiction of the case, because it is a simple action at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, does not amount to $300 (Const. art. 6, § 5), the Supreme Court (or the District Court of Appeal) is for the same reason without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The appellate jurisdiction of this court and of the Court of Appeal is defined by the Constitution (article 6, § 4), and neither tribunal is given such jurisdiction in a case such as the appellant claims this one to be. Accordingly, the only result of appellant's argument, if it were well founded, would be that the appeals must be dismissed as beyond the jurisdiction of this court. Sweet v. Tice, 45 Cal. 71; Edsall v. Short, 122 Cal. 533, 55 Pac.

327; Raisch v. Sausalito, etc., Land Co., supra.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

159 Cal. 6

PEOPLE v. LOPER. (Cr. 1,546.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1910. Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1911.)

1. JURY (§ 103*) — QUALIFICATIONS — FORMATION OF OPINION—EFFECT ON VERDICT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1076, providing that no juror shall be disqualified by reason of having formed or expressed an opinion founded upon public rumor or statements in public journals, if it appear upon his declaration that the juror can act impartially, the fact that the juror has conversed with witnesses or interested persons regarding the merits of the cause is immaterial, if the statements of such persons merely amounted to public rumor and was so received by the juror.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 461–479; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1148*) — APPEAL — REVIEW — DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT — SELECTING JURORS.

An objection to the competency of a juror, that his knowledge of the English language is imperfect, is addressed peculiarly to the trial court's discretion, and his ruling thereon will not be disturbed, in absence of flagrant abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3050–3052; Dec. Dig. § 1148.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1148*) — APPEAL — REVIEW — SELECTION OF JURORS — DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where a juror's voir dire examination is conflicting as to his competency, it is generally for the trial court to decide which of his answers shows his true mental condition in determining whether he is competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3050–3052; Dec. Dig. § 1148.*]

4. CRIMINAL (§ 311*)—PRESUMPTIONS—SANITY.

All persons are presumed sane until the contrary is proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 742–744; Dec. Dig. § 311.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 179*) — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence that accused was sane at a time long before the commission of the homicide is admissible, as tending to establish his sanity at the time of the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 380; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—APPEAL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY.

In determining whether testimony is admissible in a homicide case, in which insanity is pleaded, as to accused's sanity at a time long before the commission of the offense, the trial court has a wide discretion which will not be interfered with on appeal, in absence of clear abuse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3061–3066; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 188*)—COMPETENCY—FORMER WIFE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1322, providing that neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action to which one or both are parties, except with the consent of both, which is to be construed as containing substantially the same provisions as Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, rendering the wife incompetent to testify to communications between herself and her husband, accused's former wife, who had lived with him a year after their marriage and had known him a year before the marriage, could testify in a homicide case as to his sanity, basing her testimony on her knowledge of him while she cohabited with and knew him; the mental condition not being a matter subject to communication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 734, 736; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 522*) — CONFESSIONS — VOLUNTARY CHARACTER.

As a confession must be free and voluntary, a confession made a few days after threats were made to induce accused to confess was not admissible unless it clearly appeared that such threats had ceased to operate upon accused's mind when the confession was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1189–1195; Dec. Dig. § 522.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 532*) — CONFESSIONS — ADMISSION.

Whether a confession is voluntary is a preliminary question for the trial court, in deciding which it has considerable discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1218; Dec. Dig. § 532.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 519*)—CONFESSIONS—VOLUNTARY CHARACTER.

Accused, without being advised that his confession might be used against him, was cajoled and browbeaten by the prosecuting officials, who called him a "monumental liar," and told him that decedent's friends would have hanged him to the first tree if he had been taken to the place where the body was found. After being talked to in that way for a considerable time, he was put in solitary confinement for the night, and confessed the following morning. Held, that the confession was not voluntary, and was not admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1163–1174; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—INVOLUNTARY CONFESSIONS.

That the evidence other than the alleged confession was sufficient to justify a conviction did not make the admission of a confession improperly extorted harmless, as it could not be said what weight the jury gave to the confession in forming its verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137–3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

12. HOMICIDE (§ 174*) — PROSECUTION — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for homicide, a printed copy of a notice published in a newspaper, purporting to be signed by decedent and authorizing accused to settle decedent's affairs, was admissible to show actual publication of the notice by accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 359–371; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 438*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Properly authenticated photographs are admissible in evidence when relevant, so that in a murder case, in which it appeared that decedent's body was dismembered, a photograph showing the nature of the country between decedent's cabin and the place where his body was discovered was admissible in evidence to show the nature of the ground probably traversed by the murderer, and the necessity for dismembering decedent's body.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 893; Dec. Dig. § 438.*]

Angellotti, Shaw, and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Charles H. Loper was convicted of murder, and from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

Aynesworth & Sprouse, S. J. Hinds, and Henry Brickley, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MELVIN, J. Appellant was convicted of the crime of murder and was sentenced to receive the death penalty. He prosecutes this appeal from the said judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Loper, the defendant, lived with Joe Vernet on a ranch near Sentinel post office in Fresno county. On July 13, 1908, Chris. Peterson was at Vernet's cabin, and when he departed he left Loper and Vernet there together. On July 17, 1908, defendant took the stage at Sentinel and went to Fresno, but before his departure he told Mr. Rea, in the presence of the latter's mother and sister, that Vernet had gone to Oregon, having started the night before on the walk of 30 miles to Fresno, and that defendant, after settling Vernet's affairs, would join him in Oregon. After his arrival in Fresno Loper put a notice in a newspaper in which was a statement that he was winding up the affairs of Joe Vernet, and had authority to attend to all necessary business. While in Fresno, Loper stated that Vernet had gone to Oregon, leaving him to settle all business affairs. He also offered to sell certain wood belonging to Vernet, and after returning to Sentinel he collected and receipted for certain money due to that individual. He also sold a wagon and two horses from Vernet's place, and performed other acts as the ostensible agent of Vernet. On July 28th defendant was arrested, and while in custody told the sheriff that he was winding up Vernet's affairs. He also admitted that he caused the notice to be printed in the paper in Fresno. When arrested defendant had on his person two certificates of deposit in favor of Vernet on the Fresno National Bank, and a slip of paper on which was a writing supposed to be Vernet's signature. About August 1st the dismembered body of Joe Vernet was found buried in a hole about three-eighths of a mile from the place where he and defendant had lived, and soon afterwards defendant confessed that he had killed Vernet by shooting him in the back of the head. Insanity was the defense upon which Loper depended.

Appellant's first attack is directed against the selection of the jury. Error is alleged because of the refusal of the court to allow certain challenges proffered by defendant to individual jurors. All of the peremptory challenges allowed by law were exercised by defendant, and that fact makes the errors of the court, if any were committed in ruling upon his challenges for cause, vitally material to defendant and prejudicial to his rights. A number of the challenged talesmen admitted that they had opinions respecting defendant's guilt, and while they all testified that they could put such opinions aside and try the defendant fairly and impartially, it is contended that the prosecution failed to prove affirmatively that the persons with whom they had talked were not witnesses in the action or those deeply interested, and that therefore the opinions of the talesmen were not properly brought within the terms of section 1076 of the Penal Code. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 230, 34 Pac. 718; People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 538, 93 Pac. 99. A scrutiny of the evidence of those men called for examination as prospective jurors, however, shows either that the persons with whom they had talked were not witnesses nor interested persons, or that the opinions of the talesmen were based solely upon newspaper reports. An earnest contention is made in the briefs that failure to make proof that the persons with whom these talesmen talked were not witnesses nor interested parties removes the opinions of the prospective jurors from the exceptions expressed in section 1076 of the Penal Code, and that the court therefore erred in refusing to allow the challenges. We do not so understand the rule. Where it appears that a man called into the jury box has an opinion respecting the defendant's guilt, based in part upon statements of purported facts relating to the alleged crime, made to him by individuals, it must be shown, in order that section 1076 of the Penal Code may apply, that the persons who stated the supposed facts, or expressed strong belief in the defendant's guilt, were not witnesses nor interested persons, or that they were not so understood to be by the man under examination. The mere circumstance that the persons with whom he talked were or were not witnesses would be immaterial, if his opinion was not founded wholly or in part on what they said, because the court is seeking to learn his mental attitude toward the defendant and the source and quality of any opinion which he may entertain. If he talked with persons understood by him to be possessed only of such information as he himself obtained from his reading, their conversation would naturally amount to public rumor so far as he was concerned. If, on the other hand, some one whom he believed would say, "I saw the crime committed and know whereof I speak," the discussion by that person of the manner of the commission of the offense would almost certainly make a deep impression upon the talesman's mind and conduce to the formation of a strong opinion, even if, as matter of fact, the narration were pure fiction.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Two challenges were interposed to Theodore Linden, one based upon his supposed imperfect knowledge of English, and the other upon his admitted opinion which, according to appellant's attorneys, was fixed and was prejudicial to Loper. The first objection was one addressed particularly and peculiarly to the judgment of the trial court, and unless flagrant abuse of discretion clearly appears, rulings of that court on such a subject are seldom disturbed. We cannot say upon reading the juror's answers to the questions propounded to him that he was so deficient in his knowledge of the English language that the court abused its discretion in refusing to entertain a challenge under section 198, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. His opinion seems to have been based upon the most casual reading, and he said that he could try the case fairly and impartially, giving to the defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence.

The statements of those called for jury duty in this case seem quite typical of those given during the selection of a jury in any case about which there has been extensive comment in the daily journals. Almost every person called into the jury box had an opinion of defendant's guilt, based upon what he had read, and some of them stated that such opinion would require evidence for its removal. When, however, they were put to the test of their ability to try the case upon the evidence produced at the trial and uninfluenced by other considerations, each answered that he could and would, if chosen, act fairly and impartially. It was the function of the trial court to determine the true state of mind of each member of the panel who was questioned touching his qualifications to serve as a juror. Frequently there is a conflict between different portions of the testimony given during an examination on voir dire, due not always to the lack of candor on the part of the person examined, but to his misunderstanding of the questions asked and of the duties of a juror, until such duties are explained by the court. When such conflict occurs, the trial court must decide, if possible, which of the answers most truly reveals the state of the talesman's mind. In other words, the questions generally presented are those of fact and not of law. People v. Ryan, 152 Cal. 364, 92 Pac. 856; People v. Ochoa, 142 Cal. 274, 75 Pac. 847; People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 86, 60 Pac. 670; People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 559, 39 Pac. 944.

A number of witnesses testified, as intimate acquaintances, to defendant's sanity, under the rule expressed in subdivision 10 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Objection was made to the admission of their testimony, upon the ground that some of them had not seen defendant within several years of the time of the trial. This objection goes more to the weight than to the admissibility of their testimony. All persons are presumed to be sane until the contrary is proved. Proof that defendant was sane at a time long prior to the commission of the offense would have some tendency to establish his sanity at the time of the homicide; the weight and value of such proof being a matter for the jury. In ruling upon the admission of such testimony, the trial judge is clothed with a wide discretion, which will not be disturbed, unless obviously it has been improperly exercised. People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 361, 75 Pac. 1093; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 258, 46 Pac. 1073; People v. Hubert, 119 Cal. 221, 51 Pac. 329, 63 Am. St. Rep. 72; People v. Clark, 151 Cal. 207, 90 Pac. 549. One of the witnesses who testified, as an intimate acquaintance, to defendant's sanity was his former wife, now Mrs. Hendrickson. She had known him about a year before their marriage, which had lasted about two and a half years, although they had lived together a little more than a year. Objection was made to Mrs. Hendrickson's testimony upon the ground that she was prohibited from being a witness by the provisions of section 1322 of the Penal Code. That section is as follows: "Neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties, except with the consent of both, or in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other, or in case of criminal actions or proceedings brought under the provisions of sections two hundred and seventy and two hundred and seventy a of this code, or in cases of criminal actions or proceedings for bigamy or adultery." The above section must be construed as having practically an identical meaning with section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure. People v. Langtree, 64 Cal. 256, 30 Pac. 813. Authorities have been cited on both sides; but little assistance is to be obtained from such citations, owing to the varied statutory provisions in the different states. In some jurisdictions statutes are so construed that only the sort of testimony is excluded which the statute specifically interdicts. In others no communication made by one spouse to the other may be stated after the marriage relation has ceased to exist, even when the statute by its terms seems to apply the rule only to the period of lawful matrimonial relation. Some of the cases make an exception, from the rule prohibiting one spouse from testifying against the other, of those things which in their nature are "as likely to have occurred before the public as in private." Owen v. State, 78 Ala. 429, 56 Am. Rep. 40. In the case last cited the judgment of conviction in a burglary case was reversed, because the former wife of the defendant had testified that he returned to his home late on the night of the burglary, and that afterwards he had a considerable sum of money in his possession. The authorities which recognize and those which deny the right of a divorced wife to speak on the witness stand of matters not essentially of a confidential nature, coming to her knowledge during the existence of the marriage relation, are collated in Owen v. State, supra. Wharton, writing of this subject, states the rule in civil cases thus: "Where the relationship has ceased by death, or by divorce, the wife may be admitted for or against the former husband or his representatives (or the converse), though she is precluded from testifying as to information derived confidentially during marital intercourse. The same distinctions are applicable to the husband. It is otherwise as to nonconfidential information." Wharton, Law of Evidence, p. 388. See, also, Gordon, Rankin & Co. v. Tweedy, 71 Ala. 210. Professor Greenleaf thus formulates the rule: "After the parties are separated, whether it be by divorce or by the death of the husband, the wife is still precluded from disclosing any conversations with him, though she may be admitted to testify to facts which came to her knowledge by means equally accessible to any person not standing in that relation." 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) p. 393. Again, treating of the subject of marital confidences, the same learned author observes (page 497): "But where such confidences are not involved, the policy of preserving the marital peace does not forbid one spouse from testifying against the other's interests after the latter's death or divorce." While the problem here considered is a matter of first impression in California, this court declared years ago in favor of the liberal construction of section 1322 of the Penal Code, and the admission of testimony not clearly excluded by its terms. In People v. Langtree, supra, decided in 1883, the court in bank adopted with approval the following language of Mr. Schouler: "On the whole, the prevailing tendency of late years in both England and America is to regard the domestic confidence or the ties of a spouse as of little consequence compared with the public convenience of extending the means of ascertaining the truth in all cases; such facilities being increased, it is believed, by hearing what each one has to say, and then making due allowance for circumstances affecting each one's credibility." Schouler on Husband and Wife, 85. It will be noticed that, construing section 1322 of the Penal Code and section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure together, the inhibition of testimony extends to communications made by one to the other. Mental condition is not a matter of communication, and in view of the broad rule adopted in People v. Langtree, supra, we are constrained to hold that the testimony of this witness was admissible.

After his arrest, the defendant was submitted to a rigid examination by the sheriff, the district attorney, and others. On the following morning he made a confession, which his counsel contend was due not to his own voluntary impulse, but resulted from this close examination, characterized by them as "a relentless sweating process." The questions propounded to the defendant were reported, and a transcript, admittedly correct in every particular, was introduced in evidence defendant's counsel making only the objection that the reported conversation was inadmissible as it was induced by threats. the effect of which must have extended to and operated to obtain the subsequent confession. A careful consideration of this matter convinces us that the criticism made by appellant's counsel is just. The transcript does not show that at any time the defendant was instructed with reference to his rights under the Constitution, nor was he told that statements made by him might be used against him at his trial. During the long and searching examination to which he was subjected he did not make a confession, but he admitted that if he did kill Vernet the deed must have been accomplished while he was drunk; that his mind was a blank upon the entire subject. It is a fundamental rule of criminal law that a confession may not be used against a defendant, unless the prosecution can show its free and voluntary character, that it was made without previous inducement, and that neither duress nor intimidation caused defendant to furnish such evidence against himself. People v. Miller, 135 Cal. 69, 67 Pac. 12. It is also true that if threats and inducements are made to a prisoner, and within a few days thereafter he makes a confession, such acknowledgment of the commission of the crime may not be introduced in evidence, unless it clearly appears that the threats and inducements had ceased to operate upon his mind to bring about his statement of his own guilt. People v. Johnson, 41 Cal. 455. After the searching inquiry of the sheriff, district attorney, and deputy district attorney had closed, defendant was locked up in solitary confinement until the following morning, when he informed the sheriff that he desired to tell everything. Undoubtedly there was strong probability that the occurrences of the previous day had much to do with fixing defendant's final resolution to confess, and if coercive threats were made and inducements offered, then we must, in the absence of a contrary showing, find that the confession made on the following day was inadmissible as evidence. The manner of examination to which defendant was subjected may best be understood, perhaps, from a reading of the following quotations from the transcript: "Mr. Hawson: Q. Where were you when you cut the legs off of Joe Vernet? A. I don't know about that at all. Q. What did you cut them off with? A. Good God, is Joe dead? Mr. Chittenden: You know he is dead. A. I do not. If I ever told the truth in my life, I didn't know he is dead. There is no man in the world that would feel worse on his loss than I do. He is the only friend I have. Mr. Hawson: You are the most monumental liar I ever knew. * * * How long did you leave the body in the cabin? Confess up and tell the truth entirely. The sooner you tell the truth about this, the better your mind will be. I don't blame you for not wanting to tell this. This is an awful strain, but when you make this confession, you will be a better man. You will feel better in two minutes; just that quick. A. I don't see how I can. Q. Go on and tell us the story. You will feel better and different, and if you have done wrong, go on and be a man. * * * Mr. Church: As far as I am concerned, personally, as district attorney, I don't care whether you say anything or not. The evidence is absolutely and complete against you, unless you want to implicate any one else. The only way you can do yourself any good in the world, if there was any one else in it, is to tell it. A. I will tell you there was no one in it, and Joe was going to Portland, Or. * * * Q. Who was with you in that trick? A. I have told you all about it. Q. I thought you did it all alone. I thought if you didn't it would be an advantage to you, personally, to let us know who it was, is all. I thought it would perhaps. * * * Mr. Church: I don't suppose there was ever a murder committed in the history of the world like this, just for his money and certificates of deposit, and then killed by a man who pretends to be his friend; just for money. It is terrible. Mr. Chittenden: I want him to tell it. It would make him feel better. A. Don't you think if I had done that, there would be some impression on my mind—there would be something to show to my mind I done it? Mr. Church: Certainly. A. And there has never been anything. Q. I thought it was a cool, calculated piece of work. He has had it on his mind for a year. I think I have figured it out; how he could murder him, and then get out for good. He had no wife. If you have a wife, I would like for you to tell me. A. No. Q. You couldn't pay your board bill. He boarded you for a year; you borrowed money of old Joe, and, in the face of these things, he had gone down in his pocket and loaned you money. You couldn't pay your board bill; you hadn't done an honest day's work in months; you could get no work to do and, even in the face of all this, you took poor old Joe and butchered him in the same manner as you would have butchered a hog. And you tell us in all soberness your mind is a blank, and hasn't been a blank before that time? Mr. Chittenden: There are hundreds of people up there that know him. I think he has been in this line of work for a year. The people up there can tell if his mind has been in a blank; and to think he cut him up and buried him is all bosh. I have got mountains of proof. There isn't anything to it at all. There isn't anything in the case. It has been the easiest thing in the world to hunt, and then for you to sit here and tell us you don't know anything about it—if you want to live in that frame of mind, if you want to live that way —what you are facing at this time right now—I thought it would probably relieve your mind to have that awful truth told. A. I would tell if I could, but I don't see that I done it. * * * Q. (by Mr. Hawson): If you didn't do it, who knows you done it? It was done right at your door, in your house. A. It looks to me if I done that terrible crime, there would be something on my mind. Q. There is something. You have got a load right now. It is as big as that courthouse standing right there. It is heavier than this jail, and the only reason I want you to tell me the truth—there is absolutely nothing to the case—it might be a relief to your mind. Your mind is a little clearer then than it is now, I tell you. Mr. Hawson: If you had been up there yesterday afternoon and seen them dig up that body—some 30 or 40 men who knew Joe Vernet—you wouldn't have had five minutes to tell anything. Sheriff Chittenden: If I had come back and got you —you didn't have any friends up there— they would have strung you up to the first tree, Charlie Loper; a piece of rope would have got to your neck. A. If I had done that deed, they might do it. Q. You did the deed, all right. A. There is nothing in my mind about the thing."

That the rule excluding confessions unless they are free and voluntary was violated in admitting the alleged confession, after such proof of threats, inducements, and coercion, can scarcely admit of a doubt. It has been held in this state that it was sufficient to exclude a confession if, before making it, the defendant had been told that it would be better for him to make full disclosure. People v. Barric, 49 Cal. 344. In People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 605, 24 Pac. 386, a confession was held inadmissible, because the sheriff had told the prisoner that he "didn't think the truth would hurt anybody," and that "it would be better for him to come out and tell all he knew about it, if he felt that way." The question whether a confession is free and voluntary is a preliminary one addressed to the trial court (People v. Miller, 135 Cal. 69, 67 Pac. 12), and that court is clothed with a considerable amount of discretion in determining it (People v. Suesser, supra); but we know of no case in which such potential influences as are shown by this record have been held harmless and not sufficient to exclude the confession induced by them. So long as the constitutional privilege of a defendant not to give evidence against himself exists, that right must be protected by adherence to the well-established rule intended to guard against undue advantage being taken of his fears, hopes, or mental or physical weakness; and while many thoughtful persons believe that those charged with crime should be compelled, either to testify or to bear an adverse presumption as the result of refusal to take the witness stand, no advocate of that change in the law, we believe, goes so far as to desire the machinery of compulsion to be applied anywhere except in the full publicity of open court. In a recent public address, speaking upon this subject, and advocating a change in the rule whereby a defendant is now enabled to refrain from testifying, Mr. Justice Sloss said: "Side by side with the limitation of the right of the accused to stand mute should go the absolute prohibition of testimony or confessions obtained from persons under arrest, as the result of private questioning by officers of the law. The horrors of the 'third degree' are the direct result of the rule prohibiting the prosecution from calling the accused as a witness, or basing any argument upon his failure to take the witness stand in his own behalf. Surely it is far better to question the accused in open court, where he may have the assistance of counsel and the protection of an impartial judge, than to endeavor to convict him by means of an alleged confession which may never have been made and which, if made, may have been extorted from him in ways that, if known, would throw great doubt upon its reliability."

In Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. Ed. 568, the leading authorities upon the subject of confession are collated and discussed masterfully in the opinion of the court delivered by Mr. Justice White. In that opinion he says: "A brief consideration of the reasons which gave rise to the adoption of the fifth amendment, of the wrongs which it was intended to prevent, and of the safeguards which it was its purpose unalterably to secure, will make it clear that the generic language of the amendment was but a crystallization of the doctrine as to confessions, well settled when the amendment was adopted, and since expressed in the text-writers and expounded by the adjudications, and hence that the statements on the subject by the text-writers and adjudications but formulate the conceptions and commands of the amendment itself." In another part of the opinion he observes that: "There can be no doubt that long prior to our independence the doctrine that one accused of crime could not be compelled to testify against himself had reached its full development in the common law, was there considered as resting on the law of nature, and was embedded in that system as one of its great and distinguishing attributes." He also quotes with approval part of the opinion of the same court, delivered by Mr. Justice Brown in the case of Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 596, 16 Sup. Ct. 646, 40 L. Ed. 819. As that quotation, we think, fully illustrates the historical significance of the rule which we have been discussing, we take this opportunity of repeating it: "The maxim, 'Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare,' had its origin in a protest against the inquisitorial and manifestly unjust methods of interrogating accused persons, which has long obtained in the continental system, and until the expulsion of the Stuarts from the British throne in 1688, and the erection of additional barriers for the protection of the people against the exercise of arbitrary power was not uncommon even in England. While the admissions or confessions of the prisoner, when voluntarily and freely made, have always ranked high in the scale of incriminating evidence, if an accused person be asked to explain his apparent connection with a crime under investigation, the ease with which the questions put to him may assume an inquisitorial character, the temptation to press the witness unduly, to browbeat him if he be timid or reluctant, to push him into a corner, and to entrap him into fatal contradictions, which is so painfully evident in many of the earlier state trials, notably in those of Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, and Udal, the Puritan minister, made the system so odious as to give rise to a demand for its total abolition. The change in the English criminal procedure in that particular seems to be founded on no statute and no judicial opinion, but upon a general and silent acquiescence of the courts in a popular demand. But, however, adopted, it has become firmly embedded in English as well as American jurisprudence. So deeply did the iniquities of the ancient system impress themselves upon the minds of the American colonists that the States, with one accord, made a denial of the right to question an accused person a part of their fundamental law, so that a maxim, which in England was a mere rule of evidence, became clothed in this country with the impregnability of a constitutional enactment."

It is suggested that the evidence in this case was so complete without the confession of the defendant that the jury would have found him guilty, even if the confession had been entirely omitted. While this argument serves to emphasize the lack of excuse for the resort on the part of public officers to the methods of the "third degree," it does not abate one whit the defendant's right to all of his constitutional privileges. He was entitled to stand mute, if he chose to do so, and to have no confession save a voluntary statement—one not extorted by fear nor induced by promises—introduced against him at his trial. Of this right he was deprived. Without instruction as to the law applicable to his case, without advice of counsel, without knowing that his utterances might be used against him, he was cajoled, browbeaten, and persuaded; was called "a monumental liar"; was told that Vernet's friends would have hanged him "to the first tree," if the sheriff had taken him to the place where the dead body was found; and, in short, every sort of device was employed to force a confession from him. Then, to enable these persuasions to sink deeply into his mind, he was solitarily confined for the night. To say that the confession of the following morning was not influenced by the conduct and the conversation of the officers would be to contradict all human experience. And it is equally untenable to say that, because the prosecution had a perfect case without the confession, the jury would have imposed the ultimate penalty of the law upon the defendant, whether that confession had been excluded or admitted. No one could say (not even the jurors themselves) just what weight the confession had in fixing the belief of the jury in Loper's guilt, and especially in shaping a verdict involving capital punishment. But every one must conclude that the introduction of the defendant's own statement of his guilt under the circumstances here shown must have been most highly prejudicial to him. It follows that for this reason a new trial must be ordered.

Objection is made that a printed copy of a notice published in a Fresno paper, purporting to be signed by Joe Vernet and authorizing Loper to settle Vernet's business affairs, was introduced in connection with the testimony of Rufus Morrell. It is admitted by appellant's counsel that the original of this notice which the district attorney promised, when examining Morrell, to produce later would be competent. With this we agree, and we think it follows that evidence was admissible, showing actual publication of the notice after its preparation and its filing in the office of the newspaper.

Objection is also made to the ruling of the court admitting certain photographs in evidence. These pictures illustrated the country between Vernet's cabin and the place where the dead body was discovered. They were clearly admissible for the purpose of showing the jury the nature of the ground necessarily or probably traversed by the murderer, and especially for exhibiting the necessity (or lack of it) for dismemberment of the body. Photographs are admissible, when, properly authenticated, just as are other illustrative charts. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 213, 48 Pac. 75; People v. Crandall, 125 Cal. 133, 57 Pac. 785; People v. Mahatch, 148 Cal. 203, 82 Pac. 779.

We find no material errors in the matter of giving or refusing instructions. Most of appellant's criticisms are directed at instructions upon the subject of insanity. The jury was fully and fairly instructed upon this phase of the case.

It follows from the above discussion that the judgment and order must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J., HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I am unable to concur in the reversal of the judgment and order in this case. The reversal is ordered solely because of the admission in evidence of the so-called confession of defendant, wherein, while admitting the actual killing, he described how it was compelled by an absolutely irresistible influence, commanding him to kill, that had been threatening him for days and that had finally dominated him. This statement is held to have been improperly admitted, on the ground, as we understand the opinion, that it is a confession obtained by threats, intimidation, coercion, and duress. There is no other possible ground of exclusion shown by the record. The law does not require that an accused should be affirmatively instructed as to his right to remain silent, and of the fact that statements made by him will be used against him, to render admissible a voluntary statement subsequently made. While it is better that such warning be expressly given to avoid all suspicion of improper inducement, it is not essential. The evidence of the long interview between the officers and the defendant shows beyond question that no improper inducement was held out to defendant to make the statement; no promise or intimation that it would be in any way better for him, so far as his treatment by the officers or by the court, or by any other person or persons was concerned; no statement, even, that it would be "better" for him, except in the event that some one else was implicated; and that the only thing in the way of an expression of opinion by any officer that it would be beneficial to defendant to confess the truth was expressly limited to the effect on defendant's mind—the relief from the strain of knowledge of unconfessed guilt of an atrocious crime. So that we are left, in excluding this statement, to the objection that it was obtained by threats, coercion, intimidation, and duress. While I do not desire to be understood as approving all that was said and done by the officers with relation to defendant, I do not think that it should be held that the trial court erred in its conclusion that the statement was voluntary. No threats were shown. The question of fact, whether the statement was the result of coercion, intimidation, or duress exerted by the officers, was one for the trial judge in the first instance, and we should not interfere with his conclusion thereon, unless the same be without substantial support in the evidence.

In my opinion the conclusion of the trial judge was sufficiently supported by the evidence.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

159 Cal. 23

CARTER v. WASTE, Judge.

(S. F. No. 5,662.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1910.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 314*) — PROCEEDINGS FOR DISTRIBUTION — MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1351, provides that any person interested in the estate of a decedent may file objections to granting letters testamentary to persons named. Section 1666 provides that a decree of distribution is conclusive as to the rights of the parties, subject only to be reversed on appeal; and section 1668 provides that at a hearing in a proceeding for distribution, any person interested may contest the petition by written objections. Sections 1714, 1716, 1717 make applicable to all proceedings for distribution the provision of the Code relative to new trials, "except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title," and that all issues of fact in probate proceedings must be tried as contests of wills, and that either party may move for a new trial as provided for civil actions. A petitioner for final distribution alleged that the only heirs of deceased were herself and certain children of a deceased half-brother of deceased, and subsequently two other petitions were filed in which the petitioners alleged that they were entitled to the estate, but not denying in terms any allegation of the first petitioner, and the court held against the original petitioner. Held, that an issue of fact was made and determined under the petitions in this case authorizing a motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 314.*]

In Bank. Application by Ella Fleming Carter for a writ of mandate to be directed against William H. Waste, Judge of the Superior Court of Alameda County. Application granted.

F. A. Berlin, for petitioner. A. L. Frick, and A. F. St. Sure, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel respondent to settle, allow, and sign petitioner's proposed statement on motion for a new trial in the matter of the final distribution of the estate of John J. Fleming, deceased, who died intestate. The matter was submitted to us upon a demurrer to the petition.

The facts, so far as they may be considered material, are as follows: On February 8, 1908, subsequent to the settlement of the final account of the administrator of said estate, petitioner filed her petition for final distribution, alleging, among other things, that the true name of deceased was Richard Fleming, Jr., and that he was a son of one Richard Fleming, that the only heirs at law of deceased were herself (an alleged half-sister) and certain children of a deceased half-brother of deceased, and that she was entitled to an undivided half of the estate and said children to the other half. On March 20, 1908, Ella Woodbury and three others filed their petitions, alleging therein that they were nephews and nieces of deceased, that he left him surviving no other person who was so nearly related as they, and that they were entitled to the whole estate in the proportion of one-fourth to each. On June 1, 1908, A. F. St. Sure, as assignee of George A. Myles and Ann Myles, filed his petition for distribution, alleging that deceased left no heirs at law other than the said Myles. Due notice was given of the time and place of hearing these petitions. The three petitions were finally heard together, much evidence being submitted in support of the same, and the court made its decree, finding therein that none of the alleged heirs other than George A. Myles and Ann Myles is an heir at law or relative of deceased, and that the said Myles are the sole next of kin and heirs at law of deceased, and distributing all of the property of the estate to the assignee of the latter. It is to be observed that there was in the petitions of Ella Woodbury et al. and A. F. St. Sure no denial in terms of any allegation of the petition of petitioner here; the only denial being such as must necessarily be implied from affirmative allegations that are in conflict with allegations of said petition.

The sole reason advanced for respondent's refusal to settle the statement is that the remedy by motion for new trial does not exist under the circumstances above set forth, and that the only remedy of an aggrieved party under such circumstances is to appeal from the decree of distribution. Respondent's main contention in this behalf is that the law does not authorize a motion for a new trial in proceedings on distribution.

It is true that certain provisions of the title of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to probate proceedings expressly make applicable to all such proceedings, "except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title," the provision of part two of the Code relative to new trials. It is equally true that these Code sections declare that all issues of fact joined in probate proceedings must be tried in conformity with the provisions relating to contests of wills, that if no jury is demanded the court must try the issues joined, and that either party may move for a new trial upon the same grounds and errors and in like manner as provided in this Code for civil actions. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1714, 1716, 1717. But nevertheless, as to certain proceedings under this title, it is well settled that these sections do not apply and that the remedy of motion for new trial is not available; the basis of such ruling being, of course, that it is inconsistent with the provisions of such title. Thus it is held that a motion for a new trial will not lie where the court has made an order granting or refusing a family allowance, or setting apart or refusing to set apart property as exempt, or as a homestead. Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614, 29 Pac. 235; Shipman v. Unangst, 150 Cal. 425, 88 Pac. 1090; Estate of Heywood, 154 Cal. 312, 97 Pac. 825. The same ruling has been made as to an order settling the annual account of an executor or administrator (Estate of Franklin, 133 Cal. 584, 65 Pac. 1081), and also as to an order appointing an administrator where there were petitions on behalf of two several applicants, but, according to the views of this court, "no issue joined as to any fact alleged in either petition or any objection made as to the competency of either of the parties." Estate of Heldt, 98 Cal. 553, 33 Pac. 549. On the other hand, it is held that the remedy by motion for new trial exists in the case of a contest of a will, and also in case of a contest based on written objections to an applicant for letters testamentary on the ground of his incompetency (In re Bauquier, 88 Cal. 302, 26 Pac. 178, 532), and an order authorizing the sale of real estate of a decedent (Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 624, 29 Pac. 238). It has been assumed without question that a motion will lie in proceedings for partial distribution (Estate of Ryer, 110 Cal. 556, 42 Pac. 1082) and in proceedings on final distribution (Estate of Walker, 148 Cal. 162, 82 Pac. 770), and it has been so held as to the latter proceeding by the Supreme Court of Montana, upon statutes practically identical with ours. In re Davis' Estate, 27 Mont. 243, 244, 70 Pac. 721.

A careful consideration of the California cases we have cited leads to the conclusion that the true test to be applied in determining whether the motion will lie in the particular probate proceeding, where an issue of fact has been actually made and determined, is this, viz., Does the law expressly authorize issues of fact to be framed in such proceeding? If the answer be "Yes," the issues must be tried in the manner provided by the sections to which we have referred, and the motion for new trial is expressly authorized. This was the test suggested by the court, through Mr. Justice Temple, in Estate of Moore, 72 Cal. 340, 13 Pac. 880, and in Estate of Herteman, 73 Cal. 545, 15 Pac. 121. It was the test declared to be applied in Estate of Franklin, supra, in determining that the motion would not lie in the matter of the settlement of the annual account of an executor, the court having previously held in Estate of Sanderson, 74 Cal. 199, 209, 15 Pac. 753, 758, that "exceptions to an account do not create 'issues of fact joined,' such as must be submitted to a jury." The same distinction was observed in Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614, 29 Pac. 235, and Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 624, 29 Pac. 238. It was held in the first of these cases that a motion for a new trial was not authorized in a proceeding for family allowance, even though written objections had been filed and the issues thereby made determined, because there was no provision in the statutes for objections and the framing of issues, and the order was one that might be made by the court ex parte. The court distinguished the case before it from another case previously decided (Estate of Bauquier) solely on the ground that as to the proceeding involved in such case, the Code provided for notice and the framing of issues of fact. In the second Leach v. Pierce Case it was held that a motion for new trial would lie when an order authorizing the sale by the administrator of real estate of a deceased was made, because in such proceeding the Code required a written petition setting forth the necessary facts, and provided that any person interested may file his written objections which must be heard and determined. The court said: "Issues of fact, therefore, are expressly authorized by the Code, and a motion for a new trial is proper to review the decision of the court." In support of this ruling, the court cited In re Bauquier, 88 Cal. 302, 26 Pac. 178, 532, in which there was written opposition to the appointment of a person as executrix on the ground of her incompetency. It was held that a motion for a new trial would lie because issues of fact had been framed and tried, and the statute expressly authorized such issues. Section 1351, Code Civ. Proc., provided that any person interested may file objections in writing, and that the objections must be heard and determined by the court. In Estate of Heldt, 98 Cal. 553, 33 Pac. 549, a department case, the ruling that a motion for a new trial would not lie in a contest between two persons for letters of administration was avowedly put upon the ground that "no issue was joined as to any fact alleged in either petition," and it was said that in such a proceeding, "when no issues of fact are made by the pleadings, a motion for a new trial is not authorized." It may be that the court was in error in concluding that no issue was joined, for each petitioner alleged that he was the person requested by the widow to act as administrator. But the material thing here is that the court did impliedly recognize that, if issues of fact had been made by the pleadings, the motion would lie, and expressly approved Estate of Bauquier, supra, saying, also, in effect, that a new trial was only proper "where there are issues of fact arising upon pleadings authorized by the Code." In Shipman v. Unangst, 150 Cal. 425, 88 Pac. 1090, the remedy by motion for new trial was refused in proceedings for the setting apart of a homestead, exempt property, and a family allowance, on the authority of Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614, 29 Pac. 235, and the same is true of Estate of Heywood, 154 Cal. 312, 97 Pac. 825, a similar case. We are satisfied that it must be taken as established in this state that, under our law as it now exists, a motion for a new trial of any issue of fact actually made and determined in any proceeding in probate will lie when the law expressly authorizes issues of fact to be framed in such proceeding, and that provisions authorizing written objections on the part of persons interested in the estate and providing for the hearing and determination of those objections do expressly authorize issues of fact to be framed.

Coming to a consideration of the statutory provisions concerning final distribution, we find what, in view of what we have already said, must be held to be express authorization for the framing of issues of fact. The order or decree may be made only on petition, and notice must be given of the time and place of hearing the same. Section 1668, Code Civ. Proc. provides in part: "At the time fixed for the hearing, or to which the hearing may be postponed, any person interested in the estate may appear and contest the petition by filing written objections thereto." This was added to the section by amendment in 1907, and clearly brings proceedings for distribution within those classes of probate proceedings as to which the framing of issues of fact is expressly authorized by the Code.

Respondent relies somewhat upon the provision of section 1666, Code Civ. Proc., that "such order or decree (of distribution) is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal," as expressly excluding any remedy except direct appeal from the order or decree. This section is the one providing that in the decree the court must name the persons entitled to share in the estate, and the proportion or part to which each is entitled. It appears clear to us that the provision relied on should not be construed as intended to affect the general provisions of the title which authorize a motion for a new trial in probate proceedings whereever the framing of issues is authorized by the statute, and that its sole object was to make the determination of the court, as evidenced by the decree, final and conclusive as against collateral attack. The provision is reasonably susceptible of such a construction, and any other construction would create an exception to the general rule declared for probate proceedings, for which no reasonable ground could be found. It would certainly be difficult to give any reason whatever why a motion for a new trial should lie as to the proceeding to determine heirship provided for by section 1664, Code Civ. Proc., and at the same time should not lie as to the proceeding for final distribution, a proceeding always involving the questions that are involved in the heirship proceeding.

The only remaining question is whether issues of fact were actually made in this proceeding for distribution. That issues of fact were determined by the lower court upon evidence actually introduced by the respective parties is apparent. If the petitions for distribution presented by Ella Woodbury et al. and A. F. St. Sure constituted such "written objections" to the petition of petitioner here as are contemplated by section 1668, Code Civ. Proc., it would seem to follow that they sufficiently made issues of fact which were determined by the decree. If the papers so filed had been designated "answer" or "objections" to the petition of petitioner here, and had in terms denied the allegations of facts showing petitioner to be an heir of deceased and the other petitioners not to be heirs, it would have to be admitted, in view of what we have said, that issues of fact had been made under express authorization of law. If we wished to be exceedingly strict, we might be able to hold that to sufficiently raise an issue of fact as to any allegation of the original petition, an answer denying the same should have been presented, but to so hold, especially after judgment, it appears to us, would be to unnecessarily sacrifice substance to form. The three petitions were treated by the parties and the court below as creating issues of fact, and the hearing and determination in that court necessarily proceeded upon that theory. In substance they did create issues of fact on the question, who are the heirs of deceased, just as clearly as a formal answer containing express denials would have done. The matters set up in the subsequent petitions in support of the several claims, that the petitioners therein are respectively entitled to the whole estate of deceased, were necessarily in conflict with the allegations of the original petition.

We are of the opinion that petitioner is entitled to the relief sought.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue as asked in the petition.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

14 Cal. App. 662

THOMAS v. JOPLIN, County Treasurer, et al.

(Civ. 928.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 23, 1910.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 196*)—PAYMENT OF PUBLIC MONEY—TAXPAYERS' SUIT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 526a, providing that an action to restrain any illegal expenditure of public funds may be maintained, either by a citizen resident therein or by a corporation which is assessed, or within one year has paid, a tax therein, enacted after the court had decided that any taxpayer might sue to restrain the illegal payment of public money, restricts the right to sue to resident citizens, or corporations who are liable to a tax or who have paid a tax within a year.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 308; Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

2. STATUTES (§§ 174, 175*) — CONSTRUCTION — EFFECT OF STATUTE.

Effect must be given to an act of the Legislature, whenever such effect is permitted on a reasonable interpretation of its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 254; Dec. Dig. §§ 174, 175.*]

3. COUNTIES (§ 196*)—RESTRAINING PAYMENT OF PUBLIC MONEY—RIGHT TO SUE—"RESIDENT"—"CITIZEN."

Under Pol. Code, § 51, defining citizens as persons born in the state and residing within it, and all persons born out of the state who are citizens of the United States and residing within the state, one suing to restrain an illegal payment of county funds, who describes himself as a "resident" of the county, does not show that he is entitled to sue, within Code Civ. Proc. § 526a, authorizing actions to restrain illegal expenditures of public funds, by a "citizen resident" therein; the words "resident" and "citizen" not being synonymous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 308; Dec. Dig. § 196.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1164–1174; vol. 8, p. 7602; vol. 7, pp. 6161–6166; vol. 8, p. 7788.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 42*)—VALIDITY OF STATUTES—PARTY ENTITLED TO QUESTION.

The constitutionality of Code Civ. Proc. § 526a, providing that an action to restrain an illegal expenditure of public funds must be brought, either by a citizen resident therein or by a corporation, on the ground that it deprives nonresident citizens of other states of privileges equal with those of citizens of the state, cannot be raised by one who merely shows that he is a resident, but who does not show that he is not an alien, or that he belongs to the class of persons entitled to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 39, 40; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by J. C. Thomas against J. C. Joplin, as Treasurer of the County of Orange, and others. From a judgment for defendants, rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Davis (E. E. Keech, of counsel), for appellant. Williams & Rutan and Montgomery & Tarver, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to secure an injunction restraining defendant Joplin, as treasurer of the county of Orange, from paying certain warrants threatened to be issued and presented on account of salaries for deputies appointed by several of the officers of that county. A demurrer was interposed in which general and special grounds of objection to the sufficiency of the complaint were stated. This demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment followed in favor of defendants, from which judgment an appeal has been taken.

The several county officers of Orange county were elected at the general election held in 1906, and their terms of office were for four years, commencing in January, 1907. In 1909 the Legislature amended the county government act as it affected that county, and provided for deputies for several county offices, to be paid by the county. In the act as it existed theretofore, no allowance for deputies for these officers had been made. Under the provisions of the amendment, deputies were appointed by the county clerk, sheriff, auditor, treasurer, tax collector, and superintendent of schools, and these deputies have since their appointment regularly drawn their salaries from the county treasury.

Plaintiff bases his suit for an injunction to prevent a further payment of salaries to these deputies on the claim that the amendment of 1909 could not be made operative during the terms of office of the then county officials who had theretofore been allowed no paid deputies, because the effect in that case would be to increase the compensation of such officers during their term of office in violation of section 9, article 11, of the state Constitution.

One of the grounds of demurrer was that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue. In the complaint it is alleged, first: "That the plaintiff, at all the times herein mentioned, has been and still is a resident, owner of property, and a taxpayer of the county of Orange, state of California." Defendants insist that this statement is insufficient to show that plaintiff is such a person as is entitled to prosecute an action to restrain the payment of the demands of the deputies affected, and cite section 526a, Code of Civil Procedure. This section provides as follows: "An action to obtain a judgment, restraining and preventing any illegal expenditure of, waste of, or injury to, the estate, funds, or other property of a county, town, city or city and county of the state, may be maintained against any officer thereof, or any agent, or other person, acting in its behalf, either by a citizen resident therein or by a corporation, who is assessed for and is liable to pay, or, within one year before the commencement of the action, has paid, a tax therein. This section does not affect any right of action in favor of a county, city, town, or city and county, or any public officer."

Section 526a above quoted was adopted in 1909 and placed in the chapter of the Code relating to injunctions. Prior to its adoption it had been plainly established by the decisions that any taxpayer might bring an action to restrain the payment of public money under a claim that such payment, if made, would be illegal. Winn v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 631, 25 Pac. 968. Section 526a declares what persons or corporations shall be entitled to maintain that kind of an action. The effect of the legislative act must be regarded as one intending to limit the right to prosecute such an action, to suitors of the kind mentioned therein, or it can be given no effect at all. The Legislature must be presumed to have acted with knowledge of the law as established by the decisions, which gave any taxpayer the right to maintain an action for injunction in a case like this, irrespective of his residence or citizenship; and with this knowledge present in the minds of the legislators, it must be further presumed that section 526a was enacted with a view of limiting this right and restricting it to citizens who are residents, or corporations who are liable to pay a tax within the county, or who have paid such a tax within one year prior to the bringing of the action. Otherwise, the section neither confers nor limits any right not existing prior to its adoption. The elementary rule of statutory construction, that effect must be given to an act of the Legislature whenever such effect is permitted upon a reasonable interpretation of its terms, requires neither argument nor authorities to illustrate its application here. It seems clear, therefore, that by section 526a, Code of Civil Procedure, the right to bring an action like the one plaintiff has here brought for an injunction is limited, in so far as it is conferred upon individuals, to citizens resident within the county. Plaintiff nowhere alleges in his complaint that he is a citizen. On his behalf it is argued that the terms "citizen" and "resident" are sometimes considered as synonymous, and refer merely, where not otherwise defined, to persons having an actual, permanent abode at a definite place. General definitions of the word "citizen" might be looked to to determine the sense in which the term is used in the statute, were it not for the fact that in the Political Code, at section 51, a complete definition is given. Citizens of the state are there defined to be: "(1) All persons born in this state and residing within it, except the children of transient aliens and of alien public ministers and consuls; (2) all persons born out of this state who are citizens of the United States and residing within this state." It might be argued that a statute depriving nonresident citizens of other states of privileges equal with those of citizens of our own state would be obnoxious to the federal Constitution; but even though some force should be conceded to this contention, the provisions of the statute considered here would not be wholly inoperative. Estate of Johnson, 139 Cal. 532, 73 Pac. 424, 96 Am. St. Rep. 161. For aught that appears from plaintiff's complaint, he maye be an alien, and unless he shows that he belongs to the class of persons entitled to prosecute this kind of an action, he cannot be heard at all, especially when he seeks to nullify the effect of an act of the Legislature by raising constitutional questions. He is not, then, a "party interested" in a legal sense. Davidson v. Von Detten, 139 Cal 469, 73 Pac. 189.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Having determined that it does not appear from his complaint that plaintiff has the legal capacity to sue, it follows that the order sustaining the demurrer of defendants was rightly made. If it were profitable so to do, the merits of the constitutional question presented might also be considered, but any conclusion that might be announced upon that matter would have no binding effect upon the parties.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 564

CITIZENS' SECURITIES CO. v. HAMMEL et al. (Civ. 857.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 21, 1910. Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1910; denied by Supreme Court Jan. 16, 1911.)

1. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 128*) — WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT — NECESSITY OF POSSESSION BY PLAINTIFF.

In an action against a sheriff for damages for wrongfully levying upon property claimed to be in plaintiff's possession under a writ of attachment, plaintiff must show right of possession of the property, as well as possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 260–263; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 404*) — OFFICERS — AUTHORITY—PLEDGE OF CORPORATE PROPERTY.

The managing officers of a corporation have not authority without instructions from the board of directors to pledge corporate property for antecedent corporate debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1626–1628; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 477*)—ACTION BY DIRECTORS—NECESSITY OF MEETING.

While a corporate board of directors has power to mortgage corporate property for antecedent debts, it can only do so at a lawfully assembled meeting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1857; Dec. Dig. § 477.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 477*) — OFFICERS—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—RESOLUTIONS—NECESSITY.

In mortgaging corporate property for antecedent corporate debts, the board of directors must act in a manner equivalent to a resolution, though such resolution need not be spread upon the minutes of the meeting if actually passed, and a conversation between four of the eleven members of the board, wherein such four decided to pledge the property, is not sufficient to bind the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1857; Dec. Dig. § 477.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 275*)—RIGHTS OF LANDLORD — POSSESSION OF TENANT'S PROPERTY.

A landlord having no reserved lien for rent or the value of the use and occupation of the property cannot, by forcibly taking it, acquire a right of possession thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1167; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

6. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 98*) — LIABILITY—WRONGFUL LEVY—JUSTIFICATION — NECESSITY.

Where the judgment debtor could have legally taken possession of the goods attached while in plaintiff's alleged possession, the writ of attachment under which the sheriff took possession of the goods was of itself sufficient justification in an action against him for wrongful levy, without proving that the writ was issued upon proper affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 143–157; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

7. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 137*)—LIABILITY—WRONGFUL LEVY—ACTIONS—ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT—"DULY ISSUED."

An allegation of the complaint, in an action against a sheriff for wrongfully levying upon goods under a writ of attachment, that the writ of attachment was "duly issued" means that it was based upon a debt, and upon the affidavit required by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 280–289; Dec. Dig. § 137.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2263.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Citizens' Securities Company against W. A. Hammel and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

John C. Stick, for appellants. Frank W. Burnett, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff, the owner of a building in Los Angeles, leased the same to a corporation known as the Ocean View Cemetery Co.; that prior to the 21st of October, 1908, the cemetery company was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $395.50 on account of rent of said premises; that before said 21st day of October, as security for such unpaid rent, the cemetery company delivered to plaintiff possession of the office furniture contained in said rooms so leased, and vacated the same; that on the 21st of October the defendant sheriff, by virtue of a writ of attachment duly issued to said sheriff in an action begun in the superior court of Los Angeles county against said cemetery company, levied the same upon the property so in the hands of plaintiff, removed said property from said premises, and converted the same to his own use. The defendants deny that said cemetery company ever or at all delivered said property into plaintiff's possession, denied that any delivery of possession was for the purpose of securing to plaintiff the payment of said unpaid rent, and denied that plaintiff on the date of the levy was in the actual or peaceable possession of said property. Upon the trial of the action, the court found in favor of plaintiff, that the cemetery company was indebted to plaintiff in the sum claimed, and that the cemetery company, in consideration thereof, delivered to plaintiff possession of the office furniture contained in said rooms and vacated the same, found the property of the value claimed, and rendered judgment accordingly.

Appellants' primary and principal contention is that there is no evidence in the record warranting the finding of the court that the cemetery company ever delivered to plaintiff possession of the office furniture as security for the debt. A careful examination of the record satisfies us that appellants' contention in this regard must be sustained. It was incumbent upon plaintiff to show, in order to maintain this action, not only possession, but some right to the possession. It does show actual possession of the property at the time of the levy, but introduces no evidence from which it can be said that the right to such possession was established. The only evidence tending to show such right of possession is to the effect that, shortly before the levy by defendants and when the indebtedness existed, the plaintiff, as the landlord of the cemetery association, upon failure and refusal to pay the rent, changed the lock upon the door, thus acquiring possession of the furniture contained in the rooms; that within a day or two thereafter, upon the application of the secretary of the cemetery association and upon representations that the association desired to hold a directors' meeting for the purpose of levying an assessment, the plaintiff unlocked the doors of the rooms in which such furniture was contained and permitted certain directors of the cemetery association to hold their meeting therein. It appears from the record that the cemetery association is a corporation governed by a board of eleven directors, seven of whom were present at this meeting. It is not shown that this meeting was a regular meeting of the association, or that it was a special meeting, notice of which had been given as required by law. It does appear, however, that after the seven members of the board had assembled a conversation took place between four of the members, during which "it seemed the sense of the three or four talking about it was that the company (meaning plaintiff) should have the furniture as security for the rent," in which conversation one Nolan, manager of the corporation, took part and acquiesced. After adjournment of the meeting one of the directors notified the plaintiff that it was the sense of the meeting to have the furniture turned over to plaintiff to apply upon the rent of said office past due, and such director further said: "You will please take possession at my suggestion in order to protect myself on the note signed jointly by myself and others, and to verify my verbal instructions made Monday last." Upon the strength of this statement, and after adjournment of the board, plaintiff again took possession of the furniture by changing the lock on the door again, and excluded the cemetery association therefrom. It must be conceded that the executive or managing officers of a corporation have not the authority, without instructions from the board of directors, to pledge or mortgage the property of the corporation for antecedent debts. Especially would this be true of one simply a director of such corporation. The right of the board of directors to pledge or mortgage the property, even for antecedent debts, must be admitted; but that such board may authorize such act, it is necessary that they be in session at a meeting lawfully assembled. Plaintiff, relying as it must, upon the right to possession, as conferred upon it by the board of directors, must affirmatively show facts from which such authority may be reasonably inferred. Seven members of the board out of a total membership of eleven, notwithstanding they constitute a majority, would not have authority to pledge the property of the corporation for an antecedent debt, unless they were legally assembled for the purpose of transacting corporate business. There is nothing in the record to indicate that this board was so assembled at the time plaintiff claims the authority was given. In addition to this, we are of opinion that some action in the nature of a resolution would be necessary in order to warrant an officer of the corporation in thus pledging corporate property. The resolution need not necessarily be spread upon the minutes, if actually passed, but a conversation simply between four members—the other three present not being shown to have participated therein, nor in fact to have been aware of such conversation—is far from showing any resolution or authority upon the part of the board. It goes without saying that a landlord having no lien for rent reserved, or for the value of the use and occupation of property (Hitchcock v. Hassett, 71 Cal. 334, 12 Pac. 228), cannot acquire right of possession or an interest in the tenant's personal property by forcibly taking possession thereof.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Respondent, however, insists that, waiving all of these matters hereinbefore discussed, the judgment should be affirmed, for the reason that the defendant sheriff did not justify, in that it was neither alleged nor proven that the writ of attachment held by him was issued upon proper affidavit, or that any indebtedness existed warranting the issuance of such writ, and this is claimed upon the authority of Darville v. Mayhall, 128 Cal. 617, 61 Pac. 276. It will be observed, however, that this case differs materially from the one just cited. The rule therein laid down applies to cases where there has been a transfer of title, or where the possession is held under such circumstances as to preclude the owner from retaking possession. In Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 567, the rule as laid down by Starkie on Evidence is approved, which is: "If the assignment and delivery of possession were merely colorable, and the property still remained in the debtor, against whose goods the execution issued, the sheriff, it seems, would be entitled to a verdict without proof of the judgment, the plaintiff having no property in the goods." If, therefore, the owner of the property here under consideration could have retaken possession through claim and delivery, the right of possession remaining in such owner at all times, the writ of attachment would be a sufficient justification, for a writ of attachment or execution as against the debtor is a sufficient justification. In addition to all of this, however, the plaintiff in this case alleges that the writ of attachment was duly issued, which can receive no construction other than that it was based upon a debt and an affidavit required by the statute. In either view of the case, we think the justification was established.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 545

PEOPLE v. HARRISON. (Cr. 178.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 19, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 16, 1911.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—DUPLICITY.

Under Pen. Code, § 288, providing that any person committing lewd acts with child under 14, etc., shall be guilty of a felony, an information charging the defendant with the crime, phrased in the language of the statute, is not demurrable as charging two offenses in one count, as the commission of one or all of the acts described constituted the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 334–400; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—OTHER OFFENSES.

In a prosecution for lewdness with a child, evidence of other acts of lasciviousness and their effect is admissible for the purpose of showing intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830–832; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 782*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for lewdness with a child, an instruction asked by defendant to the effect that charges like the one made against the defendant are easy to make and hard to disprove contains no proposition of law for a jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ACCOMPLICES.

In a prosecution for lewdness with a boy under 14, an instruction that deals with the subject as though the claimed accomplice was an adult is not prejudicial to the defendant as it might have stated section 26 of the Penal Code, which provides that children under 14, in the absence of clear proof of knowledge of its wrongfulness, are incapable of committing crimes.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

5. NAMES (§ 16*)—IDEM SONANS.

An information that a crime was committed with William Standberg, when the real name was William Elmer Strandberg, did not contain a fatal variance, as the rule of idem sonans applies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Names, Cent. Dig. §§ 12–14; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1163*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

While the jury were deliberating on the verdict, a note was sent to them that "Aunt Sophia is dead." It was not shown from what source it came, or whom it was intended for. Held, that no prejudice can be presumed to have resulted to the defendant, though the jury shortly after receiving the note reached a verdict against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases. see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3090–3099; Dec. Dig. § 1163.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George R. Davis, Judge.

R. B. Harrison was convicted of certain lewd and lascivious acts with a boy under the age of 14, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Cross and Grant R. Bennett (J. H. Ryckman, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of having committed certain lewd and lascivious acts with a boy under the age of 14 years in violation of the provisions of section 288, Pen. Code. The judgment required that he be imprisoned in the state prison for a period of 5 years. An appeal is taken from that judgment, and also from an order of the trial court denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

On January 30, 1910, defendant, a man of mature years, accompanied by a boy named William E. Standberg, entered a dressing room at the Bimini bathing establishment in the city of Los Angeles. A man occupying an apartment adjoining this dressing room shortly thereafter chanced to look through an aperture between two boards of the intervening partition, and saw the boy engaged in the act of committing sodomy with the man. He called to an attendant, and together they went to the door of the room occupied by the man and boy. Upon demand being made by the bathhouse attendant that the door be opened the door was opened, disclosing the man in a naked state and boy wearing only an undershirt. The physical condition of the boy in other respects indicated that the act observed by the first witness from the adjoining room had been completed. When called to testify at the trial, the boy Standberg, who was then 13 years of age, told of the commission of a series of acts of sodomy between him and the defendant. According to the revolting tale narrated by him, at different times prior thereto he had been the active participant in the commission of this crime, and at other times the passive subject. He testified that, upon the day when his relations with defendant were discovered at the bathhouse, defendant had first touched with lascivious hand his (the witness') person and the private parts thereof, and had excited his (the boy's) passion. He further testified that upon previous occasions when he had committed similar acts with defendant, it had been the habit of defendant to first use him in a like manner as that last referred to, with the result that his passion would become excited. His whole story was one shocking in its fullness of description of repeated unnatural and disgusting acts committed between himself and the defendant, occurring from a date several months prior to January 30, 1910, and continuing down to the time of the arrest of defendant at the bathhouse.

The information charging defendant with the crime was phrased in the language of the statute. Defendant demurred to it on the ground that two offenses were charged in one count. The demurrer was properly overruled. The commission of any or all of the acts described in, and with the intent stated, by the statute, constituted but one and the same crime or offense. That an information in such a case does not charge different offenses is thoroughly settled by the decisions. We cite People v. Gosset, 93 Cal. 641, 29 Pac. 246; People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 242, 43 Pac. 748; People v. Gusti, 113 Cal. 177, 45 Pac. 263.

Objection was made at the trial to the admission of evidence showing that at different times prior to the commission of the offense charged acts of sodomy had been committed by the boy with the defendant. Defendant does not contend that proof of the commission of other and prior lascivious acts such as those charged to have been committed might not be competent and relevant, but he claims that the prosecution was allowed to show too much; i. e., that the proof should have stopped short of showing that a different crime than that charged, to wit, sodomy, had been committed on any of these prior occasions. The testimony of the boy Standberg was to the effect that upon each of the former occasions referred to the defendant had first done lascivious things to and with the private members of witness' person which aroused his sexual passion, and that sodomy was the resulting act. These several acts in each case were connected and inseparable. Moreover, as it was concededly competent for the prosecution to show that defendant had on prior occasions committed lascivious acts like those with which he was charged, with the complainant, it would seem also competent to permit it to be shown just what the effect of such conduct was upon the witness Standberg; that is, what he did with and to the defendant when moved by the feeling which defendant's previous acts had excited. Such proof would be very satisfactory as tending to show what the purpose and intent of defendant was on the occasion charged in the information. Mr. Wigmore in his work on Evidence, at paragraph 398, referring to a general class of cases to which this one belongs, makes an observation very pertinent here when he says: "The prior or subsequent existence of a sexual passion in A. for B. is relevant * * * to show its existence at the time in issue. The circumstance that the prior or subsequent conduct exhibiting the passion is criminal does not alter the case nor affect the admissibility of the evidence." In so far as the record shows that the boy Standberg was permitted to testify to acts of sodomy committed by the defendant upon him at times when they were unaccompanied by other lascivious acts like those described in the information, no objection appears to have been made to his so testifying. And even though there had been such objection, the evidence was merely by way of showing the complete course of depraved conduct of defendant toward the boy, as evidencing the intent with which he committed the lascivious acts charged. For this purpose the proof was competent.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Instructions of the court defining who may be an accomplice, and charging the jury that the testimony of an accomplice requires corroborating proof to support it, were full and fair. The instruction asked by defendant to the effect that charges like the one made against defendant were easy to make and hard to disprove was not an instruction upon a matter of law required to be presented by the court to the jury. Instructions given on the question of an accomplice were even more favorable than the defendant was entitled to, in that they all dealt with the subject as though the claimed accomplice was an adult. The boy Standberg was a child of the age of 13 years, and the instructions might well have contained a statement of the provisions of section 26 of the Penal Code, which recite that children under the age of 14, in the absence of clear proof that at the time of committing the act charged against them, they knew of its wrongfulness, are incapable of committing crimes.

The further point is presented that while in the information it was stated that the improper acts were committed with one William Strandberg, the proof showed the boy's name to be William Elmer Standberg, and that this variance vitiates the judgment. These names were so similar as to make the doctrine of idem sonans applicable, and the variance was not such as to affect the validity of the judgment. People v. Smith, 103 Cal. 567, 37 Pac. 516; People v. James, 110 Cal. 158, 42 Pac. 479; People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 148, 26 Pac. 759; People v. Clausen, 120 Cal. 383, 52 Pac. 658.

The jury sitting at the trial of defendant retired at the hour of 4 o'clock on June 16, 1910, to deliberate upon a verdict. At about 5 p. m. on the following day, when called into the courtroom, they announced that no agreement had been reached, and were again returned to the jury room. At 9:30 o'clock p. m. of the same day they reached an agreement and rendered their verdict. In an affidavit used at the hearing of his motion for a new trial, and in support of his claim that there had been misconduct on the part of the jury, defendant alleged that after the jury had been called into court on June 17th, according to his information and belief, "there was sent to said jury and delivered to said jury a certain writing, note, or card, stating, among other things, 'that Aunt Sophia is dead'; that within a short time after the receipt of said writing by said jury they agreed upon the verdict." It was not shown from what source the note or card came, or from whom it was intended, and in the absence of a showing that some improper effect was had upon the minds of the jury, or some of its members, which tended to induce an agreement upon the verdict, no prejudice can be presumed to have resulted to defendant. People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 648, 49 Pac. 842.

Appellant presents no other points meriting serious consideration.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 570

WILSON v. CARSON. (Civ. 858.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 22, 1910.)

1. Landlord and Tenant (§ 291*)—Unlawful Detainer—Action—Evidence.

In an action of unlawful detainer, evidence held to show that defendant, who moved in after the tenant had moved out at the end of the term, was not in under the tenant and did not claim through the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

2. Landlord and Tenant (§ 64*)—Estoppel to Deny Title.

The rule that the tenant is estopped to deny the landlord's title does not bind a stranger who claims the land in his own right, and does not enter under the tenant or use the tenant's possession as a means of acquiring the possession himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 177–180; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action of unlawful detainer by I. L. Wilson against G. W. Carson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Shaw & Dyke, for appellant. Conkling & Brown, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action of unlawful detainer Judgment went for defendant, from which, and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he prosecutes this appeal.

It appears that plaintiff, on or about January 1, 1907, leased the premises in question to one M. J. Alexander; that on September 25, 1907, and after the termination of the period for which the premises were leased to Alexander, he removed therefrom, leaving the premises vacant and unoccupied; that two days later, to wit, on September 27, 1907, and while the premises were thus vacant and unoccupied, defendant entered upon and took possession of the premises and continued to hold possession thereof down to the time of the institution of this action, more than a year thereafter. The action is based upon the theory that defendant acquired possession through collusion with Alexander. The complaint alleged: "That on said last-mentioned day defendant entered into possession of said premises by the consent and inducement of said M. J. Alexander, and with full knowledge of said lease and of the circumstances under which said Alexander entered into possession of said property, and of said tenancy, and the defendant ever since said last-mentioned date has been in possession of said premises, and said defendant continues to hold and occupy the same." This allegation was denied.

The court made findings to the effect that defendant knew that during the time that Alexander held and occupied the land such possession was under and by virtue of the lease from plaintiff, but that defendant's entry and occupancy thereof was not by reason of being induced so to do by Alexander, nor with the latter's consent, and that defendant's entry and occupancy bore no relation whatever to the lease. The only evidence offered touching the subject is that of defendant. His testimony not only fully supports the finding, but, in the absence of any contradiction thereof, the court could not have well found otherwise. The contention that the findings are unsupported by the evidence is wholly without merit.

Conceding the finding not obnoxious to the objections urged, appellant insists upon a reversal of the judgment upon the principle of estoppel which prevents a tenant and those holding under him from denying the landlord's title. Such estoppel, however, "does not bind a stranger who claims the land in his own right, and does not enter under the tenant or use the tenant's possession as a means of acquiring the possession himself." Volume 18, Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 418. From all that appears to the contrary, defendant may have owned the land by fee-simple title, and the entry have been made under an assertion of a rightful claim thereto. At all events, the findings negative any interpretation which would justify the conclusion of the existence of collusion between defendant and the tenant, whereby the latter's possession was used as a means of defendant's acquiring possession of the premises. The case of Porter v. Murray, 12 Pac. 425[1], cited by appellant, was a proceeding in forcible entry and detainer, an action which would not lie in this case, for the reason, if for no other, that it appears defendant had been in the quiet possession of the premises for a period of more than one year prior to the institution of the suit (section 1172, Code Civ. Proc.); and hence that case is not in point.

The record discloses no error, and the judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

14 Cal. App. 666

STARKWEATHER v. DAWSON. (Civ. 893.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 23, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 19, 1911.)

1. Elections (§ 305*)—Objections—Admission of Evidence — Necessity — Specific Objections.

A statement by defendant's attorney in an election contest made during the recount, that they ought to consider the spoiled ballots, and that counsel thought the spoiled ballots were returned with the rejected ballots, did not amount to an objection to the introduction of such ballots as rejected ballots for noncompliance with Pol. Code, § 1257, requiring all ballots rejected for illegality to have indorsed upon the ballot the cause of their rejection and strung upon a string, and defendant cannot complain on appeal of the admission in evidence of rejected ballots.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

2. Elections (§ 291*)—Contest—Burden of Proof.

In order to rely upon ballots inclosed in an envelope marked "spoiled, cancelled and unused ballots," contestant was bound to show that such ballots were rejected ballots, and that they had been erroneously rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

3. Trial (§ 105*)—Objections to Evidence—Preliminary Proof—Waiver.

Where in an election contest plaintiff offered in evidence ballots contained in an envelope marked "spoiled, cancelled and unused ballots," stating that they were rejected ballots, and defendant did not object to the sufficiency of the evidence to show that they were rejected ballots, but received the benefit of those ballots favorable to him, he thereby waived proof of their character as rejected ballots, which was necessary to make them admissible.

---

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 70 Cal. xx.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 92*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—STRIKING IMPROPER EVIDENCE—NECESSITY.

Where in an election contest defendant did not object to the admission in evidence of certain ballots as rejected ballots, on the ground that the evidence did not sufficiently identify them as such to make them admissible, a motion, made at the close of plaintiff's testimony, to strike out such ballots as evidence on that ground was properly overruled, since plaintiff could have made the necessary preliminary proof of the character of the ballots had timely objection to their admission been made on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 245, 252; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

5. ELECTIONS (§ 299*) — CONTEST—RECOUNT—PROCEEDINGS—STATUTES.

Pol. Code, § 1207, requires the ballot clerk before any ballot is taken from the box to deface the unused and spoiled ballots by a cross drawn over their face in ink, and to immediately place such defaced ballots in an envelope and seal it, and that a majority of the election officers shall write their names across the sealed part of the envelope; and section 1257 requires all ballots rejected for illegality to be indorsed with the cause of such rejection, and signed by a majority of the election board, and strung upon a string. Held, that the statutes were merely directory, so that failure to comply therewith did not vitiate the election; and hence, if ballots were erroneously rejected, the court should count such ballots upon a recount, regardless of the failure of the election board to comply with the statutes in marking the ballots.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 299.*]

6. ELECTIONS (§ 295*)—RETURN—CONCLUSIVENESS—PRIMA FACIE CORRECTNESS.

The prima facie correctness of the returns and the canvass thereof, showing certain ballots to have been rejected ballots, cannot be overthrown upon recount, except upon satisfactory evidence that such ballots were good.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

7. ELECTIONS (§ 305*) — CONTESTS—APPEAL—CONCLUSIVENESS OF FINDINGS.

While ballots marked as rejected ballots by the election board should only be admitted in an election contest upon clear and satisfactory evidence that they are good ballots, the appellate court will not disturb a ruling admitting them, unless it is clearly satisfied that the evidence does not warrant their admission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; J. W. Mahon, Acting Judge.

Action by Grant Starkweather against John H. Dawson to contest an election. From a judgment for contestant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dixon L. Phillips, J. L. C. Irwin, Maurice E. Power, and Robt. W. Miller, for appellant. Choynski & Humphreys and H. Scott Jacobs, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an election contest. At the municipal election held in the city of Hanford on April 11, 1910, Starkweather and Dawson were opposing candidates for the office of city trustee. The canvass of the returns of the election made by the city trustees resulted in Dawson being declared elected by a majority of nine votes. Thereupon, Starkweather instituted this contest in the superior court of Kings county, praying for a recount of the votes. Upon a recount thereof by the court, Starkweather was declared elected by a majority of two votes, and a judgment accordingly rendered in his favor, from which the defendant or contestee appeals.

The only point upon which appellant relies for a reversal is his contention that the trial court erred in counting certain ballots, which were claimed by plaintiff to have been wrongfully rejected by the election officers of the Fourth precinct. These ballots, 17 in number, were inclosed in a sealed envelope upon which the words "envelope for spoiled, cancelled and unused ballots" were printed. Upon the completion of the recount of the ballots returned as accepted and counted by the precinct election officers, counsel for plaintiff said: "If the court please, we now ask the court to make an order opening this envelope inclosing the spoiled, canceled, and unused ballots. I presume the rejected ballots will be contained in there, and we would like to have it opened for the purpose of ascertaining that, and then we will proceed to inspect the rejected ballots"; whereupon counsel for defendant said: "Our same objection goes to this offered evidence. By the Court: Yes, same objection." The objection referred to was one theretofore interposed, at the commencement of the recount, to the opening of the envelopes containing the voted ballots accepted by the election officers, and the recounting thereof. This objection in full is as follows: "Mr. Phillips (attorney for defendant): The defendant Dawson objects to the offered evidence and the application for an order to direct the clerk to open the Exhibit No. 8 for identification, on the ground and for the reason that the same is not the best evidence of what the votes were cast at the election; that the certificate of the board of election is the best evidence under the circumstances, as presented by the evidence here introduced in court, that the evidence shows from the city clerk, Hill, former city clerk, the present city clerk, and present and former city marshal, A. M. Fredericks, that the custody and control of the offered evidence, together with all of the other envelopes and exhibits introduced in the case, have not been under the control exclusively of either the former city clerk, James A. Hill, or the present city clerk, D. C. Williams, at any time since the 11th day of April, 1910, but, on the contrary, the evidence shows without conflict that the offered evidence, together with all the exhibits marked for identification, have been in the joint control, and in the joint possession, of the city marshal, Fredericks, who was a witness on the stand, at all the times, together with James A. Hill, the former city clerk, and the present city clerk, D. C. Williams, and that, besides, the evidence shows affirmatively that one M. B. Washburn, who was a former deputy city clerk, had knowledge of the combination of the vault in which the offered evidence was subsequently kept; and that also one Z. D. Johns was a deputy city clerk at all the times from the time that James A. Hill, the former city clerk, was in office, up to and including the 18th day of April, 1910; and in addition to that, that certain packages of these election returns were opened by the board of trustees of the city of Hanford at the canvassing of the returns, and that it is in evidence from Mr. Hill that certain of those returns were cracked; that the seals were cracked and broken when they were delivered to him and afterwards when they were delivered to the city board of trustees, and as to the certain or particular ones, the seals of which were broken, that he couldn't say which ones they were." This objection was overruled. Thereupon, the court ordered the clerk to open the envelope marked "spoiled and unused ballots," whereupon the following colloquy occurred: "Counsel for defendant: Have you counted these, Mr. Clerk? Mr. Clerk: No, sir. Counsel for defendant: Well, you had better count them. The Court: What are those? Counsel for plaintiff: Ballots that were rejected by the election board." The clerk thereupon counted the ballots and announced that there were 17. As the recount of these 17 ballots proceeded, objections were interposed by each party upon the ground of the manner of marking some of the ballots, and defendant asked that certain of the ballots be counted for him, which was done. The recount thereof resulted in Starkweather getting 10 additional votes and Dawson getting two; the other five, for reasons unnecessary to here mention, being rejected by the court.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In addition to these ballots being inclosed in the envelope so marked for "spoiled, cancelled and unused ballots," none of them were indorsed as required by section 1257, Pol. Code, but defendant, at the time of counting the same, interposed no objection upon such ground, nor did he question their being rejected ballots, unless the lengthy objection heretofore quoted can be regarded as an objection raising the question.

Section 1257, Pol. Code, provides that "all ballots rejected for illegality must be endorsed upon the ballot the cause of such rejection, and signed by a majority of the election board, and thereafter strung upon a string." It is conceded the election board failed to comply with this provision. A critical examination of defendant's lengthy objection, however, discloses nothing calculated to acquaint plaintiff or the court with the fact that defendant raised any objection to the introduction of the ballots on account of such neglect of duty on the part of the election board. It is true, that at one stage during the recount defendant's attorney stated: "There is another point that should be considered. We ought to take into account the spoiled ballots. I think the spoiled ballots were returned with the rejected ballots." To which and other like suggestions the court replied: "You gentlemen may raise that point when you get to your part of the case." The suggestion made cannot be regarded as an objection to the count of the ballots, upon the ground that they were not in fact rejected ballots.

The duty devolved upon plaintiff to establish the fact that these ballots inclosed in the envelope marked and intended for "spoiled, cancelled and unused ballots" were rejected ballots, and to show to the satisfaction of the court that they had been erroneously rejected. When, however, they were offered by plaintiff, with a statment to the effect that they were rejected ballots, and defendant not only failed to question the correctness of the statement, but permitted them to be introduced without objection to the sufficiency of proof establishing their character, claiming and receiving the benefit of those appearing in his favor, it was equivalent to a stipulation of the fact, or at least a waiver of proof, which a proper objection would have otherwise rendered necessary as a condition of introducing them in evidence.

Waiving the sufficiency of the record as affording sufficient evidence that the ballots were rejected, and not unused and canceled ballots, we are of opinion that appellant, having at the time when they were offered neglected and failed to interpose any objection to the introduction of the ballots in evidence, upon the ground that they were not in fact rejected ballots or indorsed as required by section 1257, Pol. Code, he should not now be heard to complain upon such ground. "The general rule is that a party objecting to the admission of evidence must specify the ground of his objection when the evidence is offered, and will be considered as having waived all objections not so specified." People v. Manning, 48 Cal. 338; Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 418, 33 Pac. 271; Wise v. Wakefield, 118 Cal. 107, 50 Pac. 310; Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co., 149 Cal. 772, 87 Pac. 622; Bass v. Leavitt, 11 Cal. App. 582, 105 Pac. 771.

For like reason, that defendant had waived objection upon the grounds referred to, the court did not err in denying his motion made at the close of plaintiff's testimony to strike out the evidence afforded by these ballots, upon the ground that "there has been nothing shown to identify the ballots returned as spoiled and rejected ballots." Had the objection been made at the proper time, plaintiff would no doubt have been given opportunity to call the election officers to the witness stand and meet such objection by proof of the character of the ballots. Bass v. Leavitt, supra. To have granted the motion without again traversing the ground would, in effect, have deprived plaintiff of the right to make such proof.

Section 1207, Pol. Code, directs that before any ballot shall be taken from the ballot box the ballot clerk must proceed to deface the unused and spoiled ballots by drawing across the face thereof in writing ink with a pen two lines which shall cross each other, and shall immediately place all such defaced ballots within an envelope and seal such envelope, and a majority of the election officers shall write their names across the sealed portion of the envelope. The fact that none of the ballots were so defaced is unimportant and signifies little, for the reason that the provisions of this section, as well as those contained in section 1257, are merely directory. Electors of the precinct should not be disfranchised, because the election officers fail to comply with provisions which do not go to the substance of the election. "Mere irregularity on the part of election officers or their omission to observe some merely directory provisions of the law will not vitiate the poll." McCrary on Elections, § 225. Says the same author (section 228): "Those provisions of a statute which affect the time and place of the election and the legal qualifications of the election are generally of the substance of the election, while those touching the recording and return of the legal votes received and the mode and manner of conducting the mere details of the election are directory." Therefore, it was the duty of the court, if in fact voted ballots had been erroneously rejected, and such fact duly established or proof thereof waived, to count them for the person for whom they were voted, regardless of such acts or omissions on the part of the election board. McCarthy v. Wilson, 146 Cal. 328, 82 Pac. 243; Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 161; Stinson v. Sweeney, 17 Nev. 309, 30 Pac. 997; Russell v. McDowell, 83 Cal. 71, 23 Pac. 183. It is true that the prima facie correctness of the returns and canvass thereof should not be overturned by a resort to a recount of the ballots, save and except upon sufficient and satisfactory evidence of the integrity of the ballots. There is nothing, however, disclosed by the record which would justify us in disturbing the conclusion of the trial court in this regard. As said in Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 108, 41 Pac. 455 (29 L. R. A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68): "While the ballots should be admitted only after clear and satisfactory evidence of their integrity, yet, when they have been admitted, this court will not disturb the ruling, unless we in turn are as well satisfied that the evidence does not warrant it."

Defendant offered in evidence the certificate of the election officers, whereby they certified that the number of ballots voted was 134, and that the number of ballots spoiled was 17. This statement to the effect that 17 ballots were spoiled is entitled to little weight, in view of the fact that all of these ballots had the numbers torn therefrom, indicating that they had passed through the ballot box, and the further fact that in the same document the election officers certify that only 119 votes were cast for the opposing candidates, which fact tends to show that 15 of the 17 votes certified as spoiled must have been voted and passed through the ballot box, and were included in the count of 134 ballots certified as having been voted.

Upon the facts as disclosed by the record, the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

159 Cal. 34

PEOPLE v. MULCAHY et al. (Sac. 1,780.)

(Supreme Court of Calfornia. Dec. 27, 1910.)

1. Judgment (§ 279*)—Judgment Roll—Contents.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 670, subd. 1, the judgment roll, where the complaint is not answered by any defendant, and where service is made by publication, embraces the affidavit for publication of summons and the order directing the publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 551; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

2. Judgment (§ 153*)—Vacation—Time for Proceedings.

Code Civ. Proc. § 412, provides that where defendant resides out of the state, has departed therefrom, cannot after due diligence be found there, or conceals himself to avoid service of summons, and the fact appears by affidavit, and it also appears by affidavit or by the verified complaint that a cause of action exists against defendant, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action, or that the action relates to property in the state in which such defendant has or claims an interest, the court or judge may make an order that service be made by publication. Held that, in the absence of a sufficient affidavit, and where the complaint is not verified, and the affidavit is insufficient, stating merely that affiant was acquainted with the facts of the case and verily believed that plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought, and that defendant sought to be served was a necessary and proper party defendant without affirming directly or on information and belief that the facts alleged in the complaint were true, it appears in the judgment roll itself, and hence upon the face of the judgment, that it was void for want of jurisdiction on service of summons by publication, no order for such service being authorized, so that though relief against the judgment was not demanded within the time limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that, where a summons has not been personally served, the court may allow defendant at any time within a year after judgment to answer to the merits, the court could set aside the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 300–304; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

3. Process (§ 85*)—Service by Publication—Necessary Compliance with Statute.

Actions wherein service of summons is had by publication are in invitum, and strict compliance with the statute is necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. § 99; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by the People against Patrick Mulcahy and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order setting it aside, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles A. Tuttle and M. W. McIntosh, for appellant. Chauncey H. Dunn, J. D. Meredith, and J. B. Landis, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment.

In August, 1899, the district attorney of Placer county filed a complaint to foreclose the interest of Patrick Mulcahy in certain school lands and to cancel his certificate of purchase. The summons was served by publication, and upon default of the defendant a decree of foreclosure was made and entered on December 4, 1899. On June 14, 1909, James T. and Theodore F. Hill as grantees by mesne conveyances from said Patrick Mulcahy gave notice of motion to vacate the judgment, and after due hearing the motion was granted July 14, 1909. The material part of the court's finding was as follows: "That said judgment in said action is null and void on its face, and that the court never acquired jurisdiction over the person of defendant. That no service of summons, either actual or constructive, was ever made upon the defendant."

Appellant contends that the judgment is not void upon its face, and that therefore the court had no power to consider the affidavit of James T. Hill (one of the petitioners); the relief not having been demanded within the time limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, citing People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 675, 77 Pac. 651. There can be no doubt of the correctness of the rule announced in the above-cited case, and it therefore becomes our duty to scan the judgment roll and to see whether or not invalidity of the judgment is apparent from an inspection thereof. This case differs from People v. Davis, supra, in the fact that section 670, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is applicable here as it has stood since the amendment of 1895, and we are permitted to consider the affidavit for the publication of summons and the order directing publication.

The only important problem in this case arises over the interpretation of section 412, Code Civ. Proc. The respondent contends that, under the requirements of this section, it must appear by affidavit or by the verified complaint on file that a cause of action exists against defendant, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action. The complaint is not verified. The affidavit of the district attorney upon which the order for publication of summons was based stated substantially that he was acquainted with the facts of the case and verily believed that plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought and that Mulcahy was a necessary and proper party defendant. He did not affirm directly or on information and belief that the facts alleged in the complaint were true. Respondent contends that the affidavit in order to be effective must state probative facts from which the court could ultimately conclude that a cause of action against defendant exists and that he is a necessary and proper party, citing County of Yolo v. Knight, 70 Cal. 431, 11 Pac. 662, and Columbia Screw Co. v. Warner Lock Co., 138 Cal. 446, 71 Pac. 498. These cases undoubtedly sustain respondents' theory. Appellant contends that the amendment of 1895 to section 412, Code Civ. Proc. changed the pre-existing rule and dispensed with the necessity of having a verified complaint in certain classes of cases. The material portion of that section is as follows: "Where the person on whom service is to be made resides out of the state; or has departed from the state; or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state; or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons; or is a foreign corporation having no managing or business agent, cashier or secretary within the state, and the fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court or a judge thereof; and it also appears by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action; or when it appears by such affidavit, or by the complaint on file therein, that it is an action which relates to or the subject of which is real or personal property in this state, in which such person defendant or foreign corporation defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or in which the relief demanded consists wholly or in part in excluding such person or foreign corporation from any interest therein, such court or judge may make an order that the service be made by the publication of summons. * * *"

The position of the appellant is that the words "the complaint on file herein," contained in that part of the section which was adopted in 1895, dispenses with the necessity of verification of the complaint in cases like the one here considered because in the preceding clause the words "the verified complaint on file" are used. We cannot agree with this. The filing of a verified complaint (in the absence of a sufficient affidavit) is contemplated in the other parts of the section, and, when the reference of the statute is to "the complaint on file herein," evidently such verified complaint was in the contemplation of the Legislature. There is no good reason why some sort of verification should be required in one class of cases and none in an equally important kind of actions. The word "herein" used in the statute, although awkwardly employed, indicates that reference was intended to the sort of complaint mentioned elsewhere in the section.

Actions of this sort are in invitum, and strict compliance with the statute is necessary. Columbia Screw Co. v. Warner Lock Co., supra. As we have seen, the statute was not closely followed in the requirement that the facts necessary to establish a cause of action should be alleged by a verified instrument—the complaint or the affidavit. This appears upon the face of the judgment; that is to say, in the judgment roll itself. It follows that the order of the court setting aside the judgment was properly made. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to discuss the other points mentioned in the briefs.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

---

159 Cal. 1

GRANGER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF NEVADA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 5,345.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1910.)

1. PROHIBITION (§ 10*) — JURISDICTION OF COURT.

The grantee of a purchaser from executors sued to quiet title and obtained judgment, which was reversed on appeal on the ground that the sale by the executors did not pass title because not confirmed by the court. A defendant in his dual capacity of coexecutor and residuary legatee filed a cross-complaint for an accounting by the purchaser and his grantee of the rents, subject to a deduction for improvements. The original complaint of the grantee was stricken out and the case proceeded on the cross-complaint. Judgment was rendered against the purchaser and the grantee, but the grantee obtained a new trial, and a decision was again rendered against him, but no judgment was entered thereon. Subsequently another executor filed an amended complaint to quiet title and for an accounting. Held that, while the judgment conclusively settled the account between the purchaser and the estate of testator, and while the striking out of the complaint of the grantee left only the matter of accounting at issue, the court had jurisdiction to proceed to the entry of judgment as to the grantee, and prohibition could only issue so far as to prevent further proceedings against the purchaser on behalf of the estate or the executors thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37–56; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. PROHIBITION (§ 10*) — JURISDICTION OF COURT.

A purchaser of real estate from executors obtained no title because the sale was not confirmed by the court, and he conveyed the property to a third person. A devisee conveyed his interest to the third person's husband, and the third person and her husband conveyed to the purchaser, who brought suit to quiet title. Pending the suit a judgment adjudging that he held possession of the property as trustee of the estate of testator, and that there was due from the estate on account of the purchase money paid to the executors, after deducting the rents received, a specified sum, was rendered. A judgment denying relief was reversed on appeal, and on remand a cross-complaint was filed by an executor. Held, that the court had jurisdiction of the case, so that prohibition to restrain it from proceeding in the case could not lie, though the judgment rendered pending the suit could be pleaded as an adjudication of the matters determined by it.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37–56; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

In Bank. Application for writ of prohibition by Samuel Granger and another against the Superior Court of Nevada County, and George L. Jones, judge thereof. Granted in part; denied in part.

Thos. S. Ford and Ed. V. Henley, for plaintiffs. C. W. Kitts and J. M. Walling, for defendants.

PER CURIAM. This is an application to this court for a writ of prohibition against further proceedings in the superior court of Nevada county in two certain actions in said court: (1) The action of Mary A. Benallack against William G. Richards, James Benallack, and Francis L. Richards, as executors of the estate of Phillip Richards, deceased, and William S. Richards and William G. Richards, as individuals, begun February 11, 1895, and numbered 2,343 in said court; (2) the action of Samuel Granger against the same parties, begun May 19, 1897, and numbered 2,635 in said court. The general ground upon which prohibition is asked is that a judgment has been rendered in the first-named action which disposes of all the matters at issue between the parties in both actions and that said judgment has become final. Although the cases involve the same facts, they will require separate consideration.

1. The complaint in the action of Mary A. Benallack in substance stated a cause of action to quiet title to lot 28 in block 30 in Nevada City. The complaint alleged that Phillip Richards died seised of this lot on March 27, 1887, that his will was duly probated and the above-named parties appointed the executors thereof, that they were empowered by the will to sell and convey real or personal property of the estate without any order of court, that on May 11, 1891, as such executors, they sold and conveyed said lot to Samuel Granger for $3,365, which sum was paid to the executors and by them distributed among the legatees under the will, that thereafter Granger conveyed the property to the plaintiff Mary A. Benallack, and that the defendants claimed an interest in the lot adverse to her. The answer of William G. Richards and William S. Richards alleged that the deed from the executors to Granger was never reported to the superior court or confirmed, that the purchase money therefor was in fact paid by James Benallack, and that Granger bought the same on behalf of said James Benallack. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff from which an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, and said judgment was reversed on April 6, 1897; the opinion being reported in 116 Cal. 405, 48 Pac. 622. The ground of reversal was that a sale made by executors under a power given to them by the will of the deceased did not pass title to the grantee unless the sale was confirmed by the court.

On December 2, 1897, after the coming down of the remittitur, Francis S. Richards, one of the defendants, in the dual capacity of coexecutor and residuary legatee, filed a cross-complaint in the action. Therein he set forth the facts hereinbefore stated, including the failure to confirm the sale by the executors to Granger, and further that Granger took and held possession of the lot from May 11, 1891, until February 9, 1893; that Mary A. Benallack held possession thereafter from the latter date until May 8, 1897; that Francis S. Richards, as devisee, had conveyed his interest in the lot to James Benallack in 1894; that Mary A. Benallack and James Benallack conveyed to Granger on May 8, 1897; that Granger has ever since that time held possession thereof; that James Benallack died on November 13, 1897; that neither Mary Benallack nor Granger had ever accounted for rents received by them from said lot; that each had made valuable improvements thereon; that they were trustees of said rents for the benefit of the estate; and that as such executor he offered to make such restitution to them as the court should direct. The prayer was that Granger be made a party to the action, that an accounting be had of the purchase money paid, the taxes and insurance paid, the repairs made and the rents received, and for general relief. This cross-complaint was served on all the other parties to the action. William G. Richards, the other surviving executor, and William S. Richards, the other residuary devisee, filed a demurrer to said cross-complaint, which was overruled with their consent. They filed no answer within the time allowed, and their default thereon was duly entered. Mary A. Benallack and Granger answered denying, in part, the receipt of the rents as alleged therein, averring payments for improvements, repairs, and taxes, and denying the trust. On these issues a trial was had and on January 24, 1899, findings were filed and judgment given declaring that Granger held possession of the lot as trustee of the estate of Phillip Richards, deceased, that there was due from said estate to him on account of the purchase money paid to the executors, after deducting the rents he had received, the sum of $2,811.19, and that before the estate would be entitled to the possession of the lot it must pay him said sum. It was also declared that Mary A. Benallack was indebted to the estate on account of rents collected by her while in possession of the lot, in the sum of $2,198.19. After the filing of the cross-complaint of Richards, the original complaint of Mary A. Benallack was stricken out, and the cause thereafter seems to have proceeded on the theory that she had dismissed her action, and that the case was pending solely upon the cross-complaint of the executor aforesaid. Granger did not appeal from this judgment, nor did the cross-complaining executor, and so far as it adjudged matters at issue between them it has become final. Mary A. Benallack moved for a new trial thereof so far as the issues relating to her were concerned, and the motion was granted. Thereafter a new trial was had and a decision given again declaring her indebted to the estate. No judgment has ever been entered upon this decision. After the judgment of January 24, 1899, to wit, on March 3, 1899, William G. Richards, as executor as aforesaid, by leave of court, filed a pleading styled an amended cross-complaint in said action of Bennalack v. Richards, asking to have the title of the estate to said lot quieted, and for an accounting. To this Granger and Mary A. Benallack filed an answer setting up the judgment of January 24, 1899, as a bar to the cross-complaint and denying the jurisdiction of the court to proceed further in the action.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is evident from this recital of the facts that the court has not been divested entirely of jurisdiction. While it is true that the judgment of January 24, 1899, conclusively settles the account between Granger and the estate of Richards and establishes Granger's right to hold possession of the lot until the amount due him has been paid, and while the striking out of the original complaint seems to have left no other matter at issue in the case so far as Granger and the estate is concerned, the court still has jurisdiction to proceed to the entry of judgment with respect to Mary A. Benallack. Upon the new trial which she secured, findings were filed; but it appears no judgment has yet been entered. So far as Granger and the estate of Richards is concerned, the litigation in Bennalack v. Richards appears to be at an end, and the court is without jurisdiction to proceed further. Treating this application as separable, a writ of prohibition can issue to prevent further proceedings against Granger on behalf of the estate or the executors thereof in that action. With regard to Mary A. Benallack no case of prohibition has been made.

2. After Granger received the conveyance of the lot from Mary A. Benallack and her husband on May 8, 1897, he began the action of Granger v. Richards, numbered 2,635 aforesaid. His complaint set out the same facts heretofore recited, stating them somewhat more at length than in the complaint of Mary A. Benallack in Bennalack v. Richards, and prayed for a decree quieting his title to the lot and for general relief. Answers were filed by the defendants and a trial resulted in a judgment in favor of W. G. Richards as surviving executor and residuary legatee. From this judgment Granger appealed to the Supreme Court, and the judgment was reversed. The case is reported in 154 Cal., at page 478, 98 Pac. 528. The opinion declared that Granger was entitled to be reimbursed for the amount of his purchase money and that an accounting should be had of the rents received during his possession. A cross-complaint was filed in that case by William G. Richards, as executor, and the case is still pending; no trial having been had since the reversal of the first judgment. It is obvious that the court still has jurisdiction of that case and that a writ of prohibition cannot be issued. It may be conceded that with respect to everything except the taking of a supplemental account and making of a decree requiring Granger to reconvey the property to the estate upon the payment of the money found due him upon the accounting, the whole controversy has been settled by the judgment in the action of Bennalack v. Richards. But this does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to proceed in the action. That judgment can be pleaded as an adjudication of the matters determined by it, but it cannot be given the effect of depriving the court of jurisdiction.

Let a writ issue prohibiting the superior court of Nevada county from proceeding further in the case of Bennalack v. Richards, except so far as may be necessary to determine and adjudge the issues between the estate of Richards and the estate of Mary A. Benallack, deceased, with respect to the amount due her or for rents received from said lot while she was in possession thereof. In other respects the petition is denied.

BEATTY, C. J., not participating.

159 Cal. 85

DE LA GUERRA et al. v. STRIEDEL et al.

(L. A. 2,466.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1910. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1911.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1010*)—Review—Findings of Trial Court.

In an action to restrain defendant from breaking a gate, and to quiet title to a strip of land, evidence considered, and held to present some proof tending to support the findings of the trial court that an easement claimed by defendant was permissive only, so that such finding would not be disturbed on appeal.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979–3982; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

2. HIGHWAYS (§ 17*)—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHTS—EVIDENCE.

That certain land is inclosed by a fence is strong evidence, that the use of it by the public is permissive, and based on a mere license of passage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; James W. Taggart and Samuel E. Crow, Judges.

Action by Delfina de la Guerra and another, against Michael Striedel and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs sued to restrain defendants from breaking down a gate which had been built across a strip of land ten feet in width, and to quiet their title against defendants in the said strip of land, which was claimed by the defendants as a right of way extending from the property of defendant Streidl (named in the pleadings as Striedel) to Haley street in the city of Santa Barbara. Defendant John Doe, whose true name was found by the court to be K. Okuhara, having been regularly served and having failed to appear, judgment by default was taken against him. Defendant Streidl by his answer denied plaintiffs' right to close the strip of land in question and counterclaimed a right of way in himself in common with others and the public over the aforesaid property. Treating the counterclaim as a cross-complaint, plaintiffs entered a denial of its allegations, and the case was tried on the issues thus raised. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs, and this appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying defendant Streidl's motion for a new trial.

We mention the default judgment against Okuhara because the respondents raise the point that he is an interested party within the meaning of section 940, Code of Civil Procedure, and that since he has not been served with the notice of appeal nor the bill of exceptions, this court has no jurisdiction to consider these appeals. While there is, perhaps, some force in this contention (see Niles v. Gonzales, 152 Cal. 90, 92 Pac. 74, s. c. 155 Cal. 359, 100 Pac. 1080) we have examined the case, and are prepared to sustain the judgment and order on their merits. The court, after finding that plaintiffs were the owners of a certain parcel of land, including the strip over which defendant claimed a right of way, found that neither Streidl nor the public had any easement of way across the whole or any part of said land; that "for many years, viz., since 1880, the said parcel of land has been inclosed and separated from the said Haley street by a good and substantial inclosure with a gateway to enter said parcel of land from said side of Haley street, which gate was made and maintained by the plaintiffs, their tenants and their predecessors in interest, and that said gate was across that portion of said parcel of land, described as an alley in said defendant's answer"; and that "for thirty years the said Michael Streidl, without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, occasionally walked along the said parcel of said land described in said defendant's answer as an alley, but the said defendant at no time asserted to the plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest that he claimed any right of way over said alley, but the said defendant's said occasional use of the same was permissive by the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest." It was also found that the alley was intended by the plaintiffs and their predecessors to be used by themselves and their tenants, and that it had been so used for 30 years. It appears that in 1875 Mrs. Josefa de la Guerra owned substantially all of the west quarter of a block in the city of Santa Barbara bounded on the southwest by State street and on the northwest by Haley street. Her holding extended 200 feet on Haley street and 232 feet on State street. In that year she conveyed to Col. Hollister the west corner, 60 feet on State street by 100 feet on Haley street. Later she sold to Mr. Stearns a piece of land adjoining Col. Hollister's with a frontage of 75 feet on State street and a depth from that street of 125 feet and a strip 25 feet in width running to Haley street. It will be seen at once that this parcel surrounded the Hollister property on two sides. Later and in the year 1875 Mrs. de la Guerra sold to Streidl the property adjoining that of Stearns. This parcel had a frontage of 25 feet on State street and a depth of 125 feet. Buildings were erected on the three lots above described, and when Mr. Stearns built his back fence, he put it 115 feet from State street, leaving a strip 10 feet wide at the rear of his lot outside the fence. When Streidl built his fence he followed the example of his neighbor, Mr. Stearns, and left a similar space at the rear of his property. He also put a large gate and two doors in his back fence for convenience, he said, in going and coming between his property and Haley street. It is this strip of land over which defendant Streidl claims an easement against the plaintiffs who are the successors in interest of Stearns, the latter's title having been acquired by Mrs. de la Guerra by foreclosure about six years after the sale, and having descended with that of the rest of the property here considered to the plaintiffs. Appellant contends that the user by Streidl for 30 years of this alleyway was presumptively adverse, and that the court ignored this presumption by a finding to the contrary, unsupported by competent evidence. The only evidence offered in that behalf, according to appellant's contention, was that the tenants of Mr. Stearns and Mrs. de la Guerra used the alley as much as Mr. Streidl did. An examination of the testimony (which was conflicting) discloses the fact, however, that there was evidence offered on behalf of plaintiffs tending to show that a gate was maintained at the Haley street end of the alley as found by the court. Carlos de la Guerra testified: "We—I say 'we' because I had charge of the property at one time—we have always tried to maintain a gate there since 1874, and when I came to manage the property in 1886 or 1887 up until 1892 or 1893 we always had a gate there, especially so when they paved the street, State street, and paved Haley street, including up beyond the gate there, I had that paved with asphaltum and also paved the passageway with asphaltum through that gate—that was in 1888 or 1889 when I had the asphaltum sidewalk laid there and I had that fence put to the gate, re-established it as I had already done before. I never knew of any one else or any one other than the tenants of this property here having a passageway or using any part of this de la Guerra property that is represented here as vacant or northeast of these lines as a right of way." Mr. Maris, who occupied the property for eight or nine years following 1891 testified, in reference to the Haley street terminus: "There was a gate there all the time when I had the property—there was always a gate up there. It was kept closed most of the time. I had my horses running loose in there, and the gate was generally closed to keep them in; I always looked out for that. It was board fence from the gate down to my tract of land of three or four boards. When I first put up the fence I put up bars there, but I only kept them up a short time, and I put up a gate with hinges. That fence about which I speak as existing on the de la Guerra property along on Haley street, up to this gate, was built along in '91." The same witness said: "While I was the tenant of this property I knew of people making use of this gate going back into this property. The tenants of all the property along there used it. I had no objections to their using it as long as they didn't trespass on the land, I wanted to use there, my crop of hay there, and kept the gate closed. As long as they did that I had no objection. I refer to all the tenants along there, the tenants in the de la Guerra estate there and back of the Odd Fellows (meaning the property formerly sold to Col. Hollister)." Dr. Franceschi, who occupied property on that block for some time, commencing in 1899, testified: "There was a gate there. I think that gate has been there all the time since I went there. I don't know whether it has been there recently or whether it had been there for some time, but it was there a good many years." It will thus be seen that there is some evidence to sustain the finding that the property had been fenced and that the use of the alleyway was merely permissive. Counsel for appellant are of the opinion that Carlos de la Guerra's testimony was so discredited as to be worthless, but we cannot interfere with the peculiar function of the trial court in passing upon the weight of evidence. The showing that the land had been inclosed by a fence would strongly indicate that the use of it by the public was merely permissive and "is strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way." Quinn v. Anderson, 70 Cal. 456, 11 Pac. 746; Huffman v. Hall, 102 Cal. 30, 36 Pac. 417. We think that there is sufficient evidence to justify all of the findings of the court and to sustain the judgment.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The judgment and order therefore are affirmed.

I concur: LORIGAN, J.

---

159 Cal. 49

CALIFORNIA WINE ASS'N v. COMMERCIAL UNION FIRE INS. CO. OF NEW YORK. (S. F. 5,261.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1070*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS SPECIAL VERDICT.

An incorrect special verdict is harmless error when another consistent special verdict correctly found sustains the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4231–4233; Dec. Dig. § 1070.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 279*)—JUDGMENT ROLL—SPECIAL VERDICTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 670, subd. 2, making a copy of the verdict a part of the judgment roll, special verdicts controlling a general verdict are properly included.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 546–551; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 654*) — RECORD — AMENDMENT—ESTOPPEL BY STIPULATION.

Where appellant seeks to overthrow the general verdict by showing error as to one of the issues, the judgment roll may be amended by incorporating the special verdicts to show that the judgment is sustainable regardless of the alleged error, though respondent has stipulated that the transcript is correct and that the appeal be heard thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 654.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 656*)—RECORD—AMENDMENT—STIPULATION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence on respondent's application to incorporate special verdicts in the judgment roll held to show that respondent did not waive his right thereto in consideration of appellant omitting from the bill of exceptions special interrogatories refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 656.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

5. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

Allowance of leading questions in examining witnesses is discretionary with the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 795; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 243*)—EXAMINING WITNESSES—LEADING QUESTIONS.

Allowance of leading questions manifestly designed not to suggest answers but rather to direct witnesses of slow comprehension to the general subject of the testimony was not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 795, 847; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 132*)—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—WITHDRAWAL OF REMARKS.

Applying the term "welching" to defendant was not reversible error where counsel withdrew it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 315; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 270*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE—IRRELEVANT MATTERS.

Where in an action on a fire policy, defended on the ground that the loss was caused by earthquake, plaintiff's witness testified respecting a fire, a question on cross-examination as to whether he had conversed with certain people on the morning of the earthquake was properly excluded if intended as a foundation to show the conversation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 926, 955–957; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 329*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—QUESTION TESTING RECOLLECTION.

Where in an action on a fire policy a witness for plaintiff testified concerning the fire, it was not error to exclude a question on cross-examination to test witness' recollection as to whether he had had any conversation with certain people on the morning of the earthquake; allowance of the question being within the trial judge's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1104, 1105; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 63*)—ORDER OF PROOF—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

It was not an abuse of discretion to permit defendant to show on surrebuttal matter which was part of its case in chief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 151–153; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—ERROR FAVORABLE TO PARTY COMPLAINING—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

A fire insurance company sued on a policy cannot complain of an instruction that if fire caused by earthquake spread from building to building until it reached plaintiff's, plaintiff could not recover because the instruction omitted to require a finding that the fire burned "uninterruptedly" from one building to another, the omission being beneficial to the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank F. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the California Wine Association against the Commercial Union Fire Insurance Company of New York. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. C. Van Ness and Otto Irving Wise, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro (Alfred Sutro, of counsel), for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was to recover upon a contract of insurance. The policy was pleaded in hæc verba. It contained the following provision: "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by * * * earthquake." At the trial defendant conceded plaintiff's right to recover, unless it could successfully maintain its defense under the quoted provision. It undertook to do so by showing that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's property was caused either directly or indirectly by the earthquake of April 18, 1906. The verdict of the jury was for plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly; and defendant appeals, insisting that several errors of law committed by the trial court were of sufficient gravity to entitle it to a reversal. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

At the trial plaintiff urged, and introduced evidence to show, that defendant was estopped from making its defense under the clause above quoted. Upon this appeal it is contended that the court erred in admitting this evidence, and in its instructions to the jury upon the subject of estoppel. It is further insisted that the evidence was entirely inadequate to establish an estoppel. Again, appellant urges that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions which it proposed, to the effect that if the jury found that a fire or fires were started by the earthquake, that such fire or fires, spreading and burning continuously and uninterruptedly, finally reached and destroyed plaintiff's property, plaintiff could not recover. Respondent, while maintaining that the court fell into error in no one of these matters, further argues that if one and all were conceded to be errors, still its judgment is good by reason of the special verdicts which the jury returned in answer to interrogatories. To interrogatory 26 the jury answered that on the morning of the 18th of April, 1906, in the territory described by the witnesses there was a fire or there were fires not caused directly or indirectly by the earthquake; and to interrogatory 29, the jury made answer that it was one or more of these fires, not caused directly or indirectly by the earthquake, which, burning uninterruptedly from building to building and block to block, reached and destroyed the property of the plaintiff. The jury, also, in terms, found and declared that no fire caused directly or indirectly by the earthquake destroyed the property of plaintiff. The general verdict for plaintiff which followed is manifestly and admittedly supported by these special verdicts. When more than one special issue, which would sustain a judgment is submitted to a jury, and the jury's general verdict is supported by one of these special verdicts and is not supported by the others, if there be no self-destroying inconsistency between these special verdicts, that one, which is correctly found will sustain the judgment, and the incorrect special verdicts become harmless error. Upon this precise subject this court has said: "If then either (special verdict) was sustained by the evidence and was not affected by any error, the want of evidence to sustain the finding on the other defense, or any errors committed in regard to it, could not have been prejudicial." Big Three Mining & Milling Co. v. Hamilton, 107 Pac. 301; Crosett v. Whelan, 44 Cal. 200; Verdelli v. Gray's Harbor Commercial Co., 115 Cal. 517, 47 Pac. 364, 778.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In the original transcript filed in this case all the special verdicts were omitted and the general verdict alone appears in the judgment roll. Respondent, under suggestion of diminution of the record, moved to complete the judgment roll by adding thereto the special verdicts. To this appellant objects, upon the ground, first, that the special verdicts form no part of the general verdict, and so no part of the judgment roll; second, that respondent is estopped by reason of the fact that it stipulated that the transcript upon appeal was correct and that the appeal could be heard on the transcript; and, third, because the insertion of the special verdicts would work an injury to appellant in that respondent waived the insertion of the special verdicts by stipulation, in consideration of appellants omitting from the bill of exceptions the special interrogatories which it had asked the court to submit to the jury, and which the court refused to submit. Upon this refusal, appellant had intended to predicate error. Under the terms of section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it existed at the time this action was tried, the jury was required, if so instructed by the court at the request of either party, to return special verdicts upon any issue made by the pleadings. The special verdicts or findings in this case were such, therefore, as the law not only contemplated, but compelled the jury to make upon request. Section 670, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, declares "a copy of the verdict of the jury" to be a part of the judgment roll. We entertain no doubt that this language embraces the special verdicts, which, themselves, absolutely control the general verdict. It is so expressly decided in Frank v. Grimes, 105 Ind. 346, 4 N. E. 414, and in Suydam v. Williamson, 61 U. S. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978, and such is declared to be the general rule in 2 Cyc., page 1068.

Appellant, in support of its contention that respondent is estopped by stipulation from asking that the judgment roll be amended, cites Bonds v. Hickman, 29 Cal. 460, and Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 155, 11 Pac. 888. In Bonds v. Hickman, the stipulation was to the effect that the transcript contained a true copy of the pleadings and judgment, and that "notice of appeal admitted as duly filed and served, also the filing of appeal bond, insertion of copies waived." After entering into this stipulation respondent moved that the appeal be dismissed upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the case because no notice of appeal had been in fact filed. This court declared merely that if the stipulation was entered into by the respondent under a mistake of fact, and its operation was injurious to him, doubtless it was competent for the court below, upon proper application, to relieve him from it; that this court would do the same if a stipulation were here entered into under a mistake of fact; but under the circumstances of the case this court was powerless in the premises and could not amend the documents constituting the transcript, nor indirectly accomplish the same result by accepting as true a statement not found in the transcript, which necessarily displaced a fact stated therein. It is further declared that this court may order a document to be inserted in or stricken from the transcript in order to perfect it, although it cannot vary or amend a document found therein. In Bonds v. Hickman respondent, who had certified that a judgment was entered on a given date, upon the hearing of the appeal, for the first time, undertook to show by affidavit that in fact it was entered at a later date. Respondent did not undertake to show that he had been deceived or misled in making the stipulation, and his attempt to avoid it and defeat the appeal at a time when a new appeal could not have been taken, could not, under the simplest principles of fair dealing, be permitted. He had lulled his adversary into a fancied security by his stipulation, and when the time for retrieving the error had passed, he sought to defeat the appeal by proving the fact to be to the contrary of that which he had knowingly stipulated. No such question is here involved. The appellant seeks to overthrow the general verdict and judgment based thereon by showing that the court fell into error as to one of the issues. Respondent, in turn, asks the court to perfect the judgment roll, not by changing any document therein, but by adding to it omitted matters properly belonging thereto, which omitted matters would show that the judgment is sustainable regardless of the alleged error. The court of its own motion, and to perfect the record before it, could make the order, and would in any case make it, unless a right of the adverse party was injuriously affected thereby.

The third objection of the appellant to the perfection of the judgment roll rests, as has been said, upon estoppel. The matter was heard upon affidavits supported by the proposed bill of exceptions and the proposed amendments thereto. The proposed bill of exceptions negatives the contention of appellant's counsel that he desired inserted in the bill of exceptions his proposed interrogatories which the court refused to submit to the jury. His proposed bill of exceptions contains nothing to this purport. One of respondent's proposed amendments to appellant's proposed bill of exceptions contained a demand for the insertion of all the questions of fact, findings upon which were requested by either plaintiff or defendant. The court refused to allow this amendment under the belief, that as there was no claim that the special verdicts were inconsistent with the general verdict in any particular, the special verdicts had no place in the record. It thus appears that the absence of the special verdicts was not due to any stipulation, but was due to a ruling of the court in opposition to plaintiff and respondent's motion that they be inserted. Appellant also states that it withdrew "a number of matters which were then a part of the said proposed bill of exceptions," but nowhere is any one of these matters specifically pointed out. Respondent is therefore not estopped, and his motion in this regard to complete the judgment roll by adding thereto the special interrogatories submitted to the jury and their findings thereon is granted.

With the complete record before us, since the sufficiency of the evidence to support the special verdict is not questioned, and since the judgment is sustainable under the special verdict above adverted to, that plaintiff's property was destroyed by a fire not caused directly or indirectly by the earthquake, there is left for consideration only the errors of law occurring at the trial, and, of these, such alone as bear upon this special verdict.

It is contended that the manner in which counsel for plaintiff insisted upon examining his witness throughout the trial necessitates a reversal of the judgment and order. The objections especially noted under this head are that plaintiff's attorneys insisted upon asking leading questions. But the asking of leading questions is within the control of the trial court, and is permitted or not in the court's discretion. Undoubtedly the questions were leading, but they were in their nature harmless, and manifestly were designed not to put answers in the witnesses' mouths, but rather to direct witnesses, who were slow of comprehension, to the general matter concerning which it was sought to elicit their testimony. Thus, for example, a witness is asked: "Did I ask you if you saw anything there? Did you tell me what you saw?" To this the court, in response to an objection said: "The witness apparently is a man who does not comprehend readily. That is the reason why I have allowed leading questions." Plaintiff's attorney asked one of his witnesses if he remembered "when the subject of the welching insurance companies that refused to pay the California Wine Association its insurance first came up." The question was objected to. The adjective "welching" was withdrawn. But appellant insists that the use of this epithet calls for a reversal of the case. We do not think so. Fogel v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 42 Pac. 565;[1] Allen v. McKay, 139 Cal. 94, 72 Pac. 713.

The court sustained an objection to a question propounded to one of plaintiff's witnesses on cross-examination. This witness testified with reference to a fire on the morning of the earthquake. Upon the cross-examination he was asked whether he had had any conversation with the members of the Stern family on the morning of the earthquake. The court sustained the objection upon the ground that conversation had with members of the Stern family would not be competent evidence. If the purpose of counsel was to follow this preliminary question by another seeking to elicit the conversation, the court's ruling was undoubtedly correct. It is here urged that the question was admissible, if only to test the recollection of the witness. Conceding this to be so, it was upon a most minor and immaterial matter. It does not appear that the cross-examination of the witness was unduly curtailed, and the allowance or refusal to allow a specific question such as this was a matter resting in the discretion of the court, and not one for which a cause would be reversed even if, in the view of the appellate tribunal, the question might have been permitted. In rebuttal witnesses called for plaintiff had testified that certain streets were free from fire on the morning of the earthquake. In surrebuttal the defendant called a witness to ask him the condition of these streets. An objection was offered and sustained. Evidence as to the condition of the streets had been a part of defendant's case in chief. It was to rebut this evidence that plaintiff's witnesses were called. To allow further evidence on behalf of defendant, going to the same matter as to which their witnesses testified in chief, was in effect merely to open the case of the defense in chief. The question addressed itself to the discretion of the court and its refusal to allow this to be done was not error.

Complaint is made that the court refused to give an instruction to the effect that if the earthquake caused directly or indirectly a fire at one or a number of named locations in the city of San Francisco "and such fires or any one or more of them burned uninterruptedly from building to building or from block to block until they or any one or more of them reached and burned the insured property, then the defendant was not liable." The court instructed the jury as follows: "If you should find and believe from the evidence that the fires, or any one or more of the fires mentioned by the witnesses or as to which testimony has been introduced, were caused directly or indirectly by the earthquake of April 18, 1906, and that such fire or fires thereafter spread by heat, spark, flame, embers, burning brands or cinders, to and burned from building to building, or block to block, and destroyed the property of plaintiff located on the southeast corner of Fifth and Bluxome streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, then in that case, I instruct you that your verdict should be in favor of the insurance company and against the plaintiff, California Wine Association." The absence of the word "uninterruptedly" from the instruction given, which word is contained in the instruction refused, forms the basis of appellant's complaint. But manifestly the effect of the use of the word "uninterruptedly" was to narrow the instruction proposed by defendant. The absence of the word in the instruction which the court gave made rather for the benefit of defendant than to its injury. The foregoing disposes of all objections meriting discussion. The more interesting consideration, to which no small part of the briefs of both parties is directed, namely, what in law constitutes a fire directly or indirectly caused by an earthquake, is, for the reasons already given, eliminated from this case. Whatever might be said about it would be purely dicta and the question may well be left for future consideration.

---

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 110 Cal. xvii.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(159 Cal. 113)

PEOPLE v. RIGGINS. (Cr. 1,571.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*) — APPEAL — REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The evidence being conflicting, denial of application for change of venue on account of a general feeling against the defendant in the county cannot be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

2. JURY (§ 97*)—"ACTUAL BIAS."

"Actual bias," defined by Pen. Code, § 1073, as a state of mind in reference to the case, or either of the parties, which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of party, may consist of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, based on some knowledge or information of the facts embraced in the charge, or of the evidence to be produced, or, the juror having no such knowledge or information, may consist of a preconceived opinion concerning defendant or the prosecuting witness which would prevent a fair consideration by the juror of the evidence given or facts proven in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 431–437; Dec. Dig. § 97.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 151, 152.]

3. JURY (§ 133*)—EXAMINATION ON VOIR DIRE —ACTUAL BIAS.

Whether a juror has actual bias is a fact to be determined by the trial court on the evidence before it on his examination on his voir dire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*) — APPEAL — REVIEW—ACTUAL BIAS OF JURORS.

The evidence on a voir dire examination of a juror being conflicting as to his actual bias, as where he gives contradictory answers, the decision of the court thereon, as in other cases of conflicting evidence, is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3070; Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

5. JURY (§ 97*)—COMPETENCY OF JUROR—ACTUAL BIAS.

To make a juror competent, notwithstanding an opinion amounting to actual bias, under Pen. Code, § 1076, declaring that one shall not be disqualified as a juror because of having formed or expressed an opinion on the matter or cause to be submitted, founded on public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety, provided that it appear in his declaration that he can and will, notwithstanding such an opinion, act impartially and fairly on the matters to be submitted to him, the opinion must be on the merits of the case, "the matter or cause to be submitted," and must be founded exclusively on one or more of the sources of information enumerated in such section; so he is incompetent where this prejudice consists of an opinion that defendant was guilty of a murder, of which he was acquitted, having nothing to do with the case at bar.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 431–437; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1186*)—APPEAL—REVERSAL—DENIAL OF TRIAL BY FAIR AND IMPARTIAL JURY.

One who, because of exhaustion of his peremptory challenges, is obliged to accept a juror, incompetent for actual bias, his challenge for cause to him being erroneously overruled, is entitled to a reversal, without inquiry as to the sufficiency of evidence of guilt, for infringement of his right to a fair and impartial jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3215–3219; Dec. Dig. § 1186.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 156*)—MALICE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that, a few hours after the alleged assault with intent to murder K., defendant called K. vile names, and cautioned B., as a friend, to have nothing to do with K., though not in the presence of K., was admissible as tending to show malice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 286, 287; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 174*)—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

That, several hours after the alleged assault with intent to murder, defendant was carrying in his overcoat a pistol, was irrelevant; the prosecution having proved that this was not the pistol with which the assault was committed, and his possession of such other pistol afterwards not being shown to have any connection with or relation to the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

9. HOMICIDE (§ 158*)—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

The statement of defendant, a week before the alleged assault with intent to murder K., that before he went to jail "somebody would go to the morgue," cannot be said to be irrelevant, being admitted on the theory that the "somebody" referred to was K., and some circumstances being proved tending in a slight degree to indicate K. was the person to whom he intended to refer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 293–296; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Emmett Riggins was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and appeals. Reversed.

Henry Brickley and W. D. Foote, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of assault with intent to murder one A. L. Kreiss. His motion for a new trial was denied. He appealed from the judgment and order to the District Court of Appeal for the First district. The justices of that court being unable to agree, the case was transferred to this court for determination.

Several errors are alleged, but the principal point presented is that the court erred in overruling the defendant's challenges for cause to the jurors Simpson, Bargroth, and McKeen.

In July, 1905, the defendant shot and killed one Robert E. Dean in Fresno county. He was charged with the murder of Dean, and upon a trial he was acquitted thereof in September, 1905. The case had caused great public discussion. The local newspapers had published detailed accounts of the facts and of the trial, commenting thereon and denouncing the verdict as a miscarriage of justice, even going so far as to condemn the jurors who rendered the verdict. Great indignation was excited against the defendant on account of this, and it manifested itself to such an extent that he left Fresno county and was absent for nearly a year. The offense with which he now stands charged occurred after his return. An application for a change of venue on account of this general feeling against the defendant in Fresno county was presented to the court. Counter affidavits were filed. It appeared from the affidavits and counter affidavits that many persons in the county had expressed feelings of prejudice and bias against the defendant, but that there were also a great many persons who stood indifferent and knew nothing of the defendant or of the present or former charge. The court denied the application. This is assigned as error, but we think the affidavits presented such a conflict that this court cannot disturb the ruling. We mention the facts disclosed merely because they emphasize the necessity for care in passing upon challenges to individual jurors to see that the prevailing prejudice did not find its way into the jury box. On the trial it appeared that many persons were prejudiced against the defendant. Thirty-five of the jurors examined were excluded from the panel on the challenge of the defendant based on their testimony that their belief that the defendant was guilty of the murder of Dean was so strong, notwithstanding his acquittal, that they could not give him a fair and impartial trial upon the charge of which he stood accused.

No one of the jurors above named knew the defendant personally or had any personal feeling of ill will toward him. They had no knowledge of the facts of the previous shooting of Dean, except what they had heard or had read in the newspapers. On his voir dire Simpson said that he thought Riggins was guilty of the murder of Dean and that by his acquittal thereof he had unjustly escaped punishment, that this belief would influence him as a juror if selected to try the case in hand, that he would have a prejudice against the defendant on account of it, and that for that reason it would require less evidence for the prosecution to induce him to convict the defendant of the present charge, and more evidence of innocence to induce an acquittal, than if he were not thus prejudiced. In answer to questions by the district attorney he testified that he could and would lay aside this prejudice, if he were sworn as a juror in the case, and would give the defendant a fair and impartial trial. On re-examination, he said again that, because of this belief that the defendant had murdered Dean, he would require more evidence on behalf of the defendant and less for the prosecution than if the defendant were a person of whom he had never heard. McKeen testified to the same belief as Simpson in regard to the former charge of murder. He further said that, notwithstanding this belief, he could give the defendant a fair and impartial trial on the evidence in the case, that he would not hold any spite against the man for the past and would take the evidence introduced, but that, if there arose a reasonable doubt, his opinion that the defendant had murdered a man once before might cause him to determine the doubt against the defendant. To the district attorney he said that if there was a doubt he did not know that he could give the defendant as fair and impartial a trial as if he had never heard of him before, but that if the court so instructed he would give him the benefit of any reasonable doubt, the same as he would any other man who was being tried. Bargroth testified that he also believed the defendant to be guilty of the murder of Dean. He then said that he did not think this opinion would influence his action as a juror in the case on trial; that the fact that he had shot a man before would lead him to believe that defendant would possibly be more apt to draw a pistol, and would make him think it more likely, if defendant drew a pistol, that he intended to use it, than in the case of a stranger; that circumstances would change this tendency considerably; that he expected he would require the defendant to show that he did not have an intention to use the pistol to kill the man he drew it upon; that if the prosecution proved that he did pull the pistol he would think this sufficient to show an intent by the defendant to kill the man, unless he showed that he did not so intend. In answer to the district attorney, he said that after it was shown that the defendant drew a pistol he would not require less evidence of his intention in doing so than in any other case, that his belief in regard to the former case might make a little difference because it would show a difference in the character of the person, but that if the court instructed that the people must prove every element of the crime charged, beyond a reasonable doubt, to wit, that he made the assault, that he made it with a deadly weapon, and with intent to commit murder, before the defendant was required to prove anything, he could and would obey those instructions.

---

"Actual bias" is defined in section 1073 of the Penal Code as "a state of mind on the part of the juror in reference to the case, or to either of the parties, which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party." Such bias may consist of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, based upon some knowledge or information of the facts embraced in the charge or of the evidence to be produced, or it may exist without such knowledge or information, and may consist of a preconceived opinion concerning the defendant or the prosecuting witness which would prevent a fair consideration by the juror of the evidence given or facts proven in the case. Upon the examination of a juror on his voir dire, the question whether or not he has actual bias is one of fact, to be determined by the trial court upon the evidence before it. If the evidence is conflicting upon that question, as where the juror gives contradictory answers, the decision of the trial court thereon, as in any other case of conflicting evidence, is conclusive upon the appellate courts. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 229, 34 Pac. 718; People v. Ryan, 152 Cal. 371, 92 Pac. 853; People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 559, 39 Pac. 944; People v. Scott, 123 Cal. 435, 56 Pac. 102; People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 487, 56 Pac. 251; People v. Evans, 124 Cal. 210, 56 Pac. 1024; People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 86, 60 Pac. 670.

But the inquiry as to the ability of the juror to lay aside an opinion which he has, amounting to actual bias, and to act impartially and fairly in the matter, is pertinent and material, under section 1076 of the Penal Code, only where it is an opinion upon the matter to be submitted to him and is based solely upon public rumor, common notoriety, or statements in public journals. If the actual bias is of any other character, no further inquiry is authorized by law. To bring the juror within the exception of the section, the concurrence of the two conditions is necessary: First, the opinion must be upon the merits of the case, "the matter or cause to be submitted"; second, it must be founded exclusively upon one or more of the sources of information above stated. The effect of the absence of the second of these conditions has been repeatedly decided, as the following cases show:

In People v. Wells, supra, a juror had an opinion on the merits of the case, and it was founded upon what he had been told by those who seemed to know the facts they had related to him; but he stated that, notwithstanding that opinion, he could and would act fairly and impartially in the case. The court held that he was incompetent, saying: "At common law a juror who entered the box with an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused was ipso facto disqualified from acting in the case, but section 1076 of the Penal Code of this state creates an innovation upon this principle and declares an exception to the common-law rule. But in order that a juror disqualified at common law, by reason of having previously formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, may come within the provisions of the statute, it must appear affirmatively to the court from the evidence before it that such opinion is formed from public rumors, or statements of public journals, or common notoriety; and it must further appear to the court by the juror's declarations under oath that, notwithstanding such opinion, he can and will act fairly and impartially upon the matter to be submitted to him." But the court proceeded to declare that, where the opinion is founded upon statements, from other sources than those above named, "that fact of itself is a disqualification under the law, and it is a disqualification even though the juror should declare to the court under oath that, notwithstanding such opinion, he would and could act fairly and impartially upon the matter to be submitted to him." In People v. Miller, 125 Cal. 46, 57 Pac. 771, the court says: "The juror went into the box with an opinion that the defendant was guilty. Such condition of the juror's mind was an absolute disqualification at common law. Under the Penal Code of this state a single exception is declared in section 1076. This juror was clearly disqualified, unless he came within the provisions of the aforesaid section." This was said in view of the further fact that the juror had declared that he could and would act fairly and impartially and obey the instructions of the court. In People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 536, 93 Pac. 101, the court in discussing this subject says: "If it is not made to appear that the juror's opinion is based entirely upon one or all of the three sources of information above named, if it is shown that his belief has its origin in any other source than one of the three enumerated, he is at once as thoroughly disqualified under our Code as he would have been at common law."

The principle established by these decisions is that the juror's ability to disregard actual bias, shown to exist in his mind, is wholly immaterial, save in a case which comes within the exception specified in section 1076. The concurrence of both conditions being necessary to the exception, the failure to bring the juror within it is as clear where the opinion constituting the bias or prejudice is not an opinion on the matter or cause to be submitted, as where, although it is upon that matter or cause, it is not based solely upon one or more of the sources of information named in the excepting clause. If both conditions are not met, the juror is disqualified, and no declaration by the juror that he can lay aside the prejudice and act fairly and impartially will remove the disqualification. Lombardi v. Railway Co., 124 Cal. 316, 57 Pac. 66; Naylor v. Railway Co., 66 Kan. 407, 71 Pac. 835; Coughlin v. People, 144 Ill. 165, 176, 33 N. E. 1, 19 L. R. A. 57.

In the case of the juror Simpson, at least, if not of the others, actual bias was shown to exist, and it consisted of a prejudice against the defendant, growing out of a belief that he was guilty of a murder, of which he had been duly acquitted by a jury. His answers were not contradictory upon this point. It amounted to this: That upon the trial of the case in hand he would take into consideration the fact that the defendant was, as he believed, guilty of a previous murder and would give that fact some weight against the defendant in determining his guilt or innocence, although the fact was not in evidence and could not be inquired into at all. The fact that he proposed to consider a belief formed wholly upon newspaper accounts, without any knowledge of the facts of that case, a belief persisted in, notwithstanding an acquittal by a jury after hearing all the evidence from the lips of the witnesses, shows a considerable degree of prejudice, and the fact that he was still willing to say, in all sincerity, that he could and would lay aside this prejudice and act fairly and impartially in the case, shows the wisdom of the common-law rule that, where bias appears, the juror's opinion of his own fairness will not be considered. One of the striking instances of the frailty of human nature is the fact that a prejudiced person usually believes himself fair-minded and impartial. The guilt of the defendant of the murder of Dean in 1905 was no part of the matter to be submitted upon the charge of assault with intent to murder Kreiss in 1908. Upon the trial of the latter charge no evidence in regard to the former charge could be allowed. The prejudice clearly arose from facts extraneous to the case, and it was not upon the matter to be submitted. The challenge should have been allowed.

The defendant exhausted all his peremptory challenges, and by reason of the refusal of these challenges he was forced to accept McKeen upon the jury. He asked the privilege of challenging McKeen peremptorily, and was denied. Error in denying any one of those challenges would therefore be substantially injurious to the defendant. Consequently, even if it be admitted that the answers of the jurors McKeen and Bargroth, as to the existence of actual bias on their part, were merely conflicting, and that the decision of the trial court with regard to the challenge to them is conclusive, the denial of the challenge to the juror Simpson would require a reversal of the judgment. The right to a fair and impartial jury is one of the most sacred and important of the guaranties of the Constitution. Where it has been infringed, no inquiry as to the sufficiency of the evidence to show guilt is indulged, and a conviction by a jury so selected must be set aside.

There are no other assignments of error that demand elaborate discussion. The testimony of Barton that, a few hours after the alleged assault, defendant had called Kreiss vile names and cautioned Barton, as a friend, to have nothing more to do with him, although not in the presence of Kreiss, was admissible as evidence tending to show malice. People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 158, 65 Pac. 295. The testimony that defendant was carrying a pistol in his overcoat pocket while attending a performance at a theater in the evening of the day of the alleged assault, and several hours afterward, was irrelevant and should have been excluded. The prosecution had proved that this was not the pistol with which the alleged assault was committed, and his possession of another pistol afterward was not shown to have any connection with or relation to the offense charged, and it may have prejudiced defendant in the minds of the jurors. The evidence of a statement by the defendant, about a week before the difficulty, that before he went to jail "somebody would go to the morgue," was admitted on the theory that the "somebody" referred to was Kreiss, the assaulted party. Some circumstances were proven tending in a slight degree to indicate that Kreiss was the person to whom he intended to refer. We cannot say that the evidence was irrelevant. But the court might well have directed the jury that they should disregard it unless they found from the evidence that he did refer to Kreiss.

The judgment and order are reversed.

(159 Cal. 65)

PEOPLE v. BANK OF SAN LUIS OBISPO et al. (L. A. 2,384.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1910. Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 578*)—RES JUDICATA—EFFECT OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, declaring that an action is deemed pending from its commencement until final determination on appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, where a judgment has been affirmed on appeal and has thus become final, or where the time for appeal has expired, the judgment may be pleaded or given in evidence as res judicata or an estoppel, though a motion for new trial is pending, which, if successful, will overthrow the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1022; Dec. Dig. § 578.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 12*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—EFFECT.

A motion for new trial does not stay or suspend the operation of a final judgment, in the absence of an order of the court to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 276*)—REPEALING ACTS—EFFECT ON PENDING ACTIONS.

The court on appeal from a judgment cannot proceed where the statute which alone supports the judgment given has been repealed, since the court can pronounce judgment only under the authority of an existing law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 371–373; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 276*) — REPEALING ACTS — PENDING ACTIONS.

The decision on appeal from an order denying a new trial, where no stay has been granted, and where the judgment has become a finality, is not on the judgment, but on the order, appealed from, and the repeal of the statute supporting the judgment, pending the appeal from the order denying a new trial, does not destroy the right to be heard on the motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 460*)—APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—EFFECT.

An appeal from an order denying a new trial is a separate and independent appeal, which, if prosecuted in time, may be taken after the judgment has become final, and, except when ordered by supersedeas or permitted by stay bond, an appeal does not suspend the judgment or interfere with its finality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

6. NEW TRIAL (§ 12*)—MOTION—NATURE.

A motion for new trial under the Code differs from the common-law motion, which was always heard and determined before the entry of judgment, so that an appeal from the judgment embraced all questions; but it is in the nature of an equitable bill of review which, while countenanced in proper cases, even after affirmance of judgment on appeal, never operates in itself to suspend the decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

7. STATUTES (§ 276*)—REPEAL—EFFECT ON ACTIONS.

The repeal of the banking act of 1903 (St. 1903, c. 266), authorizing an equitable action by the people by the Attorney General to obtain a decree adjudging a bank insolvent and ordering it into liquidation, leaving the proceedings governing the action those which generally obtain in the practice of the state, does not destroy the right of a bank to a hearing on appeal from an order denying a new trial after adverse judgment, which prior to the repeal became final by affirmance on appeal; the repeal taking place pending decision on the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

8. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 76*)—INSOLVENCY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that a bank was insolvent within the banking act of 1903 (St. 1903, c. 266), authorizing the people on the relation of the Attorney General to proceed in equity to have a bank declared insolvent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by the People, by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, against the Bank of San Luis Obispo and others. From an order denying a new trial after judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed, and motion to vacate the judgment and dismiss the proceedings denied.

James L. Crittenden, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and R. C. Van Fleet, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Under the banking act of 1903 (St. 1903, c. 266), action was begun in the name of the people of the state of California by the Attorney General, as contemplated by the provisions of the act, for a decree declaring the defendant, Bank of San Luis Obispo, insolvent, ordering it into involuntary liquidation, and restraining it from the transaction of a banking business. This action proceeded to judgment in accordance with the complaint of the people, and a receiver was appointed by the court to administer its affairs in liquidation. On appeal to this court the judgment of the trial court was in all respects affirmed (People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 154 Cal. 194, 97 Pac. 306), and this judgment became final in September, 1908. On June 19, 1908, the trial court denied the defendant bank's motion for a new trial, and from this order an appeal was taken to this court. Pending the decision on this appeal from the trial court's order refusing to grant the motion for a new trial, the banking act of 1903 (St. 1903, c. 266), under the authority of which this action was prosecuted and these proceedings had, was repealed by the banking act of 1909 (St. 1909, c. 76), which latter act made no provision for continuing in force any pending proceedings or litigation under the repealed act.

The Bank of San Luis Obispo now moves this court to vacate and set aside the judgment given against it, and to direct the trial court to dismiss this action upon the ground that the repeal of the banking act of 1903 put an end to all litigation pending under it, and that within the meaning of the law the action of the people of the state of California against the Bank of San Luis Obispo was litigation pending and undetermined. The principle which appellant invokes has thus been stated: "When a cause of action is founded on a statute, a repeal of the statute before final judgment destroys the right, and a judgment is not final in this sense so long as the right of exception thereto remains." 1 Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) p. 285. And, says Cyc. (volume 36, § 1228): "As a general rule, the repeal of a statute without any reservation takes away all remedies given by the repealed statute and defeats all actions pending under it at the time of its repeal. The rule is especially applicable to the repeal of statutes creating a cause of action and providing a remedy not known to the common law, or conferring jurisdiction where it did not exist before, and is carried to such extent as to abate proceedings pending upon appeal after verdict in favor of plaintiff. A suit, the continuance of which is dependent upon the statute repealed, stops where the repeal finds it." But a consideration of the leading adjudications becomes necessary to determine the precise meaning of the language thus employed—how broad may be its scope and to what extent the principle is carried.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In Surtees v. Ellison, 9 Barn. & Cress. 752, the question was whether the evidence of trading which was sufficient to have supported the judgment of bankruptcy under the act of 5th George II would support a commission in bankruptcy issued if all previous statutes had been repealed, and the controlling statute was that of 6th George IV. The Court of King's Bench held that the acts must be those contemplated by the existing statute; in this connection Lord Tenterden saying: "It has been long established that, when an act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered, except as to transactions past and closed, as if it had never existed." And to the same effect is Key v. Goodwin, 5 Moore & Payne, 341, where, the question being similar, Lord Chief Justice Tindal declared: "I take the effect of repealing a statute to be to obliterate it as completely from the records of Parliament as if it had never passed, and that it must be considered as a law that never existed, except for the purpose of those actions or suits which were commenced, prosecuted, and concluded whilst it was an existing law." Rex v. Justices of London, 3 Burrow, 1456, was an application for mandamus to require the justices to proceed in a matter pending before them after the act regulating the proceeding had been repealed. The matter was regularly before them for consideration and had by them been adjourned without decision until a day after the repealing act took effect, whereupon they refused further to proceed. The court found the case to be one of great inconvenience and great hardship. "The Legislature had the whole affair under their consideration, and they have not thought fit to reserve any jurisdiction to the justices after the 19th of November, 1761. Therefore Lord Mansfield was very clear, and all the rest of the court concurred with him, that no jurisdiction now remains in the sessions."

In United States v. Schooner Peggy, 5 U. S. 103, 2 L. Ed. 49, the schooner Peggy was seized as a prize, and by decree of the Circuit Court condemned and forfeited. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. While the appeal was pending, a treaty was entered into between the United States and France, whereby property not definitely condemned was to be restored to the original owner. Chief Justice Marshall held that the pending appeal forbade the conclusion that the property had been definitely condemned since the judgment of condemnation had been appealed from and was undecided at the time when the treaty took effect; that, therefore, in contemplation of the treaty, the property was not definitely condemned and should be restored, the Chief Justice saying: "It is, in general, true that the province of an appellate court is only to inquire whether a judgment, when rendered, was erroneous or not; but if, subsequent to the judgment and before the decision of the appellate court, a law intervenes and positively changes the rule which governs, the law must be obeyed or its obligation denied. * * * In such a case the court must decide according to existing laws, and if it be necessary to set aside a judgment rightful when rendered, but which cannot be affirmed but in violation of law, the judgment must be set aside." In The Schooner General Pinkney v. United States, 9 U. S. 281, 3 L. Ed. 101, the schooner and its cargo had been condemned for violation of an act prohibiting intercourse with certain designated ports on the Island of St. Domingo. Judgment of condemnation was pronounced by the District Court. This condemnation was affirmed upon appeal by the Circuit Court, and from this judgment, in turn, an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. While this appeal was pending, the time limit of the law under which the proceedings were taken expired and the law's existence ceased. Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the court, declared that in admiralty cases an appeal suspends the sentence altogether, and that the judgment is not res adjudicata until the final sentence of the appellate court be pronounced, and that the cause in the appellate court is to be heard de novo as if no sentence had ever been passed, and, "if no sentence had been pronounced, it has long been settled, on general principles, that after the expiration or repeal of the law no penalty can be enforced nor punishment inflicted for violations of the law committed while it was in force, unless some special provision be made for that purpose by statute." The Schooner Rachel v. United States, 10 U. S. 329, 3 L. Ed. 239, was decided upon the principle governing The Schooner General Pinkney v. United States, supra. Under the sentence of condemnation the schooner Rachel had been sold and the proceeds of the sale paid over to the United States while the act was in force. The Supreme Court made a general order for restitution of the property condemned, leaving it to the District Court to say whether that order for restitution would be complied with by order for the payment over of the proceeds of the sale as prayed for by claimants. In Maryland v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 3 How. 534, 11 L. Ed. 714, Chief Justice Taney, in a brief sentence, expounds the reason for the rule as follows: "The repeal of the law imposing a penalty is itself a remission." In Railroad Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 25 L. Ed. 231, Chief Justice Waite declares: "It is equally well settled that if a law conferring jurisdiction is repealed, without any reservation as to pending cases, all such cases fall with the law." But this language was employed under the following state of facts: An act conferring jurisdiction in certain cases upon the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had been repealed. At the time the repeal became operative, the case was pending before the Supreme Court under a writ of error. The court declared that the single question was "whether there is any law now in force which gives us authority to re-examine, reverse, or affirm the judgment in this case," and held that the repeal of the law conferring jurisdiction deprived the court of jurisdiction. And to the argument that the appellants were deprived of a remedy secured to them by the earlier law, and of which they had availed themselves before the repeal of that law, it was answered: "But a party to a suit has no vested right to a writ of error from one court to another. Such a privilege once granted may be taken away, and, if taken away, pending proceedings in the appellate court stop just where the rescinding act finds them, unless special provision is made to the contrary." Of like import is Insurance Co. v. Ritchie, 72 U. S. 541, 18 L. Ed. 540, where Chief Justice Chase delivered the opinion of the court. The Chief Justice there says: "It is clear that, when the jurisdiction of a cause depends upon the statute, the repeal of the statute takes away the jurisdiction." But this was addressed to an action brought when the parties were citizens of the same state, under the act of 1833, countenancing such actions. It had been repealed before judgment pronounced, and it was held that the action must fall. In Ex parte McCardle, 74 U. S. 506, 19 L. Ed. 264, the same principle is announced by the Chief Justice. That case also was one where, when the court came to consider an appeal properly taken, it was confronted with the fact that after the appeal had been taken, the law authorizing it had been repealed. Chief Justice Chase, again delivering the opinion of the court dismissing the appeal, says: "What, then, is the effect of the repealing act upon the case before us? We cannot doubt as to this. Without jurisdiction the court cannot proceed at all in any cause. Jurisdiction is power to declare the law, and when it ceases to exist the only function remaining to the court is that of announcing the fact and dismissing the cause. And this is no less clear upon authority than upon principle. * * * The general rule, supported by the best elementary writers, is that, 'when an act of the Legislature is repealed, it must be considered, except as to transactions past and closed, as if it never existed.' And the effect of repealing acts upon suits under acts repealed has been determined by the adjudications of this court. The subject was fully considered in Norris v. Crocker, and more recently in Insurance Co. v. Ritchie. In both of these cases it was held that no judgment could be rendered in a suit after the repeal of the act under which it was brought and prosecuted. * * * Judicial duty is not less fitly performed by declining ungranted jurisdiction than in exercising firmly that which the Constitution and the laws confer." Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429, 14 L. Ed. 210, was an action brought under the "Fugitive Slave Act," to recover from defendant a penalty prescribed by that act against one who aided a slave to escape. While the action was pending, and before it had passed to judgment, the provision of the act fixing the penalty was repealed. Addressing itself to this state of facts, the Supreme Court says: "As the plaintiff's right to recover depended entirely on the statute, its repeal deprived the court of jurisdiction over the subject-matter. And, in the next place, as the plaintiff had no vested right in the penalty, the Legislature might discharge the defendant by repealing the law." To like effect, in Assessor v. Osbornes, 76 U. S. 567, 19 L. Ed. 748, where, upon the authority of Insurance Co. v. Ritchie, supra, it is declared that, where jurisdiction depends wholly on a statute, suits brought during the existence of the statute fall with its repeal. United States v. Tynen, 78 U. S. 88, 20 L. Ed. 153, was a criminal case. Tynen was indicted under the act of 1813. The judges of the Circuit Court divided upon the question of the sufficiency of the indictment. They certified the case to the Supreme Court. While it was there pending, Congress repealed the act of 1813, and it was held that the prosecution of Tynen fell with the repeal. In Re Hall, 167 U. S. 38, 17 Sup. Ct. 723, 42 L. Ed. 69, a judgment given in the Court of Claims was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States because interest on the original claim had been improperly allowed. The case was remanded to the Court of Claims for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of the Supreme Court. The mandate of the Supreme Court was filed in the Court of Claims, an application was made for judgment in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court, and pending the decision upon this application the act of Congress authorizing the original judgment was repealed, and the Court of Claims declined to enter the judgment as prayed for. The plaintiff thereupon made an application to the Supreme Court for mandamus to require the Court of Claims to enter the judgment. It was held that the effect of the repealing act was to take away the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to proceed further in any case founded upon the repealed act. But the Supreme Court distinctly held that its decision was not to be construed as an intimation that the Court of Claims would not have jurisdiction to entertain and grant a motion on the part of the petitioner to reinstate the original judgment without interest. In Flanigan v. Sierra County, 196 U. S. 553, 25 Sup. Ct. 314, 49 L. Ed. 597, the question arose as to the effect of a repeal of an ordinance construed as a revenue ordinance upon proceedings begun before the repeal and pending after it. The action had been commenced in the superior court of the county of Sierra, state of California, by Sierra county, had been removed to the United States Circuit Court, where judgment was given against Flanigan, which judgment was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals. He then obtained from the Supreme Court of the United States certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The suit was brought on the 21st of June, 1900. On March 23, 1901, the ordinance was repealed. The action was at that time pending and undetermined, and the familiar principle is declared "that no proceedings can be pursued under the repeal of the statute, though begun before the repeal, unless such proceedings be authorized under a special clause in the repealing act. 9 Bacon's Abridgment, 225."

Taking up, in turn, the views embodied in the leading decisions of sister states: In Commonwealth v. Duane, 1 Bin. (Pa.) 601, 2 Am. Dec. 497, the defendant was convicted under an indictment for libel against the Governor of the state. He moved in arrest of judgment. While his motion in arrest of judgment was pending, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act "that from and after the passing of this act, no person shall be subject to prosecution by indictment" for libel as at common law. It was held that the judgment should be arrested, since it had not been pronounced, and that the court cannot "pronounce judgment and inflict punishment when the law declares that the defendant shall not be subject to prosecution." In Balch v. City of Detroit, 109 Mich. 253, 67 N. W. 122, under an existing statute, the city of Detroit had proceeded to condemn land for street purposes, trial was had as to the value of the property sought to be condemned, a verdict and award of the jury given, and judgment entered, from which neither party took appeal. The act under which these proceedings were taken was then repealed, and substituted therefor was another act containing no saving clause as to pending litigation, but providing specifically that all proceedings to take private property on the part of the city of Detroit should be held and prosecuted under the provisions of the later act. The city of Detroit refusing to pay the award, mandamus was sought to compel it to do so. It defended upon the ground that the repeal of the previous act forbade it from levying an assessment and collecting the amount of the award. But it was held that as the proceedings in confirmation had gone to judgment, and that the judgment had become final, the petitioners had the right to insist that the judgment should stand and to enforce payment of the amount awarded them under it. In Speckert v. City of Louisville, 78 Ky. 288, a fine was imposed upon the appellants for violating the provisions of a penal ordinance forbidding the sale of liquor on Sunday or after half past 11 o'clock at night. The appellants "suspended the judgments in the various actions against them" by appeal. During the pendency of the appeal, the ordinance imposing the penalty was repealed. Before the appellate court this fact was made known, and it was argued that there was no law in existence under which the judgments could be enforced. It is to be noted that the appeal herein and of itself had the effect of suspending the judgments. It is said: "The right of the Legislature to repeal such laws cannot be questioned, and the mere fact that a party may be entitled to the benefits resulting from the prosecution of a penal action gives him no vested right to prosecute the action to a recovery, nor does the fact that a judgment has been rendered below vest him with such a right as cannot be divested by legislative action had before execution." Sedgwick on Statutory Law is quoted, and Cooley's Const. Limitations (4th Ed. 477), to the effect that, "if a case is appealed and pending the appeal the law is changed, the appellate court must dispose of the case under the law in force when their decision is rendered."

In Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324, the statute gave a judgment creditor a year from the date of the sale under the mortgage in which to redeem. A subsequent statute, after sale and while the time for redemption was running, shortened the time. After the passage of this act the redemption was attempted within the time limited by the earlier statute, but after the time prescribed by the later act. It was held that the later statute, though operating to shorten the time for the exercise of the previously existing right of redemption, was not unconstitutional; that rights specifically conferred by a statute are lost by its repeal unless saved by express words in the repealing statute; that, where the statute conferred jurisdiction, its repeal takes away all right of proceeding under the repealed statute, even in regard to suits pending at the time of the repeal, which pending proceedings rest for their support upon the jurisdiction conferred by the repealed statute; but that it is otherwise in respect to such civil rights as have been perfected far enough to stand independent of the statute, or, in other words, such as have ceased to become executory and have become executed. In Denver & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Crawford, 11 Colo. 598, 19 Pac. 673, after judgment obtained, but while the judgment was upon appeal, the statute prescribing a penalty against a railroad company for failure to file with the county clerk notice of the station at which a book should be kept for entering a description of animals killed was repealed, it was held that the repeal put an end to the proceeding, that the appellee could have "no such thing as a vested interest in an unenforced penalty." It is pointed out that the judgment for the penalty does not enforce the penalty, but the penalty must be enforced by the execution of the judgment, and that the power to enforce it had been suspended by the appeal. In Church v. Rhodes et al., 6 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 281, under the law as it existed, a report of referees could be reviewed by rehearing. The provision for a rehearing was repealed, and it was held that the repeal applied to pending and inchoate proceedings; that is to say, to actions commenced before the passage of the repealing act, and in progress for rehearing at the time of the passage, and that the effect was to take away the right to a rehearing. In Vance v. Rankin, 194 Ill. 625, 62 N. E. 807, 88 Am. St. Rep. 173, the law required the trustees of a village to pass an ordinance disconnecting certain designated territory. Mandamus was sued out to compel the trustees so to do, and judgment as prayed for awarded. The trustees appealed from the judgment. While the appeal was pending, the Legislature amended the law so as to make it discretionary with the trustees, rather than compulsory upon them, so to do. It was held that the new statute controlled, and that by reason of the change in the law it would be improper to enforce mandate where the existing law did not countenance it. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Smith, 96 Ga. 569, 23 S. E. 899, plaintiff had obtained a verdict and judgment against the defendant under an act imposing penalties upon telegraph companies. Within the time allowed by law, defendant filed its motion for a new trial. The motion was overruled, and a bill of exceptions assigning error in the overruling of the motion for a new trial was sued out by the defendant. While the cause was in this condition, the penal statute was repealed. Says the Supreme Court of Georgia: "At the time the repealing act was passed, the plaintiff was not entitled to the enforcement of his judgment, and the case must be dealt with as one which was pending when the repeal took place." And then the court declares the established rule that when such a statute is repealed it ends all pending litigation under it.

In this state it is provided by Code that any statute may be repealed at any time except when it is otherwise provided therein, and persons acting under any statute are deemed to have acted in contemplation of this power of repeal. Section 327, Pol. Code. It is further provided that: "The repeal of any law creating a criminal offense does not constitute a bar to the indictment or information and punishment of an act already committed in violation of the law so repealed, unless the intention to bar such indictment or information and punishment is expressly declared in the repealing act." Pol. Code, § 329. In Thorn v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127, the language of Lord Tenterden to the effect that, "when an act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered the same as if it had never existed," is quoted, with the comment that "no one will question the right of Parliament or the Legislature to repeal statutes where subsisting rights are not disturbed or the obligation of contracts impaired." In McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122, appeal from a judgment in an action of forcible detention and detainer had been taken. When the case came to be heard on appeal, a motion was made to dismiss upon the ground that the statute under which the action was brought had been repealed. The principle is recognized that the repeal of a statute under which alone a right of action exist operates as an extinguishment of all actions pending when the repeal takes effect, but it was held, for reasons stated, that the statute had not been repealed. In Lamb v. Schottler, 54 Cal. 319, proceedings were taken under an act which contemplated the creation of a board of water commissioners for the purpose of acquiring by condemnation the Spring Valley Waterworks of San Francisco. The supervisors and the board of water commissioners had taken certain steps under the act when the act was repealed. It was declared by this court that the repeal of the statute effectually annulled all proceedings had under it, unless the obligation of a contract would thereby be impaired, or a vested right destroyed, and that by reason of the repeal it was impossible for the supervisors and the water commissioners to proceed further. In Spears v. County of Modoc, 101 Cal. 303, 35 Pac. 869, a fine had been imposed for violation of a municipal ordinance. Pending an appeal from the judgment, the municipal ordinance was repealed. It was held that such repeal operated as a remission of the penalty for the offense and the fine imposed for its violation, and that, notwithstanding a mistaken affirmance of the judgment by the superior court after the repeal of the ordinance, the enforcement of such a mistaken judgment would be restrained by injunction. It is said in this case: "By the appeal to the superior court the enforcement of the judgment appealed from was stayed until after the determination of the appeal. Pen. Code, § 1470. As no undertaking on appeal was required, the appeal operated as a supersedeas. McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 75. The effect of the appeal was therefore to preserve the rights of the parties in the same condition as they were prior to the entry of the judgment (Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304 [33 Pac. 123]); and until the determination of the appeal the proceeding was a pending action in which the rights of neither party had been conclusively determined." In First Nat. Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Henderson, 101 Cal. 307, 35 Pac. 899, an action by the bank against the defendant upon an account stated, judgment was given in favor of the bank. One of the defenses was the failure of the bank to comply with the provisions of the act of April 1, 1876, requiring the bank to file with the county recorder or to publish the statements required by the act. The defense was established at the trial. Pending the appeal the Legislature repealed this statute without a saving clause. It was by this court held that, while ordinarily it is the province of an appellate court to review the judgment of an inferior court as of the time when it was rendered, since ordinarily the judgment of a trial court is a determination of the rights of the parties as they existed at the commencement of the action, the rule was subject to exception, and such an exception was presented in this case, and that the modification of the rule is that if a case is appealed, and pending the appeal the law is changed, the appellate court must dispose of the case under the law in force when its decision is rendered. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 469. It was held that the statute requiring banks to file or publish their statements, under the penalty that a bank so failing could not maintain or prosecute any action, was in its nature penal; that when the Legislature had remitted the penalty by repeal of the statute the appellant was no longer able to avail himself of the privilege and defense which it conferred upon him. In Anderson v. Byrnes, 122 Cal. 272, 54 Pac. 821, an act authorizing a stockholder of a domestic mining corporation to recover from its directors a penalty for failure to comply with the provisions of the act was repealed while an appeal was pending in this court from a judgment given under the act. It was held that the repeal absolutely prevented any further prosecution of the litigation, and that, as no person has a vested right in an unenforced penalty, the proceedings must cease. In Napa State Hospital v. Flaherty, 134 Cal. 315, 66 Pac. 322, the action was brought by the State Hospital to secure from defendant provision for the support of his son—an inmate of the asylum. The law countenancing this action had been repealed, and it was by this court held that, if the remedy for a right accorded solely by statute is repealed while the right is still inchoate and not reduced to possession or judgment, the right is thereby lost if the repealing statute contains no saving clause. In Ball v. Tolman, 135 Cal. 377, 67 Pac. 339, 87 Am. St. Rep. 110, the action was to recover a penalty under the provisions of an act for the better protection of stockholders. Judgment for plaintiff was entered in the trial court on January 9, 1897. Pending a motion for a new trial, the penal provisions of the act were repealed. The motion for a new trial was denied, and defendant then appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This court affirmed the judgment and order. Ball v. Tolman, 119 Cal. 358, 51 Pac. 546. The remittitur issued on January 18, 1908. Neither this court nor counsel at the time of the affirmance in this court had actual knowledge of the existence of the repealing statute. Upon subsequent appeal to this court the judgment was vacated and annulled; this court holding: "By reason of the repeal, it was without jurisdiction to proceed, and that, in all cases where a court is rendered incompetent to proceed, its proceedings during such incompetency are as invalid as though it had never possessed jurisdiction." In City of Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674, plaintiff had recovered a judgment in a civil action under one of its ordinances prescribing a license fee to be paid by every attorney at law. By general statute the power to pass such an ordinance was taken away from municipalities. It was held: "The right given the plaintiff in this case being penal in its nature and the remedy created solely by statute, its enforcement is dependent upon the statute alone. It is still inchoate and not reduced to possession nor perfected by final judgment. In such case the repeal of the statute destroys the remedy, unless the repealing statute contains a saving clause."

These cases have been cited as fairly typifying the extremes of judicial determination, and as expressing the reasons upon which their rules of decision are based. In the case of penalties and crimes, the repeal operates to defeat all actions pending. In case of a statute conferring civil rights or powers, the repeal operates to deprive the citizen of all such rights or powers which are at the time of the repeal inchoate, incomplete, and unexercised. In the case of statutes conferring jurisdiction, the repeal operates by causing all pending proceedings to cease and terminate at the time and in the condition which existed when the repeal became operative. In cases of judgment pending upon appeal, the rule of decision is that the proceedings abate and the judgment falls. But the general expressions to this effect employed in the decisions are to be read in each case in the light of the facts which are there disclosed. Here the wise admonition of Chief Justice Marshall in Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 399, 5 L. Ed. 257, applies with peculiar force: "It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit, when the very point is presented for decision. The reason of this maxim is obvious. The question before the court is investigated with care and considered in its full extent, and other principles which may serve to illustrate it are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing on all other cases is seldom completely investigated." In every case where, after judgment, the proceeding has been declared to be "pending," there will be found a direct appeal from the judgment, which direct appeal either suspended the judgment so that it was not final and enforceable, or, as in The Schooner General Pinkney v. The United States, 9 U. S. 281, 3 L. Ed. 101, worked a removal of the cause to the appellate court, where it was to be tried de novo. The reason given why the proceeding must abate under these circumstances is that, because of the suspension of the judgment by appeal, it is without finality; that to give it finality the Court of Appeals must itself pronounce its judgment; and that in pronouncing its judgment it must be governed by the existing law. Therefore, when it finds that by the existing law the previous law, under which alone validity could be given to the judgment, has been repealed, the sole prop and foundation for support of the judgment has been removed, and of necessity it must be declared null and void. No case, however, has been found, and we venture to say none can be found, where a judgment which has been affirmed after direct appeal, and has by such affirmance become final during the existence of the statute supporting it, where the judgment itself has been in the process of execution within the law, and where rights have arisen by virtue of this legal execution of the judgment, has ever been held to be destroyed by a repeal of the statute supporting it because the collateral proceeding of an appeal from an order denying a new trial is pending without supersedeas or stay bond. And to this consideration we now come.

Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Smith, 96 Ga. 569, 23 S. E. 899, would seem, at first glance, to be in opposition to the declaration just made. There a judgment under a statute imposing a penalty had been recovered. The defendant had moved for a new trial and had secured its bill of exceptions, assigning error in the overruling of its motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court of Georgia held that the situation disclosed was one which brought the case within the accepted rule that the effect of the repeal is to abate actions for the statutory penalty then pending. But this is based, not alone upon the proposition that the repeal of a statute exacting a penalty is a remission of the penalty unless at the time the appeal operates the penalty has actually been enforced, but still further the court points out that at the time of the repeal the judgment was in suspension and could not have been enforced. Here, not only had the judgment itself been affirmed upon direct appeal, but it was not stayed in law or in fact by virtue of the pending proceedings under the motion for a new trial. The Code of Civil Procedure declares (section 1049) that "an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal is past, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied." In Gilmore v. American C. I. Co., 65 Cal. 63, 2 Pac. 882, it is said: "While proceedings are pending for the review of a judgment, either on appeal or motion for a new trial, the litigation on the merits of the case between the parties is not ended; and, until litigation on the merits is ended, there is no finality to the judgment, in the sense of a final determination of the rights of the parties, although it may have become final for the purpose of an appeal from it." This language is quite appropriate to the consideration then before the court. This court there did not have before it the question of the effect of a repeal of a statute upon a judgment which had become final by affirmance after direct appeal, but it was merely considering and interpreting a stipulation between parties, to the effect that judgment should be entered for plaintiff provided such judgment was given for plaintiff in another action between the parties, the same "to be entered when the judgment had become final." Its language was used solely with reference to the stipulation, holding that, within its terms, the judgment had not become final, by reason of the pendency of a motion for a new trial. In Sharon v. Hill (C. C.) 26 Fed. 337, 392, the case of Gilmore v. American C. I. Co. is quoted from and commented upon; the discussion in the federal case being addressed to the proposition whether a judgment in a state court could be pleaded as res adjudicata while an appeal was pending both from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial. Upon the authority of Gilmore v. American C. I. Co., it is intimated, though not necessary to the decision, that the pendency of a motion for a new trial would be sufficient to forbid the reception of the judgment in evidence by way of res adjudicata or estoppel. But, upon the other hand, it is now well settled that where a judgment has been affirmed upon appeal and has thus become final, or where the time for appeal has expired, the judgment may be pleaded as res adjudicata or in estoppel, notwithstanding the fact that proceedings upon a motion for a new trial are pending, which, if successful, would result in the overthrow of the judgment. In Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589, the matter is discussed, and the conclusions of the court may be summarized as follows: A motion for a new trial, in the absence of an order of the court to that effect, does not stay or suspend the operation of a final judgment. An action under section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to be deemed pending while an appeal from the judgment is pending, or until the time for such an appeal has expired, but when the judgment upon appeal has been determined by an affirmance of the judgment, or when the time for appeal has expired, the judgment is admissible in evidence as res adjudicata and to raise an estoppel in bar of the action. The same ruling as to the effect of a pending motion for a new trial upon the finality of a judgment is declared in Young v. Brehe, 19 Nev. 379, 12 Pac. 564, 3 Am. St. Rep. 892, and the soundness of the rule is intimated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hubbell v. United States, 171 U. S. 203, 18 Sup. Ct. 828, 43 L. Ed. 136, where it is said: "Indeed, it may well be doubted whether the pendency of a motion for a new trial would interfere in any way with the operation of the judgment as an estoppel."

In Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal. 284, it is said: "Under our system, from the entry of the verdict or filing of the findings of the court, the motion for new trial is a kind of episode, or, in a certain sense, a collateral proceeding—a proceeding not in the direct line of the judgment—for the judgment may be at once entered and even executed, while a motion for a new trial is pending in an independent line of proceeding, which ends in an order reviewable on an independent appeal. The motion may be heard and decided and an appeal taken on its own independent record, while the proceedings on and subsequent to the judgment may be still regularly going on, and even an independent appeal taken in that line." And this language is quoted with approval by this court in the later case of Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; while to the same effect is Houser & Haines Co. v. Hargrove, 129 Cal. 90, 61 Pac. 660, and Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 247, 65 Pac. 468. A broad difference exists between the operation and legal effect of a direct appeal from a judgment (which, while the appeal is pending, in the generality of cases operates to stay the judgment absolutely, and in all cases operates to destroy for it any claim of finality), and the "collateral proceeding" of an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial taken after the judgment itself has become an enforceable finality by reason of its affirmance upon direct appeal. In the former case the courts, when the law which alone will support the judgment given has been withdrawn, have felt and expressed themselves as unable to proceed further with the litigation, since they themselves must pronounce a judgment, and can pronounce it only under the authority of existing law. In the case of appeal from an order refusing a new trial where no stay has been granted and where, as here, the judgment has become a finality, the decision which the court renders is not upon the judgment appealed from, but upon the order appealed from, and while the effect of its reversal of the order will, of course, be necessarily the setting aside of the judgment, this, after all, is but an incident to the ruling which it makes, which ruling goes not at all to the sufficiency or finality of the judgment, but only as to whether, within familiar rules and limitations, the judgment was fairly given. Herein our motion for a new trial differs essentially from the common-law motion which was always heard and determined before entry of judgment, so that the appeal from the judgment embraced all questions. Under our system, the appeal from an order denying a new trial is a separate and independent appeal, which, if prosecuted in time, may be taken after the judgment has become final. Excepting when ordered by supersedeas or permitted by stay bond, it in no way suspends the judgment nor interferes with its finality. It is in this respect more in the nature of an equitable bill of review which, while countenanced in proper cases, even after a judgment of affirmance upon appeal, never operated in and of itself to suspend the decree. Indeed, it has been so expressly declared by this court in Fowden, Adm'r, v. Pac. Coast S. S. Co., 149 Cal. 151, 154, 86 Pac. 178.

We conclude, therefore, that, as the judgment had become final while the statute authorizing the action was in force, its finality is not disturbed by a pending motion for a new trial which does not operate in any way to stay the execution of the judgment; that as the statute authorizes the people upon the relation of the Attorney General to proceed in equity to have the bank declared insolvent, leaving the proceedings governing the action those which generally obtain in the practice of this state, the repeal of the statute did not destroy the right of the appellant to be heard upon this motion for a new trial; that, if the appeal from the motion for a new trial should be granted, it would necessarily have the effect of vacating the judgment; that by virtue of the repeal the action could then no longer be prosecuted; that if, however, the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial should be denied and the order affirmed, the repeal of the statute would not affect any proceeding taken under it and under the judgment heretofore affirmed.

2. To the consideration of the appeal from the order refusing appellant's motion for a new trial we now proceed. Many of the propositions advanced go to the alleged errors of the court in admitting evidence of the action and reports of the bank commissioners in the sequestration of the bank's property, and of their report that it was unsafe to permit the bank longer to continue business. They are based upon appellant's contention that, for specified reasons, the act itself is unconstitutional. The objections thus advanced have been completely answered in the opinion upon the appeal from the judgment and do not require further discussion. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 154 Cal. 194, 97 Pac. 306. See, also, State ex rel. Sparks v. State Bank & Trust Co., 31 Nev. 456, 103 Pac. 407. The evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the insolvency of the bank. That evidence disclosed that the assets of the bank amounted to $158,903.70; that the principal items of assets were inventoried as "bills receivable $133,332.56; profit and loss account of $5,022.69; and real estate and bank building at $19,000." The cash on hand was $367.35. The bills receivable consisted in large part of 15 notes signed by the San Luis Land & Improvement Company, a note of the Breeze Publishing Company for $4,000 and $645.75 accrued interest, a note of James L. Crittenden for $22,268.13 principal and $7,779.64 accrued interest, and sundry other notes. The notes of the San Luis Land & Improvement Company were secured by mortgages upon real estate, and there was conflicting evidence as to the value of that real estate. The officers of the Bank of San Luis Obispo likewise constituted the officers of the San Luis Land & Improvement Company. On the debit side of the statement there were certificates of deposit amounting to $54,433.49. Some of these, with accumulated interest, were due and others coming due. Thus, upon July 24, 1906, there was due $400 with accumulated interest upon a certificate of deposit of January 17, 1905, payable six months after date; also $473 upon a like certificate of July 18, 1905; $3,040, with accumulated interest upon like certificate of February 6, 1905; and $20,000 upon a certificate of September 27, 1902, due and payable 12 months after date. Manifestly, these overdue demands could not be met from cash on hand of $367.35, and it appears that the answer which the bank officials made to the inquiries of the bank commissioners was that Mr. Crittenden, the president, was in San Francisco endeavoring to borrow money to meet the demands against the bank. Without further elaboration of the evidence, it is apparent that it sustained the finding of the court as to the insolvency of the institution.

Wherefore the motion to vacate and annul the judgment and dismiss the proceedings is denied, and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

159 Cal. 89

BROWN v. SHARPHOUSER CONTRACTING CO. (L. A. 2,554.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1910.)

1. Master and Servant (§ 150*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence—Warning.

Where the foreman in charge of the work of excavating at the foot of a bank of earth 65 or 75 feet high knew that there was a large crack at the top of the bank, but plaintiff, a laborer working at the bottom of the bank, did not know of such crack, and received no warning thereof, the master was liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by the caving in of the bank owing to such crack.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 297, 299; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

2. Master and Servant (§§ 101, 102*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence.

It is the duty of an employer to furnish a reasonably safe place in which the employé may perform the work in which he is engaged and use ordinary care to keep the place reasonably safe so that the employé may not be exposed to danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 179; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

3. Master and Servant (§§ 101, 102*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence.

An employer is not an insurer of the safety of the employé, and no liability is cast upon him to indemnify an employé for injuries which are the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 172; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

4. Master and Servant (§ 217*)—Injuries to Servant—Assumption of Risk.

Where a person undertakes to work in a place where conditions of danger are liable to occur in the ordinary prosecution of the work, and where he has knowledge of such dangers, or his faculties for seeing or discovering them are just as good as those of his employer, and he undertakes the employment with the knowledge or opportunity for ascertaining those dangers, he is in law deemed to assume the perils incident to the employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 574–600; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

5. Master and Servant (§ 219*)—Injuries to Servant—Assumption of Risk.

The rule of assumption of risk has no application where the dangers are not obvious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 610–624; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

6. Master and Servant (§ 226*)—Injuries to Servant—Assumption of Risk.

A servant does not assume the risk of injury from perils which might have been discovered and removed by the employer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 659–667; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

7. Master and Servant (§ 124*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence—Cave-In.

Where a dangerous condition exists at the top of a bank of earth from blasting which would not be observed by the workmen at the base and which could only be discovered by inspection at the top, it is the duty of the employer to have proper inspection made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 235–242; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

8. Master and Servant (§ 90*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence.

The law does not permit an employer to take any chances as to the safety of his employés.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 139; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

9. Master and Servant (§ 118*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence—Cave-In.

In an action against an employer for negligence in permitting a cave-in of earth, it was gross negligence for the defendant to take the chance of the earth not caving in, when it could have been prevented by prying the mass down the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 209; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

10. Appeal and Error (§ 1064*)—Instructions—Harmless Error.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, which provides that the section shall be given to the jury upon proper occasions, an instruction that, if weaker or less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger or more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust, was not prejudicial to defendant, in an action of negligence caused by falling earth, where it was shown by defendant, on the matter of warning plaintiff and four others, that defendant had endeavored to obtain the presence of these four men as witnesses but could not find them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4219, 4221; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

11. Appeal and Error (§ 1066*)—Instructions—Harmless Error.

An instruction that it was the duty of the master to give warning to an inexperienced servant of unusual and hidden dangers of which the master is aware and of which the servant, to the master's knowledge, is ignorant, in an action against an employer for negligence in permitting a cave-in, in which there was no evidence that plaintiff was inexperienced, was not prejudicial where the evidence showed that it was the duty of the employer, whether the servant was experienced or inexperienced, to keep the place of employment in a safe condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

12. Master and Servant (§§ 90, 91*)—Injuries to Servant—Negligence—Cave-In.

The fact that a servant is experienced, or that an inexperienced servant has notice of perils ordinarily incident to the employment, does not relieve the master from the duty to protect both from risks which are not natural and ordinary incidents to the conduct of the business, and which could have been removed by the exercise of due diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 139, 141; Dec. Dig. §§ 90, 91.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Boh H. Brown against the Sharphouser Contracting Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. E. C. Munday, for appellant. Gavin W. Craig and C. H. Slease, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries, and from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, entered upon the verdict of the jury, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Under contract with the Santa Fé Railroad Company, the defendant was engaged in cutting down a hill along the railroad line near Orange in Los Angeles county. The work of removing the hill was done by blasting down the bank and using a steam shovel to load the loosened earth upon cars which conveyed it away. The steam shovel was propelled by a traction engine operating over a bed of ties laid along the base of the hill. When the earth loosened by one blast was removed, the steam shovel was moved back and another blast put in the hill to loosen the rock and earth, which being done, the traction engine was again moved forward, the dirt at the base of the hill cleared away, and the ground leveled so that additional ties might be laid ahead upon which to operate the engine and shovel, in removing the rock and earth loosened by the last blast. The plaintiff was, with others, employed by the defendant to level the earth and lay down the ties as occasion required ahead of the traction engine and shovel, such employés being known as "pitmen," and plaintiff had been in the employ of the defendant in such capacity some 10 days prior to the accident. He had never worked as a pitman, although he had done shovel work theretofore on the Santa Fé and other railroads.

On December 21, 1908, the bank of the hill had been blasted down, leaving a steep bank, nearly perpendicular, and from 65 to 75 feet high. In the morning, two days afterwards, plaintiff, with others, was engaged in their regular occupation of leveling the ground and laying the ties at the base of the hill for the operation of the steam shovel. While so engaged the assistant foreman of defendant took the general foreman to the top of the steep bank below which the plaintiff and the others were working in order that he might examine it. Before doing so, the assistant had himself gone up and inspected the top of the cut and had found cracks, from a foot to 18 inches wide in the bank, about 10 feet back from the face of the cut, and running parallel with the face of the bank and pretty deep down, but not noticeable from the bottom of the hill where the plaintiff and the others were working. The assistant foreman considered the conditions on top pretty bad, and did not deem the bank safe as against a cave, and so called the general foreman, Sullivan, to inspect it. The latter did so and said, "She looks pretty bad," but, "We will take a chance at her." He instructed the assistant to remain on top to watch the bank and warn the men below should a slide commence, while he went below to move the shovel through. The condition of the bank at the top of the cut was not noticeable from the bottom of the hill where plaintiff and the others were working; from that point the face of the cut seemed to be safe. The condition at the top was not known or observable to plaintiff, or, as far as the evidence discloses, to any one save the general foreman and the assistant foreman of defendant who inspected it. When the general foreman came down from the top, and reached the place where plaintiff and the other pitmen were working, he testified that he told them to be careful and look out for the bank. No warning of any particular danger was given them; they were not informed of the condition of the bank as he had discovered it. Plaintiff testified that the foreman gave them no warning whatever, but that as the latter came down from the top, and approached near where the men were working, plaintiff asked him if the bank was dangerous, to which he made no reply, but walked over to where a work train was stationed. Just about this time a vast body of rock and earth from near the top of the bank where the ground was crevassed was suddenly precipitated, a sheer fall of about 50 feet, upon the pitmen below, grievously and permanently injuring the plaintiff. It was in evidence further that in blasting banks crevassed conditions such as were found on the top of the hill would sometimes occur; that after a blast the usual and proper course before moving up the steam shovel was to examine the bank and see if it was safe to work under; that when there is any apparent danger of caving these conditions of danger are removed; men with bars are directed to loosen any dangerous mass of earth, either on the face or top of the hill, and cave them down the bank; sometimes small blasts are put in to effect the purpose.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Various grounds are urged for a reversal. It is first insisted that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict; the claim being that the injury sustained by the plaintiff from the fall of the mass of earth was one of the risks ordinarily incident to the business in which he was engaged, and which he assumed when he took the employment. This is the only point made in regard to the evidence.

The rule as to the assumption of risk by an employé has, however, no application under the evidence in this case. It is the duty of an employer to furnish a reasonably safe place in which the employé may perform the work in which he is engaged, and to use ordinary care to keep the place reasonably safe so that the employé may not be exposed to danger. It is true that the employer is not an insurer of the safety of the employé. The measure of his obligation is to use ordinary care in seeing that the place where the work is being done is safe in the first instance, and to employ the same degree of care in continuing to keep it safe. No liability is cast upon the employer to indemnify an employé for injuries which are the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed. Where a person undertakes to work in a place where conditions of danger are liable to occur in the ordinary prosecution of the work, where he has knowledge of such dangers, or his facilities for seeing or discovering them are just as good as those of his employer, and he undertakes the employment, or continues in the work with the knowledge or opportunity for ascertaining those dangers, he is in law deemed to assume the perils incident to the employment, and cannot look to the employer for indemnification for injuries resulting therefrom. But this rule of assumption of risk has no application where the dangers are not obvious, where they are known to the employer and not to the employé, or where, in the exercise of ordinary care, the conditions of peril might have been discovered and removed by the employer.

In the case under consideration, while in the ordinary transaction of the work a dangerous condition at the top of the slope might sometimes occur, after the face of the hill was blasted, this was not obvious to the men working at the base. No inspection or observance from that point could have disclosed it. It was not the duty of the plaintiff to go to the top of the hill and discover this condition. A dangerous condition being liable to arise there from the blasting, which would not be observable by the workmen at the base, and which could only be disclosed by inspection at the top of the hill, it was the duty of the defendant, in the exercise of ordinary care towards the safety of its employés, to have made such inspection. This duty was recognized by it, and, for the purpose of discharging it and determine whether the top of the hill was safe or not, its general and assistant foreman both made an inspection of it, and both discovered that its condition was such as to be an impending danger to the men below. The plain legal duty of the general foreman, as representing the defendant in the discharge of his duty to its employés, was to have removed the danger. This could have been readily accomplished by prying the mass down the bank with bars. Instead of doing this, the foreman concluded "to take a chance." The law does not permit an employer to take any chances as to the safety of his employés. As disclosed here, the defendant neglected to take the ordinary care which the law requires shall be exercised in providing a safe place for employés to work. It was gross negligence for defendant to take the chances, and, they having gone against it, the defendant was clearly liable to plaintiff for the result of the injuries suffered by him thereby.

There is nothing in Thompson v. California Const. Co., 148 Cal. 35, 82 Pac. 367, cited by appellant, sustaining its claim that the evidence in this case showed an assumption by plaintiff of the danger of injury by a fall of the bank. In the case cited the danger of a fall of rock from the face of the quarry was as obvious to the employé as to the employer, and it was not claimed there that the defendant had not taken proper precaution to prevent the rock from falling. In the case here, danger from the fall of the bank was not only not known or obvious to the plaintiff, but its dangerous condition was known to the defendant, and no precautions were taken by it to prevent its fall after discovery of the conditions. In the case cited, under the evidence, the rule of assumption of risk was properly applied. It is inapplicable here as the facts show that the dangerous condition was solely known to the defendant, and, this being true, it was its absolute duty to have protected the plaintiff against the danger by removing it.

Complaint is made of various instructions to the jury. The court read to the jury some of the subdivisions of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which that section provides are to be given to a jury "on all proper occasions." Appellant complains particularly of the giving of that subdivision which declares "that, if weaker or less satisfactory evidence is offered when it appears that stronger or more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust." This instruction, like some others contained in the Code section referred to, has been criticised by this court as being an intrusion on the province of the jury to exclusively determine the weight and effect to be given to the evidence in any case presented to them, and the giving of it is particularly deprecated in criminal cases. People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407. In that case the advisability of not giving it at all in criminal cases is suggested. A similar suggestion is applicable to civil cases. As formulated in the Code subdivision, the instruction is but a mere commonplace rule which an intelligent jury will recognize, and apply when the evidence in the case calls for its application, without any suggestion by the court on the subject. This, however, furnishes no reason why the giving of it should be held harmless whenever the existence of a proper occasion for giving it is questioned, any more than it should be held error always to give it because it may be an invasion of the province of the jury. Like other instructions in a case, error in giving it cannot be insisted on unless it appears to have been prejudicial to the party complaining of it. Nothing of the kind appears here. The jury were told that they were to view with distrust the offer of weaker or less satisfactory evidence when it appeared that stronger or more satisfactory evidence was "within the power of the party" to produce. It was shown in evidence by the defendant, in connection with the testimony of the foreman on the matter of warning the plaintiff and the four others, that defendant had endeavored to obtain the presence of these four men as witnesses but could not find them. Hence the evidence showed that the conditions under which the jury, on the theory of the appellant, might have applied the instruction so as to distrust the testimony of the foreman about the warning, did not arise in the case. It did not appear that it was within the power of the defendant to produce these other witnesses; but, on the contrary, it actually appeared that it was not in defendant's power to do so.

The court instructed the jury that: "It is the duty of the master to give warning to an inexperienced servant of unusual and hidden dangers of which the master is aware, and of which the servant to the master's knowledge is ignorant. Therefore, if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff herein was inexperienced as a pitman, and the defendant was aware of the dangerous condition of the bank, and knew of plaintiff's inexperience, it was defendant's duty to warn plaintiff of such dangerous bank." There is no question but that the general principle of law was correctly given in this instruction; but it is claimed that it was inapplicable because there was no evidence that plaintiff was inexperienced about the dangers to be apprehended in the work to which he was assigned, or, if he was, that the defendant had any knowledge of it. Whether this is true or not we do not consider of any importance. Under the unquestioned evidence in the case, the instruction was more favorable to the defendant than it was to the plaintiff, as the right of the plaintiff to recover should not have been limited, under the evidence in the case, upon the fact whether he was experienced or inexperienced in the work. While it is the duty of the master to inform an inexperienced servant of any danger to be apprehended in conducting a particular employment in which he is engaged, and of which the master has knowledge, but which may not be known or understood by the servant, his paramount duty to his servant, whether inexperienced or experienced, is to use due care and diligence to keep the place of employment in safe condition so that such servants may not be exposed to unusual and unreasonable risks. A servant who has had experience in an employment, and has notice and knowledge of the dangers incident to the ordinary course of the work, and who undertakes the employment or continues to perform it with the knowledge, assumes the risk of injury. But the fact that a servant is experienced, or that an inexperienced servant has notice of perils ordinarily incident to the employment, does not relieve the master of the duty to protect both from risks which are not natural and ordinary incidents to the conduct of the business, and which could have been removed by the exercise of due diligence. The evidence in the case at bar shows that danger of the fall of the bluff was not an ordinary peril of the employment, nor as obvious to the employé as to his employer. On the contrary, it was one unknown to the plaintiff and known as a fact to the defendant. It was an imminent danger when discovered and could readily have been removed, and it was the affirmative duty of the defendant to have done so and not leave it to imperil the men below, and it owed this absolute duty to the plaintiff whether he was an experienced or inexperienced employé. So that the plaintiff having a right to recover under the evidence, whether an experienced or an inexperienced employé, the limitation on his right to do so under this particular instruction, only if the jury found that he was inexperienced, and had not been warned of the danger, cannot be complained of by defendant, as the instruction was not prejudicial to it, but, on the contrary, to the plaintiff.

The appellant attacks several other instructions given by the court; but we do not feel called upon to review them particularly. While parts of some of them may be subject to criticism, when taken separately, still, taking the instructions as a whole, as the jury necessarily did, they correctly stated the law applicable to the evidence in the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(159 Cal. 37)

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. HANNON et al.

(L. A. 2,497.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1910. Rehearing Denied Jan. 26, 1911.)

1. DEEDS (§ 38*)—VALIDITY—SUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION.

A deed is not to be held void for uncertainty, if by any reasonable construction it can be made available, and unless it is apparent from its face that the intent of the grantor as to the property conveyed is so uncertain that it is incapable of being made certain by resort to extraneous facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 100*)—VALIDITY—SUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION.

Where there is no patent ambiguity appearing on the face of a deed, but the description of the land as lying between two lines of railroad and from their junction at a certain depot to a specified avenue tends to create an uncertainty because of the existence of two junctions of the railroad and because there is no junction at the immediate point stated, the grantor's intent may be sought for by consideration of the facts surrounding the parties when the instrument was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 192*)—PRESUMPTIONS—INTENT OF GRANTOR IN DEED.

It is to be presumed from the making of a deed that the grantor intended to convey some property by it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 114*)—CONSTRUCTION—PREMISES CONVEYED—"AT."

A deed conveyed a strip of land on either side of the center line of a railroad commencing at a specified point and running in an easterly direction to a point where the G. cut-off line diverges from the old railroad, running thence easterly along the center line of both lines of railroad to their intersection with the easterly line of the Rancho San Pascuals, and also all the land lying between the two lines of railway from their junction at Garvanza depot to Pasadena avenue, where such avenue lies between such railway lines. There were two junctions of the cut-off and the main line; the easterly one being at the intersection of the easterly line of the Rancho San Pascuals, and the other being a considerable distance west of the depot mentioned, but much nearer to it than the easterly junction, and situated in the territory known as Garvanza, while the easterly junction was situated in another territory. Held, that in view of the fact that the westerly junction was in the same territory as the Garvanza depot and nearer to it, and that the easterly junction was referred to, in the deed immediately previous to the reference to the junction as "Garvanza depot," as the "intersection near the easterly line of the Rancho San Pascuals," and the fact that the word "at," when applied to a place, is not definitely locative, but primarily expresses the relation of presence, nearness in place, or time or direction toward, the description of the land lying between the two lines of railway from their junction at "Garvanza depot," etc., will be deemed to refer to the westerly junction of the railway line and to convey the land bounded by the triangle formed by the two lines of railway west of Pasadena avenue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 114.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 593-599; vol. 8, p. 7585.]

5. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF—OWNER OF EQUITABLE TITLE.

An action to quiet title cannot be maintained by the holder of an equitable title against one holding the legal title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

6. DEEDS (§ 111*) — CONSTRUCTION — ESTATES CONVEYED—EQUITABLE ESTATES.

G. contracted with R. and another to sell them certain property and to convey it to them or to such persons as they might request, and that on receipt of the price specified that he would convey to R. and the other whatever balance might remain after deducting lots conveyed by G. under the contract. R. deeded to

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

